A Case of Worldly Wisdom

By EFFIE D. GARDNER

When Miss Mabel Willmarth wrote her lover Edward Auchinklos that under her parents' orders she must break with him he was very badly cut up. He did not blame Mabel; she was not much over seventeen years old—certainly not an age at which a girl is warranted in marrying counter to the express wishes of her parents.

Auchinklos was permitted to call upon Miss Willmarth to say goodby, after which he was expected to refrain from visits or communication. He found her as much averse to breaking with him as he was to breaking with her, but he also found her resolute in her determination to obey her mother.

"Father and mother," she said, "have only me. If I marry you in opposition to their commands a barrier will be raised between them and me that will never be removed. Besides, mother has convinced me that couples usually grow together, irrespective of any attachments for others either husband or wife may have had before marriage. We must make the best of the present for the sake of the future. You will marry another girl and I will be married to you. I suppose I shall—"

"Forgetting!"

"I don't know. It doesn't seem to me now that I can."

"What you have said has, of course, come from your mother. It is too wise to be spoken by a girl of seventeen. But I confess that it is wise, or seems to be, and I would not for the world persuade you to do an unwise thing. One thing I wish you to tell me: Has not your mother some one in view for you who she thinks will be able to give you more than I?"

"Why do you ask that question?"

"Because until very recently both she and your father seemed to be satisfied with me for a son-in-law."

"Mother especially endeared me to say nothing to you about any future relations between me and any one else. She says that, having broken with you, you are not supposed to take any further interest in me. Surely you can not be expected to approve of any man that she—I mean I—might marry."

"Burst assis—that is, if your sentence had been finished as you began it. You should have finished that she might object. Nevertheless it is evident that some one has been selected for you, and naturally I am especially anxious to know who the fellow is."

"The fellow?"

"Well, the gentleman."

He tried for an hour to induce her to tell him the name of her new fiance, but, having promised her mother that she would answer no questions with regard to her future, she stood firm. Finally he asked her if he should write a number of names on a bit of paper to tell him whether the name he wished to know was on the list. Since the man was a newcomer and she did not believe Auchinklos had ever seen or heard of him, she consented. He wrote twenty names on the paper and handed it to her. She handed it back to him with a request to be released from her agreement. Auchinklos relented her and immediately took his departure.

Several weeks rolled around, and Miss Willmarth saw nothing of her discarded lover. She did not even meet him on the street. This was surprising because the town in which they lived was small. More weeks passed with like result. His place was not supplied by the new suitor, because Mr. and Mrs. Willmarth had decided that he might not pay their daughter any attention whatever till she had passed her eighteenth birthday. Then the couple might be engaged, but for a year before marriage. Such an arrangement prevented any one from linking the two names together.

Four months passed between the time Auchinklos was discarded and Mabel's eighteenth birthday. The latter had passed and the engagement had been made, though not announced, when the new applicant was arrested one day on a charge of driving a check on a bank where he had no account. Other charges against him followed the first, and it was not long before a pretty black record came to light. The engagement between him and Mabel was broken without any eye outside the family knowing that it had occurred.

Then one day Auchinklos appeared at the Willmarth home and was restored to favor.

"You remember," he asked, "our conversation when I was dismissed about a natural prejudice on my part as to the one who would take my place? Well, that prejudice served a purpose. It was I who nourished your new lover."

"You? Why, you didn't know his name."

"I did. His name was the only name on the paper I handed you that was not fictitious. I had heard of him several years before and had not heard any good of him. I went away and spent weeks tracing his record, and finally put those he had swindled on his track."

"You don't mean it!"

"But for me you might have married a swindler."

All of which goes to show that our worldly wisdom doesn't count for much.

Skipper Wringe's Career.

Captain Robert Wringe, who seemed likely to command Sir Thomas Lipton's challenger, Shamrock IV., when she races for the America's cup a year hence, gained first hand knowledge of the American coast conditions when he was skipper of the Mission for August Belmont in 1900. He also added to his knowledge of the Atlantic coast currents, tides and winds as skipper of the challenge sloop Shamrock II., when he sailed that craft for Sir Thomas Lipton in the international races in 1903. He was in an advisory capacity aboard the Shamrock I.

Fortune Hunting Girls

By HELEN CONSTABLE

Marjorie Tait, a miss in short dresses, was sitting by a table studying her lessons when she heard her mother and a visitor, Mrs. Winston, talking in the next room.

"Malcolm writes me that he's coming down for a week this fall to visit me."

"What can your nephew find to amuse him in such a quiet place as this? There are no young men, and as for girls, there are only a few in short dresses."

"That's what he's coming for—to get rid of the girls. They are worrying the life out of the poor fellow trying to marry him. You know, Malcolm has just come into a fortune of four or five hundred thousand dollars. He's handsome as a picture, was voted the most popular man in his class while in college and is highly intellectual."

Marjorie gasped at this catalogue of attractions.

"Dear me," exclaimed Mrs. Tait, "how I should worry about him if he were my son! The marrying age is the most dangerous of all to a man."

"By and by you'll have to worry about Marjorie."

"Not for years. Marjorie has scarcely put away her dolls. Tell Malcolm when he arrives to come and see us."

When Malcolm Wright came to town he called at Mrs. Tait's. Mrs. Tait was taking a siesta, and it required some time for her to awaken and get herself in proper condition to receive visitors. Marjorie, who examined the card as it was carried past her in the upper hall, ran down a back staircase, seated herself before her study table and began to repeat her lessons aloud.

"Amo, I love; amas, thou loveest; amat, he loves; amamus, we love; amatis, you love; amant, they love."

Mr. Wright, hearing the Latin verb "to love" conjugated by a soft feminine voice, arose from his chair and looked into the other room through the open door. He saw a very pretty, innocent looking schoolgirl sitting before her books, apparently unconscious of being observed. He listened for a more self drilling, then gave an "ahem!"

Marjorie gave a start so well feigned that the young man did not doubt for a moment that it was caused by her reading him.

"Oh, dear!" she exclaimed.

"Well, now, I like that! I find you saying 'I love, you love, we love,' and on seeing me you exclaim, 'Oh, dear!' I presume if you had finished it would have been, 'Oh, dear Malcolm Wright!'"

"I assure you—I—I was studying. You were quiet. How long have you been in the drawing room?"

"Long enough to have sent my card to Mrs. Tait, your mother, and keep waiting several minutes."

At this point Mrs. Tait was heard coming downstairs, and Mr. Wright, who had barely crossed the threshold stepped back in time to find good opening to have left the room. The ladies received him cordially, regretting that she had not sons or daughters of an age to help make his stay pleasant.

A day or two later Mr. Wright approaching Mrs. Tait's home saw her minus from the horse. Marjorie with him on an upper window. He mounted the steps and rang. Marjorie opened the door.

"Good morning. Is your mother at home? No? How unlucky! Perhaps you will permit me to come in for a moment. I wish to leave a message for her."

A bench passed. Mr. Wright remained away from the many girls who were trying to snare him. The routine was the same, and before long he called, and whenever he was sure Mrs. Tait was not at home he called and asked for her and was taken in charge by Marjorie. One evening he called when he knew the mother was at home.

"Why, Mr. Wright," the good lady exclaimed, "you here yet? What a deed you must have of the girls of your home to have kept away from them so long!"

"It is about a girl of your home that I have called to speak to you."

"A girl of my home?"

"Yes, your daughter, Miss Marjorie. I wish your permission to pay my addresses to her, or, rather, your permission that we be engaged."

Mrs. Tait gaped at Mr. Wright.

"I love her very dearly, and she loves—"

"What, that child?"

"She tells me she is nearly eighteen."

"But how, when, where?"

"I heard all you and Malcolm's sweet talk about those horrid girls who were trying to catch him for his fortune, and I thought it a pity that they should deprive us of a man. He heard me conjugating the verb to love when he called on you, and somehow it affected his brain, for—"

Mr. Wright took Marjorie away from her mother and, placing his own arm about her, the two pleaded their cause together."

"Oh, it's all right!" said the other lady. "Only I can't make out how you two managed to do the courting."

"I managed it, mamma. I did it for Malcolm. Your think of his being driven from his home by those horrid fortune hunting girls."

BAFFLED THE BEAR

TALE OF AN ALL NIGHT SIEGE.

An Ugly Visitor That Gave Herself a Warm Reception in a Settler's Cabin. A Quick Retreat by the Inmates and Display of Presence of Mind.

The first English settlers to [illegible] Johnson, Mr. and Mrs. John Strong and Zadoc Everest. Early in the fall of 1770 Strong and Everest had to go to Albany for provisions, and their women folks worried, but for some reason Molly Strong felt uneasy after her husband had gone. She had her work got in a good supply of fuel and felt fairly secure.

When they came back to the cabin the baby was crying for the supper. Mrs. Strong gave him a cup of warm milk and set him down in front of a pumpkin pie that had been keeping the kettle of sugar from the fire when she moved it there. Looking round, she saw the bear had arrived for a dessert. Molly Strong knew that she was a "mighty courageous woman," she said as she got up the ladder. "Climb the ladder, Sal, and stave up the door, Johnny, and you, Frank—hurry, hurry!"

When the others were safe in the loft Mrs. Strong followed, with the baby and the ladder after her. She lost no time in the hole, and then she and the children set down and waited. The door of the loft was made of rough boards roughly together, but not fastened. It was dangerous to open it.

Peering down through the pole floor, they listened and watched for the bear to come in. They could hear he walking round the house, and once they saw his head through the chinks in the window hole. Finally she came to the door and, after listening anxiously at the fire, walked in. Two cubs followed her. The old bear presently smelt the pie and, just due to the cubs, and the cubs began to lap it up amazingly.

"Get a taste of that myself," Mrs. Strong thought.

"Do, mamma!" Johnny replied. "I'm awful hungry."

Next the bear found the pudding kettle and took a mouthful of the boiling sugar, coming back with a cry of pain and rage, she broke the pot into a thousand pieces, and then she had a fresh look at her prey, and then she had bacon to the rind, disgust of her mouth. The cubs sat and watched her in grave wonder.

Presently she had enough for the children, who lured her to the door. Instantly the bear gave a loud roar and rushed toward the door, but with the ladder across it. Mrs. Strong never hurried outside, but she was quite prompt, quick. Now, get another. Punch her if she tries to climb up. Be careful. Don't fall down."

The baby, awakened by the noise, began to wail, and Mrs. Strong quieted him with one hand, while with the other she kept the door standing off the bear. The little girl clung crying to her mother's skirts, but the boys took a long pole and poked the bear through the rungs of the ladder. The women folks had slipped off toward the door, she pulled down the blanket and tore it into shreds; then she went out, followed by her cubs.

"Shoo, good!" Johnny said. "Do you think she's coming back, mother?"

"I expect she will, son, but we can manage to get rid of her, I guess."

"I won't go to sleep," groaned Johnny. "I'm too hungry."

Nevertheless the silent wait in the dingy loaded loft made them all drowsy, and before the bear returned Mrs. Strong knew by their heavy breathing that the children were asleep. It was near midnight when the bear came in and renewed her efforts to reach the loft. Mrs. Strong encouraged her sharply with her pole and there was a row that roused the boys to their feet.

Johnny was only half awake. Johnnie ran across the loft. His foot slipped into a gap between the poles, and as he fell another pole opened apart. Down he went into the room with the bear and the cubs. The bear did not see him fall, but she faced about at the noise and started toward him.

Quick as a flash Mrs. Strong brought her pole down on the nearest cub and landed it fair in the door. The bear turned to rescue her squealing offspring and Frank drew his brother up into the loft unharmed.

No history is herself could have outdone the bear's courage like the attack on her cub, and although she had ample time to hold on and out of the cabin, she made no further attempt to reach the cub. As it grew light, Mrs. Strong, watching through the chinks in the wall, saw her lead her cub into the cover of the woods.

Soon as she thought it safe she lowered the ladder and the family came down. There was no more of the bear, and when Mr. Strong came home he made the cabin secure with a door made of two inch boards and hung on wooden hinges.—Youth's Companion.

FAKED PAINTINGS.

SHARP TRICKS OF THE TRADE.

Specialists Who Are Real Artists In Showing An Inferior Picture Under Panel Deception and an Ingenious Swindling Scheme That Failed.

In addition to a considerable mass of shortcut information concerning methods employed in producing pictorial works of art, M. Maximilien Vanthier's "Technique of Painting" presents many and very interesting matter concerning devices of imitation picture fabrics. "Iroquois" as the French art world calls it, "is a specialist, a very skillful forgery that have in recent years reinforced extra means the professional, the amateur, the connoisseur, and, last but not least, the collector."

Many of these tricks require great skill and knowledge combined. In addition, it is useful to the frauds to become numerous and to be of the best class.

If an old canvas can be found and there are many thousands in Europe, the production of a Titian or Corregio or Vanthier is easy. The worthless old picture is painted over or cleaned off and the latest masterpiece appears with a new canvas face on which a fine forgery has been painted.

Varnish tinted with bitumen gives appearance of age; thorny pears, when steeped in water and lampblack are used to imitate the dirt of time. There are special tools for the effect, and scorching designed to emphasize age by contrast, and to shadowness and crises, those latter, who call themselves nonpainters.

They know the manner of each great painter, the way he signed his picture and the place and date of each. Sometimes the name is commonly connected under a layer of dirt or paint, so that the barter of this particular "old master" may have the pleasure of discovering it for himself.

The author gives the names of several painters who did a really good wealth in multiplying for foreign markets the Hoppenas Dinas, Corots, Dunkingers and Courbets and the like. Without which no name of history is deemed complete.

Unlimited success for 4 years established a well-known cabinet maker for the former main stamp, a place, into taken of authenticity, wonderful the clever forger makes the dingy suggested picture a finished composition, which carries on its face the sublime "certificate of genuineness."

Still more adroit is the trick played after the Fromentin sale, where one of those sit-in-place behind the unknown "Arab Horseman" painted on a wooden panel. "The panel was covered upwards of years ago by the forger a genuine Fromentin Without the new stamp and a black panel bearing the sale stamp Based, 180 "genius" Arab Fromentin and for apart, with no way at hand to disprove the imitation.

Sometimes it is pointed out the society of the trick employed works to even defect, as in the case of a Flemish painter who made a rare and pleasing to a French collector. He offered to send it to the buyers hotel and asked him to write his name and address on the back of the panel in order to remove an omen. This he did, but then the collector changed his mind and returned the picture, despite the dealer's protestations.

When the traveler got home he took the picture out of its frame to clean it. He found that he had brought away two pictures. The first, which he had bought, concealed a copy, on the back of which he had signed his address.

This was almost perfect reality, if the collector had had the picture sent to his hotel he would have received the copy. If he had protested that it was not the picture he bought he would have been shown his own signature on the back of the copy.

The German government prohibits the exportation of native art works except by permission and in very small lots. But the collectors and the owners of art fully pictures find no difficulty in evading this. They order copies, put them in place of the originals and secretly send the original pictures out of the country. Thus a genuine old Italian master is one of the easiest things to acquire in the room of high priced art.

Plenty of For Animals.

"Do not believe all you read about the extinction of the animals." writes a statistician to a Paris paper. "With the exception of a few small, cloth-hide and American type, the animals are no less numerous than they were ten or fifty years ago, when the prepared pelts were popular for entire garments, were used for trimming purposes. The skin prices are caused by the increased demand. The fur bearing animals will not be exterminated because the fashion changes. While, and animal, temporarily popular, to bring hunted the other has time to recuperate. Nature helps in this way. The overhunted animal instinctively abandons its habitat, often seeking refuge where the hunter cannot follow."

A Great Medical Triumph.

The report that Dr. Nagelvil of the Rockefeller Institute For Medical Research has at last discovered the germ of rabies is of world-wide interest. It marks one more triumph of the immortalizing institution founded by the generosity of a great American captain of industry. Professor Metchnikoff calls the discovery "a large main stone of bacteriological history." If the Japanese pathologist has solved the problem that has baffled scientists his name will live in history. The horrible sufferings of the victims of rabies make this one of the most thankful of all diseases.—Lancet.

CARRANZA ASKS PRESIDENT'S AID

Officially Requests Right to Import Arms Freely.

WOULD SOLVE PROBLEM.

Mexican Rebel Leader Transmits Statement to United States Government Through Dr. H. A. Tupper of the International Peace Forum—Capture Julio Madero's Mission.

In exceeding the Mexican Committee thanks the right to import arms freely from the United States President Wilson can readily solve the problems that now confront the government in that country.

Such at least is the substance of an official statement from General Venustiano Carranza, head of the rebel army, just transmitted to the government authorities at Washington by Dr. Henry Allen Tupper of the international peace forum.

The struggle in Mexico will continue until one side or the other is hopelessly exhausted, the statement asserts. It further declares that the Constitutionalists are confident of aiding on Huerta and his partisans in a short time if the embargo on arms is lifted.

The statement which follows closely on the heels of the arrival in Washington of Captain Julio Madero, an officer of General Carranza's staff, is regarded as important in official circles, if not even more to be the letter by which Huerta may be jolted from his overconfidence. Madero's mission, in the opinion of many who are in close touch with developments across the Rio Grande

Captain Julio Madero, who is a nephew of President I. Madero, the late president of Mexico, is cooperating with Roberto V. Pesqueira in presenting to Secretary of State Bryan a statement of the purposes of the Mexican Constitutionalists, and of the policies that will be pursued by them in event they succeed in overthrowing the dictatorship of General Huerta.

Captain Madero, who was educated in the United States, accompanied General Carranza on his 3,000 mile tour of inspection through the northern states starting from Piedras Negras and passing through Coahuila, Durango, Chihuahua, Sinaloa and Sonora to Hermosillo.

Fifty Thousand Men Under Arms.

"During our tour," said Captain Madero soon after his arrival in Washington, "we inspected no fewer than 30 garrisons in arms. We estimate that the Constitutionalist force in the northern states—that is, men actually armed and in the field—is upward of 50,000 men. It is needless to give you an idea of twice-the size is opportunity to obtain arms.

"The forces now in the field in the northern states are composed of men of Huerta government and aggregate at most twenty men. We are constantly receiving requests for commissions. We are constantly receiving requests for commissions. We are constantly receiving requests for commissions

NEW YEARS IN MANY LANDS

WHERE does New Year's come? Much more than in any of the little people whose facile ways become familiar to us on our tours, indeed, from a national point of view, this season is the greatest occasion of the year.

Elaborate preparations are made long in advance. Houses are cleaned inside and out. Doorways are decorated with rice tapes and form leaves and evergreen. Every housewife buys a pot or two of "prosperous age plant," a miniature pine tree, some bamboo, and some plum twigs, to win for her home by ornaments like these the favor of the jealous deities that guard the future.

The city streets resound with the mallet blows of the gongs pounders making mochi, the Japanese equivalent of plum pudding. All debts are paid. New clothes are bought. There are toys for the children, and picture cards that bring good fortune, and are good to drop in on when, tied securely to the wooden pillow.

O, happy New Year! Day by day hardly dawn before each town and village will be stirring. There is so much to do in celebration. First there will come the ceremonial breakfast when the heads of all the family must be drunk in that rice wine called "sake." Then visits must be paid to all acquaintances. Father will wear no more the threadbare cotton, tattooed and peculiar. I'ts now the frock coat now, of European manufacture, but mother in her quaint kimono and elaborate head dress, will look just as she has looked on New Year's day since time immemorial.

The children will be decked out in gorgeous colors; they will throng the streets, clattering along in their wooden clogs in pieces tired but joyful haste, and shouting "Banzai!" to friends and foreigners. In the streets clowns will perform strange antics, and exclaiming loudly meanwhile.

"Hai, hai, ye gods of heaven and earth! Beneficent omens are in the air, and the universe is full of lucky signs."

To accompaniment of flute and drum, two legged lions will give the "lion dance" in masque. Strange masqueraders will dart hither and thither through streets and temple gardens.

It will be a happy time for Japanese children. For three glad days every little girl will expect to play her favorite game of shuttlecock and battledore. The boys will fly their brand new kites. The children will play games with bright colored balls, chanting countless rhymes. Grown people will play New Year's card games. The Shogun will give acrobatic exhibitions on their ladders. Every nook and corner of Japan will be in gala dress and gala mood.

Northern France is not far behind Japan in appreciation of the significance of the New Year. There Christmas so important on our calendar, is scarcely celebrated, except by attendance at mid night mass and by a festal supper. But the last night of the year, the "Vieil et St. Silvestre," falls for observance. And the first day of the new year, "le jour de l'an," or "le jour d'etrenes," is dedicated to the renewal of friendship and to general gift giving.

So universal, in fact, has the custom become of giving presents and pretty little souvenirs that the expression "bonne etrenes" means good fortune and "mal etrenes" misfortune. Candy and flowers are acceptable gifts in France, but there is only one real rule in the matter—a New Year's gift must not be useful.

In most Scotch households, as in France, New Year's day takes the place of Christmas, and evidence of ancient sympathy when both countries regarded England as a mutual enemy. On the last night of the year, in rural district, groups of men and boys go dignified from house to house singing various songs, such as the lines:

Dinna think that we are beggars;
We are laddies come to play
Rise up and give us hogmanay.

When they have received the cakes and coins they expect they go on to a next place, first however having chalked the house, in token of good luck. Next morning all the children get up early and view with wide and interested eyes the blessed by the priest and sprinkled with holy water by the acolyte who follows him, in order that that this, the sole wealth of the countryside, may increase and prosper during the year to come.

The sight of the holy host is wonderful. As the church bell tolls above them the frightened animals bleat and bellow and try madly to escape. First the corn are blessed, then the cows and the sheep and lambs, and finally the goats and pigs.

Throughout Europe many delightful customs prevail. In Holland, as in Scotland, the wind is noted with care, because the luck of the year will be determined by the direction it blows. The south wind brings heat and fertility, the west wind rain and fish, the north wind cold and storm, and east wind a fruitful season.

In Italy the New Year is a day of greeting and good will and special feasting. Sicilian peasants take advantage of the fete to drive town to their gay carts, so that the country roads are merry with the music of tinkling bells.

And Swiss folk practical industrious stop their work for the noons and visit friends, even when they have to carry their babies down the steep fain slopes in cradles on their heads.

Bulgaria's heart history is of especial moment just now. On happy New Year's day in Bulgarian villages the small boys run from house to house waving branches of the corral tree and shouting greetings as they tap all they meet with the luck bringing branches.

Bulgarian girls go through an interesting ceremony in an effort to pry into the secrets of the future day. Each girl takes a piece, obtained by lot, gourds a kettle full of water, in which boil coins and rings, and then dipping finger into some personal trinkets. Till dawn she watches.

Then to an open place in the center of the village she takes the gourd, now covered with a cloth, a dancing singing crowd following her. As she reaches the appointed place she commences a speech, proclaims successive fortunes. He cries:

The queen of the festival dips her hand into the kettle and brings forth a ring, and the owner receives it from her secure in the belief that good luck awaits her matrimonially before another New Year.

GETTING BACK.

"Why do you insist on trying to sell me beef steak and beans and buckwheat cakes?" demanded the hashed. "Why, you did I wanted was two fried eggs."

"Well, I got your shop yesterday," retorted the restaurant man. "All I wanted was a shave, but you bulldozed me into a shampoo, a foam fire and a hair cut."

A SAD AWAKENING.

"Warden, where are my flowers? Give me those flowers."

"Those flowers are for an embalmer in the next cell."

"Flowers for an embalmer, with a murderer in the same jail! A life of crime is not what I was led to expect."

NOT DIFFICULT.

"I wish I could do something startling," said Gladys Gloom, sick unto death with ennui.

"Well, Gladys, that is easily accomplished," said her close friend Sylla Flapper. "Go back to that little old-fashioned town where you were born and smoke a cigarette on the public square."

SCOTS DEMOCRATIC

Much More So Than English Brother Across Border.

Study Self-Assertion of the Edinburgh Cabby in Marked Contrast to His Kin in London—Are Skilled in Many Trades.

Edinburgh. — One has only to cross the English border going northward to realise that Scotland is a far more democratic country than England. Who knows but why a land that venerates an old and proud aristocracy should have among its common people a sturdy democratic self-respect? Perhaps Scottish democracy owes something to the land's having lacked for more than three centuries a resident king, and much of that time also it was a trading and thinking peasantry. The Scotch were stubbornly true to the Stuart cause, but perhaps if Delft ian from the throne Scotland's presidents would have found fewer friends to aid them in their rash invasions. Robert Burns, also, has long been a strong democratic influence in Scotland, as by far the greatest British poet of unmixed peasant blood.

Whatever the causes that lie behind the peculiar spirit of the Scotch commons, the American traveler who is sympathetic with democracy finds it in the strength as soon as he sets foot within the country. There is a look in the eyes of the Scotch workmen, skilled or unskilled, that is not commonly seen in his English brother. It is not, perhaps, for the greater poverty of the rural districts, but rather because the Scotch country, with its simple and homely comfort for all and its rich fields of grain and grass, its far horizons and fantastic hills walled and sentinelled by mountains, is of a well-peopled country and a well-housed population. In spite of the poverty entirely that is in the lowlands of Scotland, the country is manifestly not so rewarding to the toiler of the farmer as England. It rolls further south. Many of the farmsteads are stone, with slate roofs and unadorned with flowers, while the larger fields indicate a sparser population. The hills, beautiful though they are, take on a bleak aspect beneath clouded skies and country folks are less comfortably clad than those of rural England.

Within one reaches Edinburgh the cities impression is confirmed of a people less materially well of, but more sturdily self-assertive than those of England. Your cabby of Edinburgh is more a man and brother and less a servant than one of London, though the

In the Cowgate, Edinburgh.

London cabbies are still a race to themselves, and far more at ease in the presence of their "betters" than most others of the English working classes. And in Edinburgh a cabman was a doctoral creature he is! He is not uncommon to meet in New York or Philadelphia and ask no odds of the best of them. He is, in fact, through all grades of Scottish working life, clever, self-reliance, independent, ready to adapt himself to the needs of the public, such as waiters, hotel clerks, seem to be in Scotchmen. The Scotch seem to be especially skilled in certain trades. They are excellent masons, for example, and for many years they have come back and forth between Scotland and New York plying their trade at the high American wages when business is brisk during spring, summer and fall, and returning to winter at home. They catch the American pace more quickly than most. Immigrants and their have the physical strength to handle American tools, sometimes that the southern European skilled mechanic does not always have, with the result that he becomes impatient himself in the land of his adoption refused to the ranks of the unskilled laborer.

BIRD SLAUGHTER IS STILL ON

London—The destruction of the money and other beautiful birds continues to be the black blot on the nature of the London plume sales prove. Or carry feathers, 11,000 ounces are sold, and the fear that this bird is being gradually exterminated in the British possessions. The same may be said of the crowned pigeons, parrots and macaws, kingfishers and white cranes. In fact, Africa is being ransacked by the Plume hunters, who recklessly kill the birds that destroy the tsetse and other dangerous flies. The trade with Paris in these goods still continues, and it is cheap as law forbidding the exportation of the feathers of birds of paradise. The London market is open to the plume trade.

DAY OF THE YOUNG MAN

BECOMING IMPORTANT FACTOR IN WESTERN MICHIGAN.

Many Teaching Agriculture and Working in the Fields and Orchard Directing Operations—Better Farmers for the Future.

The young man is becoming an important factor in the development of western Michigan. This is proven when we note that here and there scattered all over the territory are young men who are doing the actual work of hurrying forward the development of the natural resources. Some of these men are working in educational institutions, teaching the fundamental principles of scientific agriculture and horticulture, others working in the orchards and fields directing the actual work, others busy preparing the advertising matter which is a vital feature in the campaign, and still others are engaged in exhibits in the cities and at points of interest.

Among these young men may be mentioned H. B. Brown of Newaygo, who in a way is a pioneer. He was the first teacher of agriculture in the Traverse City high school and he was the first in western Michigan to give a course in agriculture. Since Mr. Brown organized the first class, which was three years ago, eight western Michigan high schools have introduced the subject, and in

Besides the bank and orchard work he lectures to Granges and schools. His lecture entitled "Reasons for Remaining in Michigan" is illustrated with lantern slides. He tells of the opportunities for the young people of this region. He cares but little regarding the place of meeting, or the organization that furnishes the crowd, if he only has an opportunity to preach the gospel of development.

He really is doing the work of a federal county agent, except that he is working over several counties and that he is getting his financial return from the organizations and institutions directly interested in the development of the natural resources. A Region that is Rapidly Developing as a Fruit Growing and General Farming Section

RASPBERRIES ARE IMPORTANT CROPS.

The raspberry crop is one of the important crops for Benzie county. This is particularly true for fruit growers in the vicinity of Frankfort. The shipping facilities from that point are good, the markets are good, and fruit growers on the outskirts of the city have from one to ten acres set to raspberries. The above picture is a view of the C. E. Collier farm. The berries are growing in hedge rows and are bringing in a good income while the above views are growing in hedge rows. The picture of the above picture of the above pictured patch during the 1913 season was in the neighborhood of 100 crates a day. From 30 to 40 pickers were kept busy among the bushes. They were paid 1½ cents a pint box. The 1913 raspberry crop at Frankfort amounted to 48,000 cases and the net receipts have been estimated at $72,000.

IS BIGGEST ORCHARD TRACT

Great Orchard in Charlevoix County Was Laid Out Under Direction of Professor Taft.

The largest orchanting proposition in Charlevoix county goes under the name of the Eveline Farms. The several tracts making up the farms contain about eighty-five hundred acres. There is a twenty-acre cherry orchard in the Eveline farm, and apple trees, all grown promise of a record-breaking crop.

These trees are expected to yield a crate of cherries to a tree, some of the trees being five inches in diameter and ten feet across the top. The cherries were unaffected by frost this year, and they promise to yield a crop that will pay interest on the valuation of about $500 per acre.

Of the fruit trees which comprise the Eveline farm, there are no fewer than dozens of all kinds. Each tree is carefully cared for, by the best scientific knowledge.

The farms have been laid out under the direction of Professor Taft of the Michigan agricultural college. Professor Taft is also directing the care of the orchards.

HELP WOMEN ON THE FARM

Grand Traverse Grange Trying to Help Secretary of Agriculture Solve the Problem.

The Grand Traverse grange is trying to help the secretary of the federal department of agriculture. A short time since the secretary decided to make inquiries regarding what the department can do for the women on the farm. The grangers in order to help him got the matter into shape, and addressed the question at their last meeting. After discussing the question, discussing the need of labor saving machinery in the farm home, the question was passed to the secretary that he use his department to devise some way whereby the farmers can get larger incomes that they may install power plants and have the conveniences of the electric lights, power washing machines and other conveniences, such as vacuum sweepers, etc. The sisters also thought that the farmers' incomes should be increased sufficiently to enable them to go to the women folks to go shopping with.

Care of Trees.

There is hardly any question but that there is as much in the care of the trees after planting as in the selection before. The best trees will not stand against neglect, while poor trees will respond readily to good treatment.

Get a Silo.

Has your farm a silo? If not, you had better estimate yourself more economically their great value in the dairying business.

Best Ration.

The best ration in the cow that has variety as well as the necessary things in it. You can imagine a ration with a few foods but if you use a large variety you will usually crave the appetite of your cow to eat more, and that means that she will give more milk if she is a real milk-giving cow.

Hen House Sweetener.

Freshly made whitewash is a great sweetener for poultry houses.

BOTH GOOD AND BAD MEANING

Innumerable Superstitions Connected from Time Immemorial With Wild Creatures.

There are very many superstitions connected with wild creatures. In the case of a lion, it is believed that the wearing of a claw of the animal will bring great strength.

People connected with circuses and shows have a strong belief that lions get restless and uneasy, either if luck or carousing had weaken in the camp and that when they continually wait for a fresh feed but if one case they likely to have fits of ill-temper in the near future.

Nonetheless are the superstitions associated with the tiger. The natives of India believe that its whiskers are a deadly poison, and that when freshly chipped and correctly put into a person's food they will assuredly cause death. Yet it is known as the "tiger grip" is greatly dreaded in India, and they even go so far as to shave claws of tigers round the necks of their children.

To see a wolf is supposed to be a good sign, but if a man sees a wolf before the wolf sees him, he will become dumb for the time or lose his voice.

For a hare to run across anyone's path is considered a very bad sign in some parts of England, because in olden times it was believed that witches used to transform themselves into hares in order to bring bad luck to their enemies.

Keep Bath Water Hot.

The usual objection to hot baths is that the better takes cold unless he has the water hot. Of course, he has cured himself. Otherwise, so they say, he would talk with "their" Taylor about old times in the gold mines, or on the high trestles of Dakota and Idaho, above the comprehension of a woman.

Still the nurse came I was with my patient always, and slept in the same room. Nothing was said, but I felt and saw that pretty uniform—Nurse Pancoast—was a good deal of a lady, and a colorless creature, yet supported by routine as by a corset, and informed with a sense of duty, would be shocked thoroughly. He said that the patient, being a sailor, was carrying some shipshape and liveand fashion. Nurse and I were to have two hours on and four off, with two dog or half watches, which meant that one would be on duty, giving to the middle watch by turns.

We relieved at midnight or at four a. m. I would put on my fur for a little growl outdoors. To leave the house when it was forty degrees below zero, tell use the phrase I use on the high mountains, is an entirely different of reward.

Once I went out on such an excursion I traversed the dining-hall, entered the dark barroom, and passed into the inner door which gave upon the porch. But this time I could not push the door open. Something resisted, something outside thrusting at the panels, something alive. I felt back against the bar, imagining horrors, bogies, bogies, anything while I listened, afraid to breathe.

It was then I heard a voice, a girlish voice outside in the Arctic cold, chanting a stagong recitation as though at school:

"Brunt, Bruce; Huron, Deaconite; Chatham, Cayuga; Guelph—not Guelph—, what comes after Cayuga?"

Feeble hands battered against the door. "Teacher! Teacher!"

But when I opened the door, the girl stepped back afraid.

"You're not the teacher," she said; "oh, tell me before she comes. Sixty six counties and the towns have all got mixed."

"Come in and let me tell you."

"I dares!! I dares!! You're not the teacher. This is not the school. You'll take me back!"

She turned, trying to run away, but her legs seemed wooden, and she fell about as though she were wearing clogs.

"I won't," she screamed, "I won't go back!" Then she fell.

"Dear child, you shan't go back. But still she shrank from me. "Oh, leave me alone!" she pleaded.

"Maya! I give you some tea!"

"You won't take me back to Spite House!"

"Not to that dreadful place."

"Do you keep girls, too?"

"There only a nurse, and a poor dying man."

"And you'll hear me the countess of Ontario?"

"Crazy, you dear."

"I'll come then," but as she tried to get up, "It's cramp," she moaned.

"Dear child, you're freezing."

"I'm not cold, it's cramp."

She must have fallen through the snow which covered our stairhole, for she was literally housed in her up to the breasts.

Finding I had not strength to carry poised Milly, and then the Chinaman, who was curled up in his kitchen, gave her brandy, and laid her, dressed as she was in Captain Taylor's bath. Then while Milly rode hard for a doctor, nurse and I filled the bath with boiling water, which for eight hours we kept renewed with the they, a retired minister, wasted his narrow means in trying to raise the dead, and Chinaman, who had a wife, Mother was dead, and nine small children to feed and clothe, to pay for school secrecy at church and school, so that they should not be ashamed among the neighbors.

Then Uncle John found an advertisement in a newspaper, a governess was wanted for four children somewhere in British Columbia. The wages were so generous that there would be enough to spare for helping father.

It meant so much of proper food, and good warm clothing for the younger children. So references were exchanged with Mr. Brooks, who wrote most charming letters, and Uncle John lent money for the journey. My little sweetheart, Polly, was so very sorry over that loan, which must be repaid by instalments.

Mr. Brooks met Jenny at Ashcroft, and took her by sleigh nearly a hundred miles, getting more and more familiar and horrid until, in a state of wild fear of him, she ran for safety into a strange plot at Spite House. The waitresses were rude and cruel, Polly lay drunk on the floor. There were no children.

After I learned from Mr. Eure that I was a prejudiced witness, without a shred of evidence, that no court would accept the word of a dying girl's confession would not be allowed in court except it were made under oath before a magistrate. Poor Jenny would never have told any man what happened at Spite House; she would not have given the last name or address of her life to vengeance; and so there was no case against either Brooks or Polly in a crime which had carried them penal servitude.

Vengeance? I think our prayers together did more good, and when the time came for Jenny's removal to a kind of life soaked in carbolic oil, she was prepared to face the coming pain.

"Shall I die?" she asked. I could only kiss her.

"Then," she said, "even if it isn't true, tell papa I died game."

She was Canadian, and there is valor in that blood.

Before she was moved, Doctor Saunderson, of Chilcotin, had taken charge, and above we lacked petroleum enough for a bath approved what we had done. He used opiates, but the pain, after a frostbite a thawed, is that which follows burning. On the third day came exhaustion—and release.

I was obliged to give evidence at the inquest, and my profession has taught me quietness, restraint, simplicity. The coroner might talk law, but I was dealing with men. It was my business to make them cry. There was no case against Brooks, but from that time onward visitors to Spite House were treated as lepers until they left the country.

For the rest, I would not be present either at the funeral or at the public meeting, or see the press man who came up from Ashcroft or discuss the matter with any of my neighbors.

The theme was too distasteful to my woman with risks to decency. These things are not discussed. And even if through misfortune my relationship with Jenny become a common scandal, at least I need not share the ignominious blame.

Were there any funds to promote black pines and mosquitoes as an attraction to millionaires? Brooks is the only land divided that foolish scheme, sufficient to complete the ruin of a poor wretched woman, before he abandoned her interests to seek his fortune. Was it true? I went straight to Captain Taylor.

"Yes, Kate," he chuckled, "the murders and all, just. You don't ever actually prosperous, and my retired pay is a drop in my bucket of debts. And then our good friend Polly invested all her wealth in buying up the mortgage on this ranch.

"But why?"

"For fun. For the pleasure of turning me out. She kindly granted me permission to stop in that old barrel which used to belong to my fox. But then you see I really couldn't be under any obligations to the lady."

"Did you pay off the mortgage?"

"Of course, I did. Polly strums ragtime tunes on my piano, Brooks wears my navy Victoria frock coat, they serve their beans and bacon with my family plate, the gentlemen sports my crest, the lady has my dear mother's diamonds which are really mine. My dear, they're county society—you really must call and leave cards."

"But the portraits?"

"They stared at me so rudely that I burnt them. Another could not remember they're dead, and they'd rather be burned too, than be claimed as Polly's aunts."

"And the Star Packington?"

"A half-interest, my dear, a half interest, that's all."

"So you're in partnership?"

"Why, no. Fact is, old Pete has been working thirty years for me, the faithful eyes shining behind that hair—it's silver now, eh? Well, I couldn't leave him in the lurch. And there's the Hudson's Bay to consider, with forts on north depositories and for supplies. And I suppose, when I come to think of it, I'm responsible for Polly's sake, in my sentimental way. I made a deed by which she can, if she marries, or, rather, a half-interest, while Polly is sleeping partner with no right to interference.

"You've told Pete?"

"No. I suppose I've got to own up."

"You don't want Pete to be cheated by his partner."

I found and read the deed.

"You've read it, of course," I said.

"It was read to me by the lawyer chap. Isn't it all right?"

I looked at the names of the witnesses. Cuthbert McTavish and Lou Jones, the worst characters in our district. The document read in the blind. This had been no doubt devised by Pete. The deed actually signed was a Polly and owner of the famous jack-trade. My friend had been cheated.

TOAD GOOD FRIEND OF MAN

Ill-Favored Creature Has Been Misunderstood and Is Now Beginning to Be Appreciated.

Few well-meaning creatures have been more thoroughly misunderstood than the homely, unattractive and retiring toad.

Formerly the toad was considered a venomous reptile, but in our day its habits have been more carefully studied and its great value to the pomologist and gardener has been fully established on account of its propensity for destroying insects.

Nature, therefore, cultivate the friendship and assistance of the insectivorous reptiles, including the striped snake, as well as that of the birds.

Every tiny housewife detests the cockroach, mice and other vermin. Yet many of these domesticated foods would keep the count clear of those pests. Should the toad more desirable than a cat, as they are wholly free from treacherous, as the rights of toads do that cat. The toad is possessed of a timid and retiring nature, loving dark corners and shady places, and under kind treatment becomes quite tame.

Mice—instances might be cited of pet toads remaining several years in a family and doing most valuable service with no other compensation than that of immunity from persecution.

In European toads are carried in the cities to market and are purchased by the horticulturist, who by their aid is enabled to keep in check the multiplication of the insect tribes which very upon their fruits, flowers, etc.

TOO STRONG FOR UTTERANCE

Irascible Old Salt Had Many Things He Would Like to Declare, but Not at That Time.

Mrs. Van Alen Thompson, whose entry into the country gave her much difficulty with the customs officials, was recounting her experiences to a few friends in Boston. She said:

"I was very much annoyed, but not the least unpleasant part was the attitude of the customs officials. I home they don't intend to be as rude as they appear to the returning travelers.

"But," continued Mrs. Thompson, philosophically, "perhaps it would be difficult, as the popular as a customs inspector. Every body feels towards them like the old salmer.

"This skipper, after undergoing several hours of suspicious cross-questioning from two inspectors regarding his cargo, was at last allowed to land. He was over, of course, official unaware of his precious grilling, accosted him.

"Have you anything to declare sir?" he demanded sharply.

"Parrots on the old skipper glared at the young man and shouted:

"Yes, young man, I've a good deal to declare, but I'd be ashamed to say it before a body like you. I'd be ashamed to tell you to your face what I would like to declare!"

How One Pastor Built Church.

Last winter one of the strong pastors in Memphis, Tenn., Rev. W. H. Shefter of Memphis, Tenn., realized that a new church was needed. After considering all sides of the question he wrote to the editor of the Methodist Christian Herald. So he consulted his official board, placed before them the proposition and asked to be released. His board being made up of men who had been no doubt desiring that their pastor had tried for years to build a new church, required of him to hold the resignation in abeyance for a week, which he did. He preached his best sermon, built a new site for a church and paid $2,000 on the church debt. He then at the following Sunday that they would build a church and that they would pay their pastor would cement to remain with them. The congregation was stunned and then sold to his church: "I will stay with you if you will subscribe $10,000 for a new church at once." They took him at his word, and at the next meeting $14,000 was given for a new building. It goes without saying that the church is very happy over his decision to stay with them.

Now They Don't Speak.

A. E. MASON'S BIG STORE.

Local and Personal Notes.

Yet very little snow, and reasonably moderate weather.

Pritchard's Players all this week at the Majestic.

Mrs. R. F. Sloan and son leave today for Chattanooga to visit relatives.

C. E. Dragoo, of Camargo, Ill., is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Fred. L. Hammett.

Fred H. Clarke left Friday on a business trip to Chicago and southern Michigan.

J. J. Hallett, who has been in Ottawa, Ohio, for several months, is home again.

Miss Ruby Robinson, teacher at Atwood, spent the week end with Rev. Quinton walker and family.

L. N. McLean, an old Charlevoix resident now making his home in Flint, is here with relatives and friends.

E. W. Bennett, formerly of this place, but who removed to Alabama six years ago, is here visiting relatives.

Read the new ads of C. Danto & Son, Charlevoix State Savings Bank, S. Orlowski & Son, A. L. Hart & Son.

Mr. and Mrs. Will Knight, of Ranks, with their daughter Isabel, were New Year guests of Fred H. Clarke and wife.

On account of a business engagement J. Leahy, the optometrist, cannot be here Jan. 12, but will be here later in the month.

A Grand Rapids paper has a "rock and bull" story from Charlevoix that the Chicago Club people had bought the lake. There is nothing to it.

The Rock Product Co. is still shipping from six to eight cars of lime per week and is contracting for kiln wood, of which 10,000 cords will be required this year.

F. M. Glassford has the contract to build an ice house for the Coal & Wood Co. at the foot of Pine street, lake, near the company coal shed. It is to be 40x80. Work begins today.

The concert in the M. E. church Saturday night was the finest rendered from the cluster of the ages. Every number was dreamy sweet and restful as heart like a rare day in June.

A. L. Hart & Son, agents for the celebrated Ford automobiles, have an advertisement in this issue. The Ford car always "speaks for itself," and its interests in this section are in good hands.

It was an inspiring sight at the station Monday morning when the Charlevoix contingent of young students and teachers took the train for their various posts of labor. There was business in vast bounds.

The tug Margaret McGann came over from Beaver Island Monday with about twenty passengers, most of whom were mere trip passengers. She is expected again this week, weather permitting, and twice a week as long as the lake remains navigable.

Judge Mayne, W. E. Hampton and Mrs. Isdinger, with their families, have jointly secured the north side residence of A. F. Bridge for the remainder of the winter and through the spring months. Miss Emma Bennett is the presiding lady of the house.

Virgil P. Pritchard's Select Players have the Majestic stage on this week to good house. This company is justifying all that has been said of them. It is indeed composed of "select" players, and the public so far is well pleased.

Dr. Reuben Peterson, professor in the medical department at the U. of M., will give his lecture on "The Rights of Unborn Child," Thursday, April 9th, in the high school building, instead of in January as previously announced. Dr. Peterson's lecture will be under the auspices of the Y. and T. association.

The Order of Moose had a banquet at their hall Tuesday night.

Chas. Lavinson & Co. have a three-column special announcement this week.

Chas. Burroughs, formerly of this city, but now residing in Saginaw, is here visiting friends.

Dr. A. M. Wilkerson has purchased through the A. L. Hart agency a new model 1914 Ford touring car.

Miss Clare Finucan, who spent the holidays here, returned Saturday to Battle Creek, where she is teaching.

A big lot of those handy kitchen kifs are yet left for our paid up subscribers. Come in and see them. The handiest thing you ever had in the kitchen.

Mrs. Thos. Shawley has been quite ill at her Park avenue home the past week, and Mr. Shawley, who has been very ill for several weeks, is not quite feeble.

A number of Charlevoix Masons went to Petoskey Monday to participate in the Masonic ceremonies of laying the corner stone of the new government building.

News comes from St. James that James C. Gallagher died Tuesday night, deceased was 71 years of age, and was one of the best known of the pioneer residents of the island.

Dr. George W. Crouter, accompanied by his wife and son, left for Seattle, Dr. Crouter, who has been very ill for more than a year, was thought to be improving when he left.

It is announced from Detroit that the P. M. railroad will at once decrease the number of employes on the system about 20 per cent to keep pace with the falling off of traffic on its main line.

Former governor Osborn has been harpooning whales off the coast of Africa. What was that man he doing next? But just think what he missed by refusing to be a second term candidate for governor.

Hanter Relief Corps No. 173 will hold installation Thursday, Jan. 8, 1914, at I. O. O. F. Hall. A banquet will be given at 6:00 p. m. to which all soldiers and wives, also all husbands and their wives that belong to Women's Relief Corps, are most cordially invited.

Last week Nat Burns, farmer and surryman of Marion, sold his farm to Mrs. Jack Connor, of this city. At the same time his dairy business was sold to Wm. Withers, of the same township. In the farm deal Mr. Burns acquires the Connor home, on Mason street, and will move to the city.

Patrick O'Hara was brought over from St. James, Monday, by deputy sheriff Hosly, charged with being an insane person, and it was a good case of alcoholic mania. O'Hara came from Beaver Island last May, and has managed to keep a good jag on board ever since. As he belongs at Manistique, Judge Connell has sent the insane judge at Escanaba to send for his man and pay the costs. O'Hara was committed to the state hospital at Traverse City Tuesday at the expense of Delta county.

Some time ago Rev. Dr. Brown, the well-known secretary of foreign missions, made this statement: "There is a brewery in Jerusalem; there is a distillery on Mt. Lebanon; there are American saloons in Damascus. It is the church's deadliest enemy. It is the tyrant shop of infidelity. It is the hotbed of anarchism; it is the inexorable enemy of both church and home. If possible, the saloon would make its seat in the Bethlehem manger; it would open a barroom on Mt. Calvary. It would establish its tents on the Hill of Zion itself."

The Bureau

The year 1913, which is practically the fifth in the history of the Western Michigan Development Bureau, has been a very exceptional and active one from a development standpoint. Much of the work that was started during the early years of the Bureau, has sufficiently developed to show results, and the Western Michigan country is rapidly becoming the influential and prosperous section that it was intended it should be. The Development Bureau since it began work in February of 1908, has put on 12 big exhibits and two apple shows. These exhibits and apple shows have been for the purpose of educating the Western Michigan people, and their neighbors in the surrounding states, that the rolling lands of Western Michigan produce farm and orchard products of superior merit, and in few places can the agricultural industry be pursued with greater satisfaction than here.

Besides the big exhibits, there have been more than a score of smaller shows.

During the past five years, the Bureau has put out three issues of its illustrated magazine, "Western Michigan," with a total circulation of 450,000. It now has the fourth edition of the magazine in press. During the same time 50 special folders have been issued, with a total circulation of 150,000. During the year 1913 it issued 11 special bulletins with a circulation of over 32,000 hire been distributed. In addition many thousands of leaflets and folders printed by various organizations have been sent out.

There have been better than 40 illustrated lectures in the past year. Some of these in Western Michigan in behalf of higher standards of agriculture and some in outside territory for the purpose of advertising this region as a desirable one in which to live.

Alfalfa campaigns have been conducted in eight of the 20 counties and 40 clubs formed. Many road meetings have also been held and agricultural talks given orchard demonstrations.

During the Bureau's five years' of life, it has collected over 2,000 photographs and 700 lantern slides. It now has 500 original cuts in its loaning collection. The correspondence has been so vast, that 71 folders have been installed to take care of the more important correspondents.

This vast amount of activity has been carried on with less than $75,000 of actual money, which is a showing that is most creditable.

Governor at Calumet

Gov. Ferris arrived at Calumet Monday night and is at work sitting out the truth in the strike trouble.

Meantime the tension between the Federation and the mine owners is as taut as ever.

County Normal Notes.

(LUNA BRIGHLY.)

Everyone except Gladys Johnson was back at work Monday morning.

Rhoda Cliff visited the Three Bell school, where her sister Nahyn is teaching. She had a program in which Rhoda assisted her.

Bertie Howe visited the Mary school during her vacation, where Tom Scroggie is teaching.

Ethyl Jacobs spent her vacation in Petoskey.

Joe Cisar is taking up the discussion of the farm and farm animals in agriculture.

Rhoda Cliff is substituting in the seventh grade during the absence of Miss Lamoreaux, who is ill with the measles.

PONDEROUS SEA ELEPHANTS.

They Have Two Foot Trunks and Flippers Tipped With Claws.

This fish is believed to be the biggest of sea elephants known to exist. It is to found at Guadalupe Island, off the west coast of Mexico. In the book there are now only about thirty specimens.

The sea elephant is an important fish in the chain of evolution and is the forerunner of all the coarse-haired animals. The adult male is about twenty-two feet in length and is about eight feet high when propped up on the four flippers in a natural position. These great seals weigh from two to three tons and have a trunk, or proboscis, which when inflated, hangs down over the mouth about two feet. In the end of the proboscis are placed nostrils sideways, and when they breathe the whole mass throbs in tiny undulations to the very end.

The flippers are black and tipped with hooky claws. There is a fin almost one foot and a half long, divided necessarily in two divisions. This fall acts as a propeller, to resist the force exerted when he evades in through the breakers. He holds his back flippers and tell so as to enter the surf sideways, and then gives himself to be washed up on the beach.

Coarse, bristly hair grows sparsely from the back, along the body, and a touch protecting crest of flesh reaches like a shield from the lower jaw down over the chest and wound to the back of the neck. This bristle affords a natural provision for protection against rivals. The male fights vigorously in the mating season, and the chest protector prevents much loss of life.

Sea elephants live on various kinds of small fish and use the trunk to seize them with. Afterward the food is transferred to the mouth precisely as elephants manage it.

The S S S.

The regular winter sessions of the Shiffler Shipmasters' Society have been delayed in opening this winter owing to circumstances over which the Founder had no control.

The president, Capt. Billy Thistle, has but recently returned from a long sojourn in Canada and Capt. Pete Campbell has been in Manistee since he laid up the Beaver. These two skippers have caused very much trouble in the Society in the past by personal differences that the Founder has valiantly endeavored to harmonize. Notwithstanding this fact, under proper restraint, which the Founder has faithfully endeavored to exercise, they have been very helpful in disseminating the principles which the Society stands for—sometimes.

As is well known to our readers, the Society was founded for the moral betterment of that class of mariners who are usually last right of in the ordinary missionary work—the masters and pilots. Most people have commonly believed that all the members of the calling was confined to the common senior. It remained for the Founder to discover that this was not true. He discovered that Charlevoix was an excellent field for humanitarian effort among the skippers. The Founder congratulates himself that there is a very noticeable improvement in the conduct of the members.

As soon as Capt. Pete returns we hope to call a meeting of the Society, when the winter's work will be mapped out, and last year's tobacco bill adjusted and paid out. Capt. Geo. Weaver writes the Founder resigning the chairmanship of the standing committee on the purchase of commissary supplies—just because Capt. Pete referred to him as a grafter.

Charlevoix, in our opinion, possesses one adaptibility that is superior to all others, and that is for marine construction and repair, within the limit of medium tonnage.

The harbor should have a marine railway or a system of lifting boxes. It is most surprising that a more has not long ago been made in this direction. There is no port in the bay or straits region so admirably situated for an industry of this kind. In a small way much work of this kind is done now, but every consideration encourages a large marine business. Tugs, yachts and fishboats are all that are now embraced in the industry, and these always constitute a delicacy not to be despised, but why should we be content with this?

Every local condition favors an enterprise of this kind.

High Masonic Appointment

Petoskey received an unusual honor Monday, says the Petoskey News, when one of her well-known citizens was appointed to a position of honor and trust in the Grand Lodge Free and Accepted Masons of Michigan. H. Burr Lee, well-known resident here for years and one of the active Masons of the local lodge, was Monday afternoon appointed Grand Lodge representative from the Grand Lodge of Michigan to the Grand Lodge of Prince Edward Island of Canada, by Grand Master Perrett, of Detroit, who with other Grand Lodge officers were in the city for the laying of the postoffice corner stone.

The position is one of high honor in Masonry and is the highest in the gift of the grand master. The appointment came as a complete surprise to Mr. Lee and to the members of the various Masonic orders in Petoskey. Mr. Lee will take the place of Richard Rowland, of Detroit, recently deceased, and is made a life member of the Grand Lodge of Michigan.

For years Mr. Lee has been active in Masonic work and one of the leaders in Petoskey, and the appointment comes as a reward for his years of effort. He will officially accept the position at a big Masonic meeting to be held in this city in the spring.

"Buy Your Tickets at Home"

Every dollar paid in "fares" on the train deprives the agent of just that credit for the passenger business it gives the railroad company, and lessens its chances of realization when occasion calls for improvement in railway accommodations.

Spend your money at the ticket office, where it will be recorded to the credit of the agent and help give this city its proper standing as a railroad center. Help boost Charlevoix, and at the same time assist the conductor in getting his train to your destination on time by purchasing your ticket before you board the train.

THE INITIATIVE

Two Initiatory Petitions Already Started for Eight Hour Work Day In Michigan.

Two initiatory petitions which will be circulated through the state, the first since the initiative amendment to the state constitution became effective, were started from Kalamazoo, last week by Secretary Waterman, of the Michigan Federation of Labor.

The first petition provides for an amendment to the state constitution giving the legislature power to enact laws to regulate the hours and working conditions of men.

The second is for a state law to establish the eight hour working day with a maximum limit for the week of 48 hours for any person employed in any manufacturing, mechanical, mining or mercantile establishment, laundry, barber shop, hotel, restaurant, telegraph or telephone office, or employed by any express or transportation company, or by any common carrier.

The state law to establish the 8 hour working day provides a fine of $50 to $200, or a jail sentence of from five to thirty days, or both, for each violation.

The form of the petitions has been approved by the attorney general, and the petitions will be circulated by labor unions throughout the state.

This Makes Charlevoix Laugh

Just to illustrate what a little gossip will do we print the following from the Traverse City Record-Eagle. The basis upon which the article rests was a foolish lie which we saw in a local Rapids paper from Charlevoix by an amateur correspondent, whose only authority was gossip:

"Report says that the Pere Marquette is going to sell the line at Charlevoix to a Chicago syndicate and will probably look to other fields in the resort country to which they will divert the traffic. This is brought up the old idea of making Traverse City the center of the resort business in this part of the state. While the company owned the Charlevoix heavily it was to their interest to divert as much traffic in that direction as they could and the plan has been followed out for years with success. Now that they are no longer particularly interested in the village it stands to reason that they will be in a position to listen to a proposal from Traverse City looking to the establishment of a permanent resort here. Local advantages are far better than those that are offered at Charlevoix and it would be an easy matter to get the business if Traverse City had a number hotels of sufficient size to accommodate summer business and located at some point that is of easy access to the city.

The reasoning displayed by the Traverse City editor parallels the stupidity of the Charlevoix correspondent. However, while the waters of Lake Michigan wash these fair shores, our Traverse City approach the same limits of the summer resort excellence with which nature has endowed Charlevoix.

Selling the line, if it were true, would simply be recorded as a business transaction, with no effect whatever upon the business for which it was built. It is one of the most magnificent summer hotel properties in Michigan, and possesses natural attractions that Traverse City does not possess, and never will. The idea that the Pere Marquette "diverting" the summer travel from Charlevoix is merely drivel. It cannot be diverted any more than the waters of Pine Lake can be diverted from their natural course.

Where the Money Goes

Few people in Michigan seem to know just what becomes of the money received by the county from brokers or the laws who satisfy justice by a money consideration rather than serving time in jails. The fines go into the county library fund and the money is distributed to the townships and then to those school districts which have voted to establish libraries.

The apportionment of this fund is made according to the number of children on the census lists in the various townships and districts, the lists being furnished the county and township officers by the superintendent of public instruction. After the county clerk finds out the amount per capita in the county treasury, he notifies the township clerks of the total amount of library money, the amount per capita and the amount to be drawn by that township. The township clerk then apportions this amount among those districts which have voted to establish libraries, according to the list of pupils sent him by the superintendent and notifies the director of each district of the amount.

In cases of fractional districts, library money like the primary, is apportioned directly to the district through the township in which the schoolhouse is located.

REWARD ROAD

Highway Commissioner Rogers Announces Big Increase During Past Year

State Highway Commissioner Frank F. Rogers announced that there is a total of 2,264 miles of state reward roads in Michigan. At the close of the fiscal year, June 30, 1913, 1,704 miles of roads had been built on which $1,164,677 of state reward money had been paid, or an average reward of $683 a mile. He said:

"Between July 1, 1913, and December 1, 1913, the last date on which our books were balanced, there had been built 56 miles of ordinary reward roads and 5 miles of trunk line roads. Since December 1, 79 miles of ordinary roads have been accepted and six miles of trunk line road, making a grand total of 2,264 miles of state reward roads in Michigan on January 1, 1914. Owing to the shortage of funds in the state treasury ordinary rewards were paid only on 286 miles, and on seven miles of trunk line roads; the remaining roads will receive their state bounty as early in 1914 as state funds are available."

Tidings From the East

Saturday we received a package by mail. It was a newspaper, and on the wrapper was a postage stamp the like of which we never saw before.

The paper was from Singapore, and written upon one corner was the monogram "C. S. O." which, being translated, means Chase S. Osborn. The paper was printed in English, but that would make no difference to Chase.

Whether it be "in Java or Samar, Honolulu, Port Said or Zanzibar," indeed wherever in Timbuctoo or Fort Jesup, we would, with the true newspaper instinct with which he was endowed many years ago, call upon the editor, using the language of the country that is honored by his presence.

The last the Charlevoix soldier heard concerning his former commander-in-chief he was spearing whales off the coast of Africa, in which strenuous diversion he had bagged two big specimens and was on the trail of another. Two to one he got the whale—being something a whale himself, in the way of the American adaption of the term.

As to whether or not the governor was going or coming when he sent that paper we do not know. That is something that we never yet found out, as to whether Osborn was going or coming; but it always followed that there was something doing when he got there or arrived here.

It is about time for that boy to come back home. Michigan gave him so much extended leave of absence, considering that Roosevelt is in South America. The U. S. A. has a decided lot to stand board with both these savants painting great big red blotches on the world's map of civilization.

But wherever the lure of the sea or the jungle leads our C. S. O. "the U. S. A." is present in effulgent character, representing the best there is in American manhood, American gentlemanhood and American newspaper audacity.

GAIN SHOWN IN BANK RESOURCES

BANKING COMMISSIONER KOULTY MAKES HIS ANNUAL REPORT TO GOVERNOR.

BIG INCREASE IN CAPITAL

During the Past Year Thirty-Six New Institutions Were Organized in the State of Wisconsin.

Madison.—Reporting to Governor McGovern in the annual report of his statehood, Commissioner of Banking Oliver P. Kroll says the stability of the state banking system has been maintained the last year, as is evidenced by the growth in total bank resources. The increase is especially noteworthy in view of the fact that the financial world was subjected to a considerable money tightening during the year.

The aggregate capital employed in the 632 financial institutions under the department's supervision is $[illegible]. On a basis of $1,122,[illegible] for the year, and the total resources are now $2[illegible]. Thirty-six new banks were organized during the year.

Many banking legislation is reviewed, and the suggestion is made that a law be passed forbidding banking corporations being formed by other corporations owning stock in such banks and another to make it unlawful for one bank to loan to another by the payment of deposit method, which permits carrying western bank certificates in wealth of the intent of the Wisconsin laws.

Date of Meeting Changed.

The annual meeting of county highway commissioners and county engineers in state highway building in Madison, Wisconsin, when the assembly chamber of the state capitol on February 3 to 7 inclusive, instead of February 10 to 14 as first announced. The meeting was called by the state highway commissioner, John A. Hazelwood of that body will preside over the gathering.

The program, which has not yet been arranged, will consist of addresses and discussions on the subject of road building. Owing to the large appropriations made by the state legislature and county and town boards for highway construction, it is expected that about 2,000 miles of road will be built in the state during 1915.

Appoints by Regents.

At a meeting of the board of regents of the university of Wisconsin, appointments for the ensuing terms were made.

The resignation of George Peirce, assistant in pharmacology and toxicology, was accepted to be effective January 1. A. C. Colle was appointed assistant in pharmacology and toxicology beginning January 1 for the balance of the term. Dr. Ernst Geldsch was appointed assistant in chemistry December 1 for the balance of the term.

W. D. Stovall was appointed bacteriologist in the state laboratory of hygiene. A. J. Richardson, C. P. A. was appointed special lecturer in commerce. H. R. Prosser was appointed assistant in forestry December 24, appointment to end with the winter course for forest rangers.

River Falls Man Is Named.

Governor McGovern has appointed Warren F. Bonner of River Falls to be district attorney of Pierce county to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of George Thompson of Ellsworth, who several days ago was appointed judge of the district. Judge W. H. Hedna of Hudson, resigned, the appointment of Judge Kinney Knowles takes effect on the first Monday in January. Mr. Bonner is a former appointee of W. Bamer of River Falls as a member of the state board of normal school regents to succeed Judge Thompson, resigned, for the term ending the first Monday in February, 1914.

Lowers Officers' Rank.

To restore the Wisconsin National Guard to full strength with circular No. 5 of the war department orders have been issued by the adjutant general, changing the rank of Lieutenant Colonel Sabanne, H. M. McCoy and C. E. Sessman to major. To accomplish this these officers will be retired and be reappointed with lower rank.

Instead of being known as surgeon with Major Sessman, Major McCoy will be designated as chief surgeon, to the future.

Must Wait Until Spring for Profits.

Growers and buyers in the state of Wisconsin are now working in accord to bring the 1913 tobacco crop into proper condition for handling.

The prices paid during the rush campaign were exceptionally high, but the climatic conditions have been against the handling of the middle and late crops and in consequence the majority of the growers will be forced to wait until early spring until they receive their pay for the crops.

Dealers are receiving the early crops, which have been fairly well cured and in shape for handling, but the medium and late crops are still too wet for handling successfully. Warehouse dealers state that this year's crop will be one of the hardest to handle in years, and that it will be a poor market who cannot make good to 12 a week. The leaves are even in size and easily handled. The trouble is the weakness of the American Cigar company and the American Tobacco company are not the sorters must use and weed to the requirements.

Midwinter Grain Show.

More than $1,000 in cash and special prizes will be awarded for the best exhibits of grain and forage plants shown at the twelfth annual meeting of the Wisconsin Agricultural Experiment association, to be held at Madison from January 8 to 10, 1914. The fact that the rules of the association have been amended to admit grain raised on any farm in the state instead of limiting entries to members alone as heretofore, will mean a much larger exhibition and more general state-wide interest in the dissemination of better yielding grain.

The samples of seed grain and forage plants taken to the exhibition, with the exception of clover seed, will, according to regulation, become the property of the association and will either be sold at auction or retained for experimental purposes.

Those samples that are given first place in their respective classes, however, will be entered in the world's competition at the national corn and grain show, Dallas, Tex., and the prize will receive whatever awards are taken there in addition to his winnings at the state exposition.

Another important feature of the show will be the competitive displays by the different county orders of the experiment association. These will consist of exhibits of both shelled and threshed grains and forage plants.

The exercises Friday, January 9, morning, afternoon and night, will be held in the pavilion of agricultural hall. Addresses will be given by officers and members of the association, representatives of the staff of the college of agriculture and notable exponents of larger, better and more profitable crops. One of the speakers from outside the state is M. L. Bowman, editor of Farm Magazine, Waterloo, Ia., and a former staff member of the Iowa College of Agriculture.

Officers of the Wisconsin Agricultural Experiment association are: F. Houseel, Eden, president; William Legwold, Jefferson, vice president; E. A. Moore, Madison, secretary; J. J. Garland, Madison, assistant secretary; Julius E. Nelson, treasurer.

Y. M. C. A. Workers Plan Meeting.

Plans for the thirty-eighth annual convention of the Wisconsin Y. M. C. A. workers, members, officers and workers, to be held in Racine, February 27, 28 and March 1, are being made in the state office.

According to State Secretary Anderson this convention will be composed of more than 300 men from all parts of the state. C. K. Ober, George Merrill and E. T. Collos, New York international secretaries, will attend and make addresses. Among the other speakers will be Dr. Charles R. Davis president of the Chicago Theological seminary, who will talk on "The Principles and Practice of Personal Christian Work," and L. F. Loree, president of the Delaware, who will address the convention at the banquet on the evening of February 28.

For the first time Sauk county will be represented at a state Young Men's Christian association convention. A county association is being organized there now, and by the time for the day meeting, it is expected that the association will be in shape to send representatives to the convention. Sauk is the fifth county in Wisconsin to organize this form.

New School Plan for Militia.

At the conference at Madison which was attended by the heads of the different departments, the colonels of the regiments and their adjutants plans for changes in next summer's program in the Wisconsin National guard were taken up for discussion.

One of the radical changes in the school which will probably be adopted, the coming year, will be to hold a school for noncommissioned officers instead of commissioned officers at Camp Douglas, the appropriation preventing both schools being held and the sentiment appeared to be against the school of commissioned officers were entitled to the school.

Movie Men Talk Shop at Meeting.

The second annual convention of the Wisconsin Moving Picture Men, held in Oshkosh, that there was a good moving picture business in the state.

John J. Ely, first vice-president of the organization, and Noel Homan, secretary-treasurer, in addresses for the statement that the average cost of investment in the theaters is $10,000, so the owners of the houses have spent all the way from $500 to $10,000 in erecting the building and amusement. They

Jones and Rachel M. Jones. The Hacine Pattern Works, Racine, capital $10,000, incorporators, Samuel Hacine, Joseph C. Hamata and William H. Armstrong. The H. F. Roehrig Furniture company, capital $[illegible], incorporators, H. F. Roehrig, Warner Vanetta and Albert Vandewall.

STORES FAIL IN EAST

SIX ENTERPRISES IN WHICH HENRY SIEGEL IS INTERESTED INVOLVED.

FORTUNE TO THE RESCUE

Siegel, Cooper & Co. of Chicago Not Affected in Any Way, But Is Declared Prosperous—Christmas Business Held Responsible.

New York, Jan. 2—Six enterprises controlled by the Siegel Stores corporation in this city and in Boston were forced into bankruptcy on Tuesday by friendly proceedings in the United States courts.

The concerns did an annual gross business estimated at $40,000,000, but it is understood that their Christmas business did not come up to expectations and they found themselves hard pressed by curtailment of banking credit. The failure had been discounted in the financial district and had no effect on the stock market.

The companies for which receivers were named are:

Henry Siegel department store, New York.

Henry Siegel company, Boston, a department store.

Henry Siegel & Co., bankers, New York.

Henry Siegel & Co., wholesalers, New York.

Merchants' Express company, New York.

The Greenhut-Siegel-Cooper company of this city is not allied with the chain of stores in trouble and was in no way involved. Siegel, Cooper & Co. of Chicago, although its stock is controlled by the Siegel Stores corporation, likewise is not affected. On the other hand its business is declared to be in a highly prosperous condition.

The banking business was conducted in connection with the Fourteenth street store in this city, but the amount of deposits or the number of depositors was not made known. Counsel announced, however, that Henry Siegel and Frank E. Vogel, president and treasurer of the stores, had pledged $[illegible] in stock in the Siegel Stores corporation toward the depositors protection. The bank will proceed to liquidate.

Efforts will be made to reorganize the chain of stores as soon as possible. Meanwhile the business will be conducted by the receivers.

The Siegel Stores corporation, which has brought the action against the Greenwich-Crawford company, the Fourteenth Street store, the Merchants' Express company, Henry Siegel and Frank E. Vogel, doing a wholesale and banking business, is the successor of Henry Siegel & Co., acquired all of the properties indicated, as well as the entire stock of Siegel, Cooper & Co., of Chicago and the Simpson Realty company, a New York corporation, the capital stock of the Siegel Stores corporation is $7,[illegible] common and $2,000,000 preferred. The officers are: Henry Siegel, president; F. E. Vogel, vice president and treasurer; Robert J. McMeekin, secretary; directors, Henry Siegel, F. E. Vogel, Paul Rau, R. Butler, Joseph Hasch, W. J. Maloney and Isaac Kohn.

WILSON ORDERS LIND TO U. S.

Fast Vessel to Vera Cruz for Envoy, Who Will Confer With Executive at Pass Christian, Miss.

Washington, Jan. 2—President Wilson on Tuesday ordered the navy department to send the fastest cruiser in the navy, the Chester, to Gulfport, having on board John Lind, the president's special envoy to Mexico. The Chester is expected to arrive in Gulfport 72 hours. Officials in Washington, who are aware of this latest order of the president, believe certainly say the presence of Mr. Lind in conference with the president means that Mr. Lind will be reached in Mexican affairs.

Pass Christian, Miss., Jan. 2—After 24 hours of double bombardment Ottosen is still held by the federals.

Schmidt Jury Is Discharged.

New York, Jan. 2—The jury which held in its hands the fate of Hans Schmidt, who has been on trial for the murder of Anna Aumuller, after deliberating for more than thirty-two hours, was discharged on Tuesday by Judge Foster after Lawrence Ottinger, the foreman, had informed the court that the 12 men were unable to agree upon a verdict. When the jury was discharged they stood ten for conviction of murder in the first degree.

NINE PERISH IN GALE

TERRIFIC STORM SWEEPS THE NEW JERSEY COAST.

Seabright, N. J., Dec. 29.—Nine men perished in a terrific gale that swept along the New Jersey coast on Friday, at the rate of 90 miles an hour and burning the sea upon the land like a tidal wave. The damage is estimated at $1,000,000.

This city felt the full effect of the storm. Houses were blown or washed away. The city's fighting plant was put out of commission. Scores of dredged persons were forced to flee from their homes.

While the storm was battering this city an ocean tragedy was being acted on the coast off Seaside, N. J. There two boats were driven ashore. To the mast of one of the vessels three men were clinging. The crew of river life-saving crew tried desperately to reach the men, but the force of the gale and the vast waves drove them back. The men were seen to drop one by one into the boiling sea and disappear.

While the life savers were toiling in the terrible sea they prayed that government vessels summoned might come in time, but none appeared soon enough to render any assistance.

ALLIANCE MEN ARE ABSOLVED

Witnesses at Inquest of Calumet Panic Testify That Fiend Didn't Start Fire.

Calumet, Mich., Dec. 31.—The inquest into the cause of the Italian ball panic in Calumet, which took the lives of 72 men, women and children, held the center of interest in the copper country Wednesday afternoon. Monday. A half-dozen witnesses testified, including Mrs. Annie Clemenso, leader of the Women's auxiliary of the Western Federation of Miners, the organization which was distributing Christmas gifts to the children when the panic in the Italian hall broke out. The testimony of the witnesses disproved the generally circulated rumors that a man wearing a Citizens' alliance button had rushed up the stairs and shouted "Fire" and that deputies stood at the foot of the stairs and beat back the people coming out of the hall. All testified to the effect that they had heard no such cry and that Citizens' button came up the stairs and went out the door, but had uttered such a button.

Big Rapids, Mich., Dec. 31.—After Governor Ferris of Michigan had set himself to larrup the federal government for interfering in the Calumet strike by sending John R. Dennison into the territory he changed his mind and is now strong for Dennison.

Chicago Dec. 31.—Charles H. Moyer, who was shot and beaten in Hancock, Mich., by thugs alleged to have been in the employ of the Citizens' alliance, will have a bodyguard when he leaves Chicago to resume the work interrupted by the attack on him. His brother, S. F. Moyer, chief of police of Bloomington, Ill., arrived in Chicago and declared Moyer would not return to Michigan alone. "If he insists on going back I am going to see that he stays there," said the Bloomington man. "I am going to back Charlie in his fight."

A steel-hearted bullet, such as is used in modern rifles, was found in one of the victims of the Italian hall panic, Mrs. Agnes Kuzmich, residing at Lutton, poured the contents of a jug of kerosene over herself, applied a match and burned to death before help arrived.

FIRE RAZES BLOCK

HOSE WAS STRETCHED A MILE

One Stream Taken From St. Lawrence River Prevents City From Being Swept—Twenty Buildings Razed—Loss Totals Millions.

Montreal, Dec. 31.—Fire which threatened the destruction of the city on Monday was finally brought under control when water was obtained by running a mile of hose to the river. This city has had a water famine for several days. The loss is placed at $1,000,000.

The fire started in a block of stores and houses at the corner of St. Hubert and Ontario streets. On account of the bitter cold, the fire department was unable to check it.

At 2 o'clock 20 buildings had been destroyed and the firemen were preparing to use dynamite in an effort to check the flames.

The Montreal Light, Heat and Power company, which supplies the city with most of its water, was drawing on a main several days ago, compelled the firemen to run a mile of hose to the river, where it stretched from the hydrants and their chemical extinguishers, in half an hour the fire had swept through a block. All the apparatus in the city were called into the service of the fire department. The water pressure was so low that it was impossible to use the chemical extinguisher available was placed in the adjoining buildings, which were where it started, the fire leaped across the street to a large automobile garage, which was filled with gasoline, explosions threw jets of flame in all directions. The Bonsecours Market Opera House was destroyed by fire 15 years ago.

FEDERALS ROUTED IN FIGHT

Huerta's Troops Demoralized Following Rebel Surprise Party Near Victoria.

Presidio, Tex., Dec. 31.—The northern division of the Mexican federal army apparently is utterly demoralized. With its dead and wounded stretched over the hills and some of its soldiers fleeing to a point across the United States border, only to be pushed back again, the 4,000 federals who had made a dramatic retreat from Chihuahua to Tornago, the little town in which rebel opposition here were scattered in all directions as a result of the fifth country in which the city of Victoria hundred rebels sent by Gen. Villa, who is now in Chihuahua, recently sent terror throughout the federal ranks.

1913 CROP IS LARGE

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE ESTIMATE SHOWS BUMPER YEAR FOR FARMER.

NO HELP FOR CONSUMER

Washington Report Shows That Only Middleman Profits By Big Output—Declares Exports Help Keep the Prices Up.

Washington, Dec. 31.—Ten billion dollars worth of produce, $3,000,000,000 of cash income—a bumper year in spite of droughts and other setbacks—is the 1913 record of 6,000,000 American farms.

The value of the 1913 crops is twice as great as that of 1899; more than $1,000,000,000 in excess of 1909, and substantially greater than in 1912, although the quantity of production has fallen. Fourteen principal crops aver age about 20 per cent higher in price than a year ago, and 64 per cent higher than two years ago. Their total is the highest ever reached, 58 per cent higher than a year ago.

Of all the crops it is estimated that 52 per cent will remain on farms where they were produced, and that 20 per cent of the animal production will remain. On that basis the cash income is estimated by the department of agriculture at $5,847,000,000. It is discovered, however, that the public

Fruit despite a record year of crop values and the fact that the number of farms has increased 11 per cent, since 1909, the consumer does not believe a lower cost of living will follow as a consequence.

"However desirable increased production on farms may appear to the consumers' standpoint," the report says, "it does not follow that the farmer is benefited. Increased results in any increase in the cash income of farmers or per centage of farm population or that prices paid by consumers would be very lower." Potato prices are promptly raised on a prospect of undersupplies, but they do not fall when there is a oversupplies.

Meat prices are promptly raised on a prospect of undersupplies, but they do not fall when there is a oversupplies.

Meat prices are promptly paid by consumers, ranging from 5 to nearly 50 per cent, more than the farmer receives, indicates that there is plenty of room for lowering the cost of farm production to consumers and at the same time largely increasing the cash income per farm without increasing farm production.

"This condition is undoubtedly a marketing problem which will have to be solved by better organizations of farmers and improved methods of marketing.

The common phenomenon of record yield and crop value below the record, and of record crop value with a yield below the average, by more than half a dozen of the crops of 1913, is the result of a yield of 1,[illegible] bushels, a very high price in case of a crop of low production, on the other hand, usually gets but little money for the crops which he produces in abundance.

"It seems to be overlooked," the report continues, "that the farmer is producing enormous surpluses for export to foreign countries. Prices are fixed in the world markets, and in this one. The value of the agricultural exports of domestic production in the fiscal year 1913 was $1,123,[illegible], an amount which has not before been equaled.

The largest average cash income per farm in 1913 was reported in the north central west division, including Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, North and South Dakota, Kansas and Nebraska, the lowest in the south, obtained in Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas. The value of the labor of a relatively large number of adults and children is required to produce the crop.

INDIANA MINE BLAST KILLS 8

Bicknell, Ind., Dec. 31.—Eight men were killed outright, and 20 others were injured, some of them probably fatally, in a mine explosion here. Four of the dead are Italians, three Serbians, one Greek. Every member of the mine squad working with the blasting crew was killed, when the charge exploded and sent pieces of rock and tons of earth flying in all directions.

Women and children of the miners who were behind a door in the mine at the time of the explosion gathered at the mouth of the shaft and watched the work of carrying out the dead and injured. There were only boys present, women and others whose women were expecting their bodies to be carried by the rescuers, hurried out alive and unhurt at the mouth of the shaft.

The bodies of Tony Perry and Harry Williams were recovered and Shot Fitter High Wauch is missing.

Fire in Prison; Militia to Scene.

Albany, N. Y., Dec. 30.—Fire in the state penitentiary one mile from this city, which is reported Wednesday, fearing an outbreak by the 300 prisoners, to prevent the escape of the scene. No attempt to escape was made.

WORLD HAS HAD A FORTUNATE YEAR

No Terrible Catastrophe Has Marked the Twelvemonth.

DEATH TAKES NOTABLE MEN

General Success of the Democrats and Startling Developments South of the Rio Grande Cast Events in Western Hemisphere.

New York.—Taken all in all, the year 1913 has been a happy and rather fortunate one for the world in general. It was not marked by any great disasters, such as the Sin Francisco earthquake or the Titanic disaster; it saw the end of the wars in the Balkans; it witnessed the inauguration of a Democratic president in the United States, followed by sensible tariff reduction without financial panic.

The disasters of the past year had but the financial world rather hard, including some bank failures as J. P. Morgan, Henry M. Flagler and James R. Keene. The Roman Catholic church also lost two of its most venerable cardinals, Oreglia, dean of the sacred College, and Rampolla, one secretary at the Vatican and who would have been pope instead of Pius X had not the emperor of Austria vetoed against him.

In the United States political developments have been extremely interesting, but not startling. Nothing seems to have gone the way of the Democratic party, which for years were lost November in New York city, the state of New Jersey and the state of Virginia. Congress has passed the currency bill, and the banking interests of the country are feeling themselves its ill.

An almost as bad financial may have seen if it was learned that President Wilson's plans for tariff reform should be "startled," business and financial interests have apparently become convinced that the President's attitude is not one of opposition, but rather an attitude in which he would consult and confer with business and finance to remedy evils generally admitted to exist.

Doings in Mexico.

The Mexican and Rio Grande developments have been startling and rapid. The year 1913 saw in Mexico the assassination of President Francisco Madero, Vice-President Pino Suarez and Gustavo Madero, brother of the president, the usurpation of the presidency by Gen. Victoriano Huerta, followed into that position by General Felix Diaz. Then came the rupture between Diaz and Huerta, with the practical banishment of Diaz. Later in 1913 came the Huerta-Carranza rupture, the leader of the constitutionalists in the north of Mexico, refusing to recognize the powerful northern states of Mexico are now under his control. Scarcely had Carranza become famous than Francisco "Pancho" Villa, former bandit, with a personal army, burst into the limelight as a rebel leader serving Carranza. Villa is mentioned whether Carranza or Villa is the stronger in the leadership of the constitutionalists forces.

In its relations with Mexico the United States seemed to have had in its administration President Wilson the most difficult situation to which hold recognition from the Huerta adherents, and although much prowess has been brought to bear, the president has refused to change the attitude he assumed was due to induce Huerta to relive and allow a fair and honest election, without result. Today the United States has a heavy armed force at the border and has assembled a large number of ships on the coast.

There have been several marriages of importance in the past year, and a number of engagements have been announced. Foremost in the minds of America, of course, is the wedding of Miss Jessie Woodrow Wilson, daughter of the president.

Assassination of Greek King.

Over Mexico's barbarous achievements in the year have been assassinations in every of the generally recognized assassination. George I, king of the Hellenes, was shot by a crazy anarchist in Salonika, March 18, in Turkey the assassination of the Grand Vizier, who charge exploded and sent pieces of rock and tons of earth flying in all directions.

Women and children of the miners who were behind a door in the mine at the time of the explosion gathered at the mouth of the shaft and watched the work of carrying out the dead and injured. There were only boys present, women and others whose women were expecting their bodies to be carried by the rescuers hurried out alive and unhurt at the mouth of the shaft.

The bodies of Tony Perry and Harry Williams were recovered and Shot Fitter High Wauch is missing.

Fire in Prison; Militia to Scene.

Albany, N. Y., Dec. 30.—Fire in the state penitentiary one mile from this city, which is reported Wednesday, fearing an outbreak by the 300 prisoners, to prevent the escape of the scene. No attempt to escape was made.

Shot in Pursuit of Fugitives.

Jessy, Ga., Dec. 31—Oliver Mangum, twenty-two, a bootlegger, was killed by a posse while attempting to arrest two negroes who were being pursued for an alleged assault on an old woman at Hortense, Ga.

Mineral Output: $86,000,000.

Sacramento, Cal., Dec. 31.—The mineral output of California for 1913 will total $86,000,000, according to a report announced by F. McNutt Hamilton, state mineralogist. This is an increase of $10,000,000 over 1912.

Call Sent to 7,500 Banks.

Washington, Dec. 31.—Copies of the federal reserve act, the regulations to be adopted by banks which wish to enter the system were mailed to every national bank. There are 7,500 in the United States.

France and Russia are stronger than ever, possibly made so by the Balkan wars.

There have been some fine sports between France and Germany, but nothing in any way approaching a breach of diplomatic relations. The falling of a couple of German war balloons on French territory created some little excitement, as did the mobbing of some German subjects by French children in border towns. France, as well as the United States, underwent a political change in 1913, the result of very democratic and a very diplomatic person in the office of chief executive—President Poincare.

In the Far East.

In the far east several things of moment occurred in 1913, among them the Chinese republic, and establishment of a republic, and in Japan the death of the Mikado and the succession of his son and the anti-American legislation in California in the result of the adoption of the anti-alien land-owning law in California.

In the realm of science and exploration there have been but few developments that could positively be designated as history-creating.

The discovery of the south pole and the disaster to the scott expedition both occurred in 1912, although the fate of Captain Scott was not made known to the world until 1913. Dr. Frederick Frans Hochlaus, discoverer of a "cure" for tuberculosis, made a sensation in 1913, but the cure of Dr. Friedmann's "cure," and other "cures" for that dread disease announced at about the same time, are very much open to doubt. Great strides were undoubtedly made in the treatment of cancer, but no positive cure has been announced, although much has been learned about the value of radium.

Aviation is progressing rapidly. Much attention to aeronautics has been paid by the various European governments from a military standpoint. The use of airships and aeroplaning anywhere near safe have yet been confined to France and Germany and trained a military aviation corps that would unquestionably be of great value in time of war. Germany has devoted much time and money to perfecting airships, but the United States has spent some $[illegible] during the year in military experiments in aviation.

The number of deaths resulting from aviation has not been especially large. Aviators have died just as aviators died in 1912, and Germany collected a number of disastrous accidents to Zeppelin dirigible balloons. Many of the accidents of aeroplanes resulted from fancy exhibition flying and military experiments. The year 1913 saw the first aeroplane flight over the Panama canal.

On the Panama Canal.

In Panama great developments have taken place, the Gaillard cut was the dynamiting of Gamboa dike, being the result of practically the last obstruction in the big ditch. The canal is now almost completed, so far as a trans-continental waterway is concerned, although not yet prepared for the passage of vessels from ocean to ocean. Work has also been begun on the Panama-Pacific exposition, the Panama-Pacific International exposition, to be held in San Francisco in 1915, a year following the actual opening of the Panama canal. In that connection it may be mentioned some slight international ill feeling may result from the action of Australia, the British and German government participate officially in the San Francisco exposition, and Japan has declined to participate.

The United States may congratulate itself that, barring the case of Hans Schmidt, the New York priest, there have been few gruesome and startling murders during the year.

New York state furnished the most sensational list of local politics of the year in the impeachment and removal of Gov. William Sulzer, followed by a Democratic victory for governorship and election to the state assembly.

In his annual message to the United States still stands supreme. In politics and in the world of sports and challengers, the United States further shocked Johnny Bull when Pennsylvania defeated the world's champion, walked away from the English experts at the American golf championship at Brookline, Mass. and by the winning of the international Davis Cup at Boston, America's supremacy in sports was further recognized. Another great year was Gustave of Sweden presented the American athletes with the medals and trophies won at the Olympic games in Stockholm in 1912. The winning world referred shook however, when it was learned that "Jim" Thorpe, the famous Carlisle Indian athlete really belonged in the classification of "professional." He voluntarily renounced the trophies he had won as an amateur in the Olympic games.

A WOMAN IN CAMP

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1912, by Associated Literary Press.

No new of us who was there can ever forget the afternoon a party of honest old farmers rode in to camp minus camp with a lone woman in their midst.

It had been twenty-two months since we had seen anything more resembling a woman than a pair of spectacles and a pet cotton handkerchief, and we did not know how to behave, stepped out and crouched into the hard and with astonishment in saying little enough.

The woman was a widow, who had been expatriated by the Indians from an immigrant train and then recaptured by the hunters. She was about forty years of age, and taken the situation coolly, and instead of making an effort to restore herself to the train and to her relatives with whom she was journeying had noted to be set down in our camp and to spend and make up her mind what course to pursue. This was the way the hunters had brought her over to our care.

"Way, you dizzers are silver, boys," a woman who wants to stop here for a quil till she gets rested. She's oddsfish, and she sure lies a south wind blowing over prettie flowers."

And this was the way we received her.

"After—yes—show—less hats off!" boomed a veteran—"glad to see you—hope you well—shun—country."

There were thirty of us standing around there, mouths open, hats off, knees wobbling and every minute we from the feelings every minute, and something in the situation made the widow grin as she looked at us over a pied my claims as follows:

First—I knocked her off the horse.

Second—I said I hoped she was well.

Third—I remarked that it was a unfortunate affair.

Fourth—She recognized my arm as we walked to camp and then suspected my sleeve in her bewilderment.

If a total wave-are feet high had come rolling up the valley it wouldn't have produced half the fright and stand by the presence of the Widow Flinkins. There were eighty or ninety of us, rough, hungry and mean or less sick, some shaved, some dirty and some only barbered, and to have a female little black eyed widow with a pretty mouth and a voice as sweet as a bird set down among us was to quiet us to a degree that the afternoon was comparatively dull.

Several curious things happened right away. Colonel Taylor, who had never been known to wash his face or comb his hair, started out in search of a clean shirt and a pocket comb.

Bill Goodloe, the ugliest looking man in camp, offered to for a piece of looking glass two inches square, and, not being able to find one, he went and borrowed his foot as the next best thing.

There was a general washing up and combing and scrubbing and hauling out clean shirts and neckties, and the men who had not been shaved for a week, put up and began to shave tolerea and cliff for his clothes, and so on.

"Gentlemen, who knows that what this widder hoed I had 200 acres of, and she has come here to ask for my hand in marriage?"

Fifth—I was chosen guardian to the widow in a unanimous vote.

Seventh—I had the only clean white shirt in that whole camp, and only five buttons were missing from the bosom.

Other claims were intended to me to be filed, as follows:

Seven different men had their hair cut.

Six others shaved themselves with jackknives.

Over a dozen of our hand let up a notch or two on swearing.

Well, it was curious what a change that woman brought about.

Some of us washed our clothes in our way of living, and upon the appearance of the men. Each made an effort to clean and tidy up, and in most cases with marked success. Before the advent we could count on two or three camels per day. After her coming such a thing was never known. Indeed, one day, when Peter White or Sir Peter himself as to insult Charles O'Gay, Charles took him aside and whispered:

"Peter, I hin turn yo around side out in six ticks of a clock, but I'm not the sort of a gentleman to kick up a row and upset a lady's nerves. I'm jey n up sun yo and arse-ses yeters cann Fi walloy ye or die frylins."

And the widow, she sewed on buttons and mended rent garments for the whole of us, and she taught this one how to cook, and that one how to patch and darn, and before we knew it she was a comrade and an idol. Never could we have conquered a deeper respect, nor an equal greater confidence.

She was with us about six weeks, and then went away with friends who came for her. Each man was taken by the hand and given a goodby word, and in she was had to wait down the trail until the silence among our retired was broken by the thundering report of the jubilee blowing his nose, followed by the hasty observation:

"Wall, I swan! Hanged if I've felt so much like cryin' in about forty seven years."

Wonderful Cough Remedy.

Dr. King's New Discovery is known every where as the remedy which will satisfy a cough or cold. D. P. TWO DIFFERENT THINGS.

Showing How Gossip Distorts a Little Incident.

"Are you going to marry Dick Tarrant?"

"Why, what put that into your head?"

"I hear you are going to marry Dick Tarrant."

"Who ever told you such a ridiculous thing as that?"

"Why, your best friend, Daisy Sunshine."

"Listen, dearie. I don't doubt your honesty, but I can't believe that Daisy ever said any such thing. We know everything about one, and we have never had a quarrel, and she isn't a liar. I'll admit it to you, but she ever tell you that I was going to marry Dick?"

"She did."

"Should you mind repeating her very words?"

"She said to me, distinctly, 'Grace Fanshawe is going to Dick's dinner-dance.' I saw for myself that it was intended. I see I am engaged to him, and Daisy told the truth. But what right have you to gather from that fact that I am going to marry the fellow? Gossip, that's what it is—just gossip. Can't a girl go to a dinner-dance without being linked with a lunch of a fellow without being talked about as she is going to marry him?

Bathing and Bellowing.

Primitive man bathed in water with hot stones. That was not the only use he made of them, at any rate. If he was a Scythian, he bathed in vapor like described by Herodotus five hundred years before Christ. Herodotus is one of smoking. Having spoken of a kind of hemp that grows in Scythia, he says: "The Scythians take the seed of this hemp, so like their lands and that throw the seed upon the stones heated with fire. And it is thrown into the mist into smoke, producing so much that no Greek vapor bath could surpass it. And the Scythians, delighting in it, bellow. This takes the place of a bath for them. It seems to them they had conversed the Turkish bath and the cigarette.

The Widow's Dower.

It is certain that "dower," the estate for which the widow acquires at her husband's death, was not known among the early Saxons. In the laws of King Ethelred the widow is directed to be supported wholly out of the personal estate. Dower is generally ascribed to the Norman, but it was introduced into the feudal system by Emperor Frederick II., who was contemporary with the Scottish Henry III., about 1250.

Still Sadder.

"What could be more sad than a man without a country?" feelingly asked the high school literature teacher.

"A country without a man," responded a pretty girl in the front feelingly.—Woman's Home Companion.

NATIONAL PROHIBITION.

Dr. A. M. Wilkinson Reports His Experiences at Washington Convention.

The following report was given at a union temperance mass-meeting of all the churches of Charlevoix by Dr. A. M. Wilkinson, Sunday evening, Dec. 29, 1912, at the Congregational church. The house was packed and the greatest interest manifested. Dr. Taggart, pastor of the church, in introducing the speaker, expressed the pleasure of all in being taken in the subject of the evening—National Prohibition—at which would not have been thought of but a few years ago.

Dr. Wilkinson then spoke as follows:

Based on my trip to Washington [illegible] Committee of Congress [illegible] Lecturer of the W. C. T. U., was next introduced and she made the best speech of the day. She is called the "Georgia Cyclone," and she lived up to her reputation and nobody had any difficulty in hearing her. She began at a running fire of bright, pithy, pungent sayings, of which I quote: "We want to take the saloonkeeper's snarl upon off from our National banner and put a white ribbon on in its place." Again: "Our opponents argue that the great loss of internal revenue caused by abolishing the liquor traffic will bankrupt the Government. 'Well this is the first time I ever heard of a person or a Government drinking himself rich. But mercy sake, we know enough to elect sixty-six senators and five hundred Congressmen, we ought to know enough to finance the Government without the aid of the liquor traffic." And then, after describing the wonderful prosperity of Georgia, her sister state, this most all-around progressive state in the Union today which has made this record in the past five years after it was "dry." Then with ringing eloquence "And I tell you ladies and gentlemen that anything that is good for Georgia, the inspiration of the South will produce universal prosperity and moral uplift in the greatest nation in the world."

She said "We women mean business and I tell you right now there is no governmental excuse for Sahara's being dry territory and if your folks up North don't quit sending liquor down here territory we have voted to be free from it, we Southern folks are going to secede again and lick you out of your boots."

Wm. D. Upshaw, the Georgia Editor and fiery prohibition orator, who is one of the vice presidents of the A. S. L. of America, took part in the proceedings. He said: The samest reform movement in America is making deathless history today. It is my lifelong conviction that the committee of one thousand gathered from all points of the Nation to name National prohibition of the liquor traffic is the greatest committee of patriots that ever climbed the steps of the Capitol. Great reforms and events have been inaugurated through all the varying forms of our nation's progress. This memorial, declared the Georgia reformer, simply means it is high time for a nation that looks down upon Russian and Indian serfdom, in behalf of cattle and crops, that our government is the ward of the streams and the trees of the forest—the Government that wisely counts it its duty to guard and enforce pure food laws to organize in the field

A Man in the Open

SYNOPSIS.

The story opens with Jesse Smith relating the story of his birth, early life in Kansas and the death of his father. Jesse becomes a sailor. His mother marries Ezra Brooks, a farmer, and Jesse goes to the sea. Years later Jesse becomes a cowboy in Texas. He marries Ruth Brooks, a girl he met aboard ship, who later is reported to have died. Jesse becomes a gambler and finally takes up the aviation. Unhappily married, Jesse meets Ruth Brooks and finds her other alias Peta Rooke. Discovered by her husband, Peta leaves Jesse and goes back to life in the Ranch. Kate relents in the night and follows Jesse to the plane. Jesse and Kate start happily. Kate succumbs to the pleasures of a company party in the saloon car. Jesse, Pete and Kate are thrown together. Pete plans to get Jesse's money. Jesse is hurt and returns home where Pete attempts to make Jesse drink through his neighbors and friends. Jesse refuses and Pete plots to get the land. Jesse is caught by the authorities, but by a clever ruse makes him a prisoner of Pete. Jesse escapes and is reunited with Kate. Pete, Jesse, Kate and Ruth are involved with aviation papers. Jesse takes charge of the aviation field and Billy O'Flynn, having promoted the deal, is made manager. Pete, Ruth and Kate are made stockholders. Vancouver is reached and is triangulated. A son is born to Kate and Jesse and Jesse's mother. Pete receives a letter from his first wife, Peta, who is living in Vancouver. Pete plots to destroy she and what latter knows. The death of Kate and their son, father and mother ensues. Jesse, Ruth and Billy O'Flynn are left in charge. Jerry Pete's conviction and tells Kate how Jesse has saved her life and invalided Billy to the chivalrousness of Billy. Kate arrives home and Jesse tells her of the death of Pete. Jesse, Ruth and Billy arrive in time to see Jesse's home the Hundred Mile and Spike House seemed to wait and wait for the white sleeper.

Pete sat under a roof of cedar shakes which he had built to shelter the new "digging." He was viewing the last of sixty backsamores, as he dreamed of the great north trail, of open meadows by the Hay-River, of the heavens and seas of Yaugon Shiith at the Force of Akesna.

"Mother" he said, "I'm no slouch of a cargador. There red ale down is still to rip for kitchen boxes, and it's all complete. The smoke is fattening good, I hear, and the men's the same as last summer, all worth their feed, too."

Not mother, grim and fierce in the doorway of her sod-roofed cabin, but come to admire. "Pete," she shrilled, "two more boxes of water and you can eat, a move on. And how long hev you been promisin' to whittle me them clothes-pins? Now jest you hustle, Pete, or I'll get right sally."

Pete only cut from the plug into his palm, and rolled the tobacco small for his corncob pipe. His winter servitude was ended, and he was master, the cargador before whom all mom bow in the dread northlands. Other work of consequence carry but own water, and Pete, with something of a flourish, lighted his pipe.

"Mother!" Pete let out a sharp call, forgetting her business, mother came quite humbly, as though he feared "Yes, Pete?"

He pointed with his pipe at a distant horseman rounding the flank of the hill.

"Brooke" she whispered, both gnarled rheumatic hands clutched at her heart.

"I reckon," said Pete cheerfully "Thinks he's a circus procession. When Brooke moved to sit on an sparrow Pete ordered him to one of the cabins, and Brooke, who had never may sit on my riggings," said the old gray cargador.

"I thought," said Brooke quite kind ly, "that this harness was mine."

"I half interest," said another, surely."

"I fear," said Brooke, "you sort of misunderstood. Old Taylor did say something about your machines as a working partner, and, of course, if we hadn't concluded that preposterous contract with the Hudson's Bay Company, there's no doubt your knowledge of the country up north would have been a worth paying for. It was, as you say, a damed awkward scent, his being blind as a bat, in fact, I was put to quite a lot of trouble getting the agreement witnessed. However," he produced a document which, under scratch, "it's all there in black and white, and there's the old fools sig nature bobbs good in any court of law—proves that I've bought and paid for the whole stick. You needn't claim I haven't a clear title—you needn't stare at me as if I'd forged the document. It's straight goods, I tell you."

Mother reeled backward, while she grabbed Pete's shoulders so that the pressure entered to Brooke's feet. She steadied herself, then with a husky croak, "You made Bob sign that—blind, dying, so he dassn't read the paper."

"Can you prove that?" asked Brooke indignantly, as though he doubted about the matter. "If you say things like that, it's criminal libel, and you've been liable to the Hooshum House. However," he shrugged his shoulders, and put the agreement away, "I don't want to be hard on you, Pete."

"Mister Mathson," mother blazed at him.

Pete, with a whispered word to mother, rose from his bench and without appearing to see Mr. Brooke, walked past him across the sunlit yard, and on slowly up the great lifting curve of the road to Hundred Mile House.

The sun was getting behind him when Pete reached at last upon the ancestral summit, and dusk lay in tables of shadow far below him. At the Hundred he found the lamps alight, and, as usual, Billy offered him a drink. "I ain't drinking," said Pete usually, as he lurched past the bar into the dining-hall, and on to the little room on the right where Captain Taylor lay.

"Pete!" he whispered.

"That you, Pete? Bit down," said the boss feebly. "How's the cities Pete? Getting coarse gold, eh?"

"Gold! Say, Bob, what's the matter, old fellow?"

"Matter? Why, nothing, Pete," the blind eyes stared keenly, "of course I'm not nearly to bedrock yet, and as to what I owe you've jolly well got the wait. How's old Calamity? I got Lost Creek pay in to-day at last."

"Was the boss dreaming of old times on Lightning Creek?"

"Waits in the mail," said Bob. "Watty had been dead these thirty years."

"Then Pete sat down on the bedside, and the two smokers prattled about the new flume, and the price of flour in a camp now overgrown with jungle.

A word or billy would have been enough to get the sparrego to a place of safety, guessing the settlement of Pete's jest claim as partner. But the cargador knew well that death had come to take the one man he loved. This was no time for sordid business, disturbing Bob Taylor's peace. It was better to go quietly.

"I'm off, Bob."

"The sky was full of stars as Pete went homeward. The stars were big and round; the forest in an ecstasy kept vigil all alert, all silent, and the little streams of the thaw were saying their prayers before the frost sleep of the later hours. The man was at peace. It is not so very much to be cargador, but it is a very big thing indeed to be unselfish. The trees kept vigil, the little streams crooned sleepy prayers, the stars in glory humbly served as lamps, and the man made no cry in his pain. Far down in the valley he sang a red flame rise.

"Pete!"

Mother saw Brooke rid off to inspect his Star mules in their pasture far away down the Fraser Canon. She blacked the stove with malice, she took no seeding in enmity, set the furniture to rights as though it were being punished, then sat on the damp floor brooding, while twilight deepened to a world of treachery. Brooke was a chief, the lying boss had used Pete and thrown him away wrung dry. And Pete was an old fool who wouldn't forgive.

She had dreaded the lonely summer when she was left with only sourtrets for company. Now Pete would be "settle" around, ruined, and out of work, the man who had been used and thrown aside, the laughing-stock of the teamsters who saw his pride brought low.

The frontier breeds fierce women, with narrow venomous souls, sensitive to the pleasure of a company party. Pete suffered, Brooke should not prosper, or the loss who had failed her man. Mother dragged two five-gallon cans of petroleum from the lean-to, and staggered under their weight, poured the oil over all Brooke's harness, then piling heavily with her lo ber she carried loads of swamp hay, and coaxing until the sparrego were but part of a bonfire. Then with a brand from the stove she set the hay alight. There should be no public show to break Pete's pride, there should be no pack-trails unless he were cargador.

Pete stood beside the ashes searching mother's face with his slow blood cooling. Her burning rage was gone, and she was afraid, for now she thought too late of all his loving pride in her. The greatness of the thing which his knowledge and skill had put in her hands had burned. Understanding how low had sunk this broken Pete said no word. He only knew that bolt had paid him seven hundred dollars cash and that which he had sacrificed to silence he turned away and once more faced the trail of which only he and the Hundred Mile Home.

"Pete!"

The spring was in my blood, and I could not sleep. Can any creature sleep when the spring's sweet restless air calls to his nature? Even the little birds were twitching back to the north, for now and again as I strolled along the road I would hear a sleepy twitter "Isn't it dawn yet?" "Not yet, have another nap." So I came to the road and the great hill whence I should see the dawn.

I was turning back refreshed toward my duty, when I heard something sing. The sound comes from neighbors with a pine tree, the one at the very top of the long climb which Peto had blasted out of the mountain. "Yes, that" With my heart in my mouth I went to find out what was the matter, and so discovered the old cargador crouched down against the trunk of the pine. I asked in a very shaky voice, "what on earth's the matter?"

Dying, lad."

"But it's too damp here. Why, you'll catch your death of cold."

"That would never do. Say, mum, how's Bob?"

"Oh, ever so much better."

"Can't do it," said Pete. "If I did first bad I see the Jaka on me."

"Wouldn't you like a hot rum?"

So he took my arm, and I helped him along the road.

"Mother!"

"Yes, Brooke came inspecting them cedarwood, so sudden barked out."

"Won't that be rather awkward?"

"Some. You see, mum, Bob paid me four hundred and five dollars cash. So I come to return him the money."

I didn't quite understand. "You see, Pete," I suggested, "you and Brooke are the owners. Don't you owe half to yourself and half to mother?"

"Well, if that's so, I'll pay myself and owe my cut to Brooke. But then he claims the whole Star stajo."

"In that case you owe the whole of the money to Brooke."

"I don't mind owing Brooke." Pete felt so much better that he was able to walk without help. "Brooke's gone to inspect mules. I wonder how he's going to tell them mules?"

As it happened, Jesse was an actual witness to Mr. Brooke's inspection of the Star mules at their pasture below his ranch. Here is his narrative:

"The trouble for these poor mules was that they followed a false goddess. Their bell mare Prue ought to have been old enough to know better, but at the age of twenty-three, with gray hair and bald withers, she was still female.

"She and her mules had been grazing maybe half a mile down my new stallion, young Jehoshaphat, happened along with his harem of twenty-five mares, smelling down wind for a drink. The mares looked so snug and great that they could scarcely waddle, but Jehoshaphat was full of sinful pride, strutting high step at the sight of Prue.

"You should have seen Prue play up to innocent modesty in front of Jehoshaphat, pretending she wasn't there, making believe he was her soul den, didn't approve of the gentleman, fluttering his vanity with an array of airs and graces. Prue paraded herself along in front of the harem to spite the married mares, and all her mules came worshiping along in parade, and Jehoshaphat was the biggest kicking fool ever saw in your life.

"There was me lying on Face Rock like a little boy at a circus, and then I saw the performance proceeding so joyful that I never saw Brooke until he was down right into the middle of the fun. Jehoshaphat got mad and started Brooke chasing Win round the pasture. Prue chased Jehoshaphat, the mules chased Prue, the bay bit and kicked at everybody. Brooke galloped delirious in all directions, and I laughed until I could hardly hold down the rocks.

"Of course, if Brooke hadn't been a mere mistake on earth, he would have barked pretty to the nearest corral, and put the two outfits apart, but Brooke proceeded to lose his temper, pulled his gun, limped his wretched screl behind a tree, and he fired at Jehoshaphat the stallion. He shot Prue through the heart.

"There was nothing after that to keep the herd together. Jehoshaphat Bone went up the canon, some down, the rest scattered to Brooke's feet. He stood, blown himself, then with a husky croak, "You made Bob sign that—blind, dying, so he dassn't read the paper."

"Can you prove that?" asked Brooke indignantly, as though he doubted about the matter. "If you say things like that, it's criminal libel, and you've been liable to the Hooshum House. However," he shrugged his shoulders, and put the agreement away, "I don't want to be hard on you, Pete."

TOOK "GINGER" OUT OF HORSE

Sailor, Being Indifferent Rider, Sought Refuge in Element he was Accustomed To.

A Roman on horseback is the unwonted fish out of water. Lord Mormar Carlisle, who was afterward the commander of the British ship Shoodenk, when he surrendered to the United States during the War of 1812, was one of a group of English naval officers who in 1802 visited Cairo. There they had occasion to ride "Grand Inshaw" of Egypt.

"Having gone through the diplomatic ceremonies, we prepared to depart. When we got to the door, we found three elegantly caparisoned horses, sent for Sir Hove Popham, one for me, and one for Lord Carlisle. After Sir Hove was mounted, I got on my lamb steed, a dark iron gray, which seemed as docile as could be desired. As soon as Captain Collier was on his back, and outside the palace gate, a scale of 21 guns began, and in my other dismay (since I was not an expert horseman), my Arab began to jump sideways and right on end, and in various ways, at the discharge of every gun. As I was not used to this kind of motion, I considered what was to be done, for surely I could not long keep my seat. It suddenly struck me that I had better have recourse to a large piece of water close to the palace, for I felt that I should have a better chance on my accustomed element than on the hard stones by which the road was bounded. I directly clapped the shoreke (the Arab stirrup iron) into my Arab and went into the water (for that best he knew horse knew the girths until the saddle was finished, when I rode out perfectly quiet. This freak caused very great amusement to a large assemblage of natives and others who witnessed it."—Foote's Companion.

Oyes! Oyes! Oyes!

One may not be ignorant, perhaps, that French, old French, remains as the language used in certain royal proclamations in England.

So when "the king's sergent" is given before the throne in "the painted chamber," the clerk cries in the language of our fathers, "Le roy le veult." ("The king so pleases"). If the bill that he asked to approve is a money bill the clerk adds after a profound obeisance: "The king thanks his good subjects, accepts their benevolence and is pleased." The proclamation on ascending the throne is preceded by the traditional call of the French herald of former times: "Oyez! Oyez! Oyez!"

Also, that time has dishonored this old word of our country, and today the phlegmatic English herald cries Listen to the people! "O yes! O yes! O yes!"—Le Cri de Paris.

His Own Fault.

"Dot's a job, are you, Flaky?" "Yes, they got my scalp healthy."

"How long hast you held that office?" "About 30 years. And it's pretty tough, at my age, to have to take up some new occupation!" to make a living."

"Haven't you got enough to live on?" "I should say not!"

(Looking at him with disgust) "Then why don't you work?" "You're not fit to hold a public office!"

A New Year Evangel

By REV. PARLEY E. ZARTMANN, D.D.

Secretary of Extension Department Sunday School Council of Evangelical Churches

TRUTH—Being confident of this very thing, that he which hath begun a good work in you will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ.

The blessed assurance provided in this verse is indeed an evangel for the new year; it opens a door into a large place, in which Christ is every thing to the soul; and its appropriation will mean a happy New Year for saint and sinner.

Two recent experiences have fixed the text in my mind and heart for the work and good of the year. One day I was in the office of a Christian business man and he told me of his upside down experience and his fear of failure. I gave him this verse and asked him to put it on his desk. Before the day was over I was engaging in personal work in an evangelistic meeting and to a man who said he was afraid to confess Christ for fear he could not hold out. I said, Take Philippians 1:6, and count on God holding you and make the venture on faith, and finde Christ meeting every need with sufficient grace.

How Can I Get Through?

How many Christians are fearful and doubtful about their preservation and completion of that new life which they have received when they took Christ as their Savior. To them the Christian life is not only difficult, it is a life struggle, and a daily fear of collapse and defeat. They began well, but something has hindered them, or they stand in dread of some spiritual calamity. Serving the Christ is triumph. Prayer has little meaning and less blessing or power. The Bible is neglected or forgotten. Joy has fled from the soul, and gladness from the life. Some days are bright, and others gloomy. Some days are happy, but on other days they are miserable. I am still alive. You begin to question the reality of your conversion, you wonder how you will ever get through, and you despair of winning heaven at last.

Remember the assurance of the text: It takes you to live the Christian life—Christ and the believer; and every day you may have all of him you need. Always remember that the Christian life is not a matter of attainment, but obtainment—take it from Christ. This is a truth that cuts like a two-edged sword. When God moves into the heart of a man, and a man yields up his life to the instruction and guidance of God, God will take him through. There may be disappointments—days when everything goes wrong; there may be temptations—days when the devil presents the strongest and most alluring appeals to the senses, or slander or by other avenues of the life, seeking to get into and be allowed to remain entrenched and to bring you into subjection to the powers of darkness; there will be days of sorrow, and days of bereavement; days when loved ones leave you, when you look into an open grave and reach out after help; there will be days when your doubting Christian life is a thing of no consequence to yourself and no contribution to the cause of Christ to the world or its kingdom. But—and be sure of this—Christ is able to keep you to the end. This is his will; this is what he desires to do; this is what he has begun in you; and nothing is too hard for him to do. He is able to do it, and he is working to perfect in us the very image of Jesus Christ.

Life is a process of creation, of emancipation, and of transformation. The forces of nature are at work in the world by the sanctifying and glorifying work of the Spirit of God, and the human life is subject to the process. It reaches our minds, giving us understanding in the things of God; it reaches our affections, so that more and more we love to love God and to do what he has first loved us. It enlightens the conscience, acting as a guide to the law of God specially as written in his word. It guides our wills, so that they are no longer more strong for evil, delight to do that good and acceptable and perfect will of God.

In all our need we may count upon the persistence, patience and perfection of Christ's work.

The All-Sufficient Savior.

The text is also an evangel for the sinner, and he who hesitates to begin the Christian life may be assured here that it is not the work he which hath begun in you will perfect." All he waits for is your faith, your surrender, your obedience; then you will enter upon a new year which by the grace of the mighty God of Jacob will go on into an eternal life, and the life is in his Son. He who has the Son has the life. He who has not the Son of God has not life. Let us trust on God holding and keeping us.

How many Christians are fearful and doubtful about their preservation and completion of that new life which they have received when they took Christ as their Savior. To them the Christian life is not only difficult, it is a life struggle, and a daily fear of collapse and defeat. They began well, but something has hindered them, or they stand in dread of some spiritual calamity. Serving the Christ is triumph. Prayer has little meaning and less blessing or power. The Bible is neglected or forgotten. Joy has fled from the soul, and gladness from the life. Some days are bright, and others gloomy. Some days are happy, but on other days they are miserable. I am still alive. You begin to question the reality of your conversion, you wonder how you will ever get through, and you despair of winning heaven at last.

Remember the assurance of the text: It takes you to live the Christian life—Christ and the believer; and every day you may have all of him you need. Always remember that the Christian life is not a matter of attainment, but obtainment—take it from Christ. This is a truth that cuts like a two-edged sword. When God moves into the heart of a man, and a man yields up his life to the instruction and guidance of God, God will take him through. There may be disappointments—days when everything goes wrong; there may be temptations—days when the devil presents the strongest and most alluring appeals to the senses, or slander or by other avenues of the life, seeking to get into and be allowed to remain entrenched and to bring you into subjection to the powers of darkness; there will be days of sorrow, and days of bereavement; days when loved ones leave you, when you look into an open grave and reach out after help; there will be days when your doubting Christian life is a thing of no consequence to yourself and no contribution to the cause of Christ to the world or its kingdom. But—and be sure of this—Christ is able to keep you to the end. This is his will; this is what he desires to do; this is what he has begun in you; and nothing is too hard for him to do. He is able to do it, and he is working to perfect in us the very image of Jesus Christ.

Life is a process of creation, of emancipation, and of transformation. The forces of nature are at work in the world by the sanctifying and glorifying work of the Spirit of God, and the human life is subject to the process. It reaches our minds, giving us understanding in the things of God; it reaches our affections, so that more and more we love to love God and to do what he has first loved us. It enlightens the conscience, acting as a guide to the law of God specially as written in his word. It guides our wills, so that they are no longer more strong for evil, delight to do that good and acceptable and perfect will of God.

In all our need we may count upon the persistence, patience and perfection of Christ's work.

The All-Sufficient Savior.

The text is also an evangel for the sinner, and he who hesitates to begin the Christian life may be assured here that it is not the work he which hath begun in you will perfect." All he waits for is your faith, your surrender, your obedience; then you will enter upon a new year which by the grace of the mighty God of Jacob will go on into an eternal life, and the life is in his Son. He who has the Son has the life. He who has not the Son of God has not life. Let us trust on God holding and keeping us.

HIS BRAIN WORKED SLOWLY

Almost Boy Turner Statement Made by His Teacher to Good Advantage.

"Strange to say," said the schoolmaster, addressing his class of boys, "our brain acts as a telephone to the different parts of our body. Thus, accidently, between we move our feet or hands, the message comes from the brain.

"Jack Murphy, what are you grinning at?" he demanded.

"I was thinking of something, sir," said the answer.

"Well, think of something that'll do your brain a little good!" retorted the master.

"Here, come out of that!"—as another grin spread itself over the saucy youngster's face. "Just stand behind the board for half an hour, and I'll give you something to grin about afterwards!"

At the explanation of the lesson Murphy was recalled.

No response from the stolid Murphy, who appeared to be thinking hard.

"Do you hear me, Murphy?" exclaim ed the exasperated teacher.

"Yes, sir," he answered, "but my brain hasn't sent the message down yet."

Progressive Saskatchewan.

A traveler was asked by a fellow passenger on a Saskatchewan train at—well, call it Boosterville, Saskatchewan. "Well, what do you think of Boosterville?" the traveler gave his testimony, which was to the effect that he thought that Boosterville was a real live town, a cute town, a town which would be a fine place for which had a great future ahead of it, a town which had made remarkable progress during the short time it had been in existence. "When were you there?" inquired the man from Boosterville. "But three weeks back," the traveler replied. "Great Scott!" Boosterville in astonishment that such trifled ignorance could be "Does this number mean it this month?"—Canadian News.

LAKES OF ENGLAND

Region in Which They Are Beautiful Beyond Comparison.

Enchanted Section Forever Famous in Poetry of Wordsworth Have an Irresistible Fascination All Their Own That is Unknown in U. S.

Grasmere.—"Are not Abana and Pharpar, rivers of Damascus, better than all the waters of Israel?" angrily inquired Naaman when Elisha made him wash seven times in Jordan to be cured of his leprosy. Perhaps the American who has never seen the much-praised lake region of England may be inclined to "paraphrase the inquiry of the vexed warrior but one has but only to visit the poetry of Wordsworth, in order to find his patriotic pride swelled up in cordial admiration. Windermere and Hydal Water, Grasmere and Derwent Water and their companion lakes, are of little doubtful value as individual counterparts and equals in the United States, and they are trifling in comparison therewith with the vast inland seas that lie between us and Canada.

They lack the fresh wild charm of the less frequented Adirondack lakes, and they have not the vastness in the far west, and they do not equal for purposes of measure Michigan like chain of long, narrow and beautiful lakes in central New York, which have the irresistible fascination all their own. Close hanged by mountains, with a shore of most beautiful contour, and graced with matchless atmospheric effects, the Finger Lakes, as they their banks now rich in dense foliage, their shores now fringed with the lawns of noble homesteads slope green to the water's edge. Among the Finger Lakes, Keuka, with their beaches and pastures dotted almost in their lofty hills with cottages and cultivated orchards, and Seneca, with its fine lively English lakes, a charm that can come to any region only after long years of untold generations the scene of human toil, love and suffering. With night too, comes to the peasant of the right lot, which the lakes take their sleep a delicious rest, and to the lonely heights that slide into the west with such a bath and blessing as few of the American wilderness find so rich in nothing else.

Christmas and New Year's Day are legal school holidays and if they are a part of the school year, school sessions are not to be conducted and the teacher draws his or her salary, as such holidays count as days taught. If they come in a prescribed holiday vacation, however, they are not a part of the school year and the teacher is not paid for them. The other school holidays are Decoration Day, Fourth of July, Labor Day and Thanksgiving together with all Saturdays. School cannot be conducted legally on Saturdays or holidays even with the consent of the school board. Lincoln's Birthday, Washington's Birthday and Columbus day, Oct. 12, are no longer legal school holidays but are to be observed in the schools by appropriate commemorative exercises.

Charlevoix county now owns a bloodhound of the most approved pattern. Sheriff Robbins bought the animal at the Bonner kennels, in Coopersville, Mich. He (the dog) has a pedigree as long and distinguished as that of the house of Montmorenci. He is seven years old and has a magnificent baritone voice. Last week, just to try out the pup, the sheriff, to see what he could do, appointed Herbert Martin a "fugitive from justice," and sent him out with a good start. The dog had Herb up a tree on the north side in no time. The animal is in charge of deputy sheriff Coon at the jail.

APPLES KEPT WELL

Western Michigan Product Noted for Color and Good Keeping Qualities

The Western Michigan Development Bureau says the Traverse City Record-Eagle is in receipt of nine apples which were picked Oct. 21, 1912, which means over a year ago. These apples were grown on the North Manitou Island in the famous Dewhurst orchard. They have been in storage since, as an experiment to discover how long, under favorable conditions the Western Michigan apples can be kept.

It has been known among fruit growers for years that the apples grown in northern Michigan have exceptional keeping qualities. A prominent Michigan fruit grower said some years since, "Apples grown in the upper part of the lower peninsula of Michigan, on high elevations from 500 to 1,000 feet above the Great Lakes, are usually highly colored, of good quality and excellent keepers. The summer apple here becomes a fall apple and the fall apple an early winter apple. Winter apples have been kept in good condition in common cellar for a period of two years. The home of the apple is in the northern states and parts of southern Canada."

The orchards on the North Manitou Island while not having a high elevation, still are favored with climatic conditions which are much the same as prevail where the ground is high above the sea level. The water entirely surrounding the island modifies the climatic conditions to such an extent, that the winters are later and more mild on the mainland and the summers less scorching.

The nine apples received by the Development Bureau are now on exhibition in Traverse City and Manistee banks and are being viewed by hundreds.

The Y. M. C. A. Work

The success of the work of the Young Men's Christian Association in any county will always be limited by the number and ability of its volunteer leaders. Measured by this true standard, the work in Charlevoix county is progressing.

There are today fifteen older boys and men serving as leaders in the work for younger boys. Eight of them are giving six nights a month to the Association work and thirteen of them were undiscovered and undeveloped until the Y. M. C. A. secretary began his work and brought to light this valuable material. As members of the county committee nineteen business and professional men are serving the cause of better manhood in Charlevoix county.

Other leadership is needed and there are men and older boys in all of the towns who could qualify for the service if they would make the sacrifice necessary to accept the responsibility of leadership and the work in the county will grow as one by one the persons capable of leadership accept their responsibility.

Thus far fifteen groups are in operation in the county, two of which are in the country. The leader of one of the rural groups found it rather difficult to get the interest of the parents in his district, and this made it impossible for some of the boys to attend the group meetings at first, but now every boy in the school attends the regular weekly meetings. The leader writes the secretary as follows: "I am willing to pay for the oil and fuel, as I have already done, if I feel that I get more good from the meetings than the boys and leaders I need it more myself than they do. There is no church or Sunday school in this vicinity and weekly meetings furnish these boys their only opportunity for Bible study. In the three towns of the county the leaders are gradually getting control of the problems which confront them and the boys are showing an increasing interest in the Association activities.

On the first Sunday in February will occur the first regular County Leaders Conference. This gathering furnishes an opportunity for the interchange of ideas, the discussion of problems and will tend materially to increase the efficiency of the volunteer leadership.

Some little time ago the following Country Boy's Creed was sent to each rural school as a gift from the International Committee of the Y. M. C. A.

"I believe that the country which God made is more beautiful than the city which man made; that life out of doors and in touch with the earth is the natural life of man. I believe that work with nature is more inspiring than work with the most intricate machinery. I believe that the dignity of labor depends not on what you do but how you do it; that opportunity comes to a boy on the farm as often as to a boy in the city, that life is larger and freer and happier on the farm than in the town, that my success depends not upon my location but upon myself; not upon my chance but upon what I actually do; not upon luck but upon pluck. I believe in working when you work and in playing when you play, and in giving and demanding a square deal in every act of life."

In a short time arrangements will have been completed and the date set for what will be known as County Boy Day, when prizes will be awarded to each boy and girl who has learned the Creed.

The committee plans to continue the work of the Boy's Potato Club and a similar six weeks project matter and enrollment blanks will be mailed to all rural schools. In the second annual contest a different plan will be used in awarding prizes which will insure suitable recognition for every boy who completes the contest, and will also insure a larger number of prizes for boys whose potatoes score at or above fixed standards.

New Election Law Now in Effect

From now the red tape concerning the election has been practically done away with, having been changed at the last session of the legislature. The enrollment features have been discontinued for good.

April 1—Registration day
April 6—Election day.
August 25—General fall primaries.

Within 10 days of primaries the county candidates elect chairman and secretary of county committee of which their party is affiliated.

Within 15 days from primary the county committees are held.

Within 40 days (from primary the state convention must be held.

October 4—Fall registration day.
November 3—Fall election.

PIONEER PASSES ON

Death of Mrs. Amos T. Burnett—Came From Pioneer Family—Was Zealous in Good Works

On Wednesday, just as the day waned into the evening shadows, Mrs. Sarah C., wife of Amos T. Burnett, passed into the beyond. Mrs. Burnett had been in most of the winter, but she was thought to be improving, but a sudden attack of heart failure took her away.

Deceased was born on Mackinac Island sixty-one years ago. She was the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. John Wuggley, among the earliest pioneers of the straits region. The Wuggley family moved to Cross Village in the '50s, where they conducted a large trading business for many years.

In December, 1871, deceased was married to Mr. Burnett, then in the employ of her father. They continued to reside there until September, 1885, when they removed to Charlevoix, which has since been their home. Besides her husband, deceased was the mother of three children—E. A., of Harbor Springs; Mrs. Nellie Hinchey, and H. L., known to his associates as "Bert."

There have been few deaths in this community that brought to it more genuine and general sorrow, as few in life have contributed more joyfully and generously to social and religious tasks that work for uplift and moral advancement. She was always zealous in good works, and in the church of which she early identified herself she was among the first to respond to a call for special effort in those directions. Her home was always an ideal one, and one that throw no dark shadows, but rather, cast its benign influence upon all who entered.

It is needless to say that the sympathy of the entire community is with the bereaved family.

Bellaire Independent: The evidence in the case of John Pond Fisk vs. The Hydraulic Power & Light Co. was completed by Friday noon of last week. In the afternoon counsel for plaintiff argued the case in very able manner, Judge Barton then delivered his charge to the jury, which both sides agreed was entirely fair and free from bias. The jury retired at five o'clock and put in a strenuous hour and a half arriving at the verdict, which was that plaintiff be awarded damages to the amount of six cents and the log law suit which had been the cause of consternation for over a week or more was at an end. As we understand the verdict it means that in the minds of the jury at least the high water which is generally admitted to exist is in a measure caused by the Hydraulic Power & Light Co's dam but that the damage therefrom so far as Fisk's Lodge is concerned is merely nominal.

STRANG'S EMPIRE

Capt. E. A. Burchard Tells of Ruling Mormon King's Stronghold on Beaver Island

Capt. E. A. Burchard, of Cheboygan, a well known veteran lake vessel master, gives the Detroit Free Press the following account of the exodus of the Beaver Island Mormons:

"My first recollection of hearing of the Mormons was in 1852, when as a lad in my teens, I listened horrified to tales of their inhuman treatment of Gentile fishermen at Beaver Island," said Capt. E. A. Burchard, who sailed on the pirate lumbermen in freeing Beaver Island from the tyranny of King Strang and his followers.

"I then vowed that if ever the opportunity presented itself I would take a hand in dealing with these people. I was only 20 years old when I received summons from my older brother, who had promised to keep me posted and who was in charge of one of the brigade hastily organized at Mackinac Island for a raid on the Mormon stronghold.

"I was sailing out of Chicago at the time, and hurried north, reaching Mackinac just as the expedition was embarking. In fact I jumped from the Chicago boat on board the Ella Gordon as the boat was about to start.

"When the Mormons were driven from Nauvoo, Ill., in September, 1845, Joseph Smith and Brigham Young took colonists to Utah and Strang led his followers to Beaver Island, where he founded a kingdom—a veritable pirate nest.

"The Mormons taxed the Gentiles unmercifully, and if they refused to pay the exorbitant levies, brief trial and death being inflicted as punishment.

"The crimes was reached when George Bennett, a fisherman beloved in northern Michigan, was shot for the non-payment of taxes. He was leaving his humble cottage when a band of Mormons set upon him. His body was riddled with bullets, and carried back into his face—this outrage being committed in the presence of his wife and children.

"From this time the feeling against the Mormons became bitter, and steps were taken to down Strang and his tyrannicy. Time and again he was arrested, but no charge could be proved against him.

"Petitions for redress were sent to Washington, the reply to which intimated stated that while the Mormons were recognized as undesirable citizens still there must be specific charges and absolute proof before Uncle Sam could act.

"A full year elapsed before word came from congress that a second petition had been received from Beaver Island and that again evidence was found wanting. However, the government seemed to sympathize, saying: 'We cannot interfere under the circumstances but hope that there are some at home who can.'

"The demand was made, and a full supply of arms and ammunition secured for the expedition.

"It was one morning early in August, 1846, that our party embarked from the island in four schooners, the Cordelia, Maseline, Onsco and Friendship.

"My brother Eli, afterwards lieutenant in the civil war, assumed command of our party, Capt. McKinney remaining behind on his Cordelia. We approached quietly from the rear of the village, and took possession before the other three boats had made their landing.

"There was no resistance. We far outnumbered the Mormon men. They surrendered at once and we took them to Mackinaw, where we were guarded by a strong force. We left the women in the homes to pack their belongings.

"Some of the several thousand people who were and other Gentiles were expecting us. They had banded secretly to wreck the rebel party. On our appearance they ran up from the coves of the Beaver Island, a Mormon newspaper, a flag on which was inscribed,

"Free from the Mormon, Glory to the Gentiles."

"We transported the whole party to Racine, Wis., where a month previous King Strang had died from wounds inflicted the 16th of June by Tom Bedford, a fisherman.

"Strang had become enamored of Bedford's beautiful wife; Bedford resented it. Strang caused his arrest on some trivial charge, and has been accusted to be set adrift to perish in a small boat without oars, sail, or rudder or anything to prevent it.

"Bedford drifted about for hours but was finally picked up by a schooner and taken to Chicago. Later he returned to Beaver Island.

"He secreted himself behind some wood piles and when King Strang and two of his wives, who were entertaining on board the boat, left it, Bedford stepped out and fired three shots at Strang, each of which took effect.

"Bedford was promptly arrested and taken to Mackinac Island, where he was placed in the jail to await trial. Sympathy was so great for persecuted Gentiles and for Bedford in particular, that no formal charge was made against him and he was discharged.

SENTINEL SCORCHED

Five Tuesday Morning Came Near Putting the Pioneer Paper Out of Business For Good

It was not a defective flue, but the carelessness of some unknown party in leaving an open stovepipe hole open in the old Masonic lodge room, that caused the trouble. At seven o'clock in the morning a lively fire below caused a chimney burn-out, which, under ordinary conditions, would have caused no damage. But blazing soot from the upper flue ignited the hardwood. The fire made a persistent and was making good headway when discovered. Of course an immediate alarm was sent in. In ten minutes from the time the alarm went in two lines of hose were stretched and in fifteen minutes water was pouring down into the printing office. No better work was ever done by a fire department anywhere.

The principal damage to the Sentinel plant was from water, and it is fully covered by insurance. The incident has somewhat crippled us this week, and will hurt us next week, owing to type being badly demoralized.

But we are here for a while longer.

Frankfort Patriot: Few of our readers realize the magnitude of the fishery industry in Frankfort. The N. M. T. Co. took out 900,647 pounds, and it is estimated that the Wells Fargo Co. has shipped out about 484,724 pounds, making a total of 1,385,171 pounds, which, at the estimated average price of 6½c per pound makes the total sum thus brought into Frankfort this year from out of state either $185,417.10. Surely a nice sum to be placed in circulation. While some may think these figures are large, we have been very careful in making our estimates to not get them too high, and we have several hundred might be added to all of these figures without stretching the truth in the least.

A Very Manly Attitude

Lieut. Gov. John Q. Ross has made public a letter which he has addressed to the various governorship possibilities and to Republican national committeeman Charles B. Warren, and Rep. Louis C. Cramton, Michigan member of the Republican congressional committee, in which he asks these gentlemen to attend a meeting at the Capitol on Feb. 24, to discuss harmonizing the various factional differences now existing in the Republican party.

While he points out very clearly that under the primary law any man may aspire to the governorship and deprecates doing anything that might be construed as an effort by a few men to control the party organization, the lieutenant governor suggests that the solution of the present situation lies in one man being selected to run for the primary nomination, this man to have the solid support of the others.

Mr. Ross announces his own willingness to abide by any decision arrived at by the conferees and to give his wholesouled support to whoever might be selected to make the run.

Lieut. Gov. Ross acknowledges that he is being importuned to announce his candidacy, but declares that he believes the success of the Republican party is more important than any individual's ambition.

Concerning Injuns

The Cadillac Evening News of Tuesday has a real live Indian, such as lived in this part of the country years ago, has been seen idly roaming the streets of this city during the past few days. He has a long black braid which hang nearly to his waist line. He is stout in an Indian suit, wears moccasins and has a soft slouch hat with a couple of real bright feathers on the side. The Indian appears to be a very quiet sort of a chap and has very little to say about himself to the many inquiries persons have been chance to ask him. Well, now, isn't that nice. This puts Cadillac right on the map as the northern Michigan town. Every village in this part of the state has to have its real live Indian, don't you know. Petoskey feels real puffed up over this valuable addition to Cadillac, for we have two; yes, sir; two real live redskins. Real dirty Ottawa Indians from the good old days of Indian ceremony of northern Michigan. Petoskey Naboe.

Redskins do not always denote the Indian. When Cleveland was elected the first time there were democrats in Charlevoix who decorated their hats with big feathers as a token of their joy. Everywhere, who wears the gray uniform of the U. S. postal service, is the grandson of the late chief Louis Mazawaba, and one of the best city delivery carriers in the state. Dan is an honor to the service and to his tribe.

TWENTY-THIRD ANNUAL MEETING

STATE IMPROVED LIVE STOCK BREEDERS TO MEET IN EAST LANSING.

TWO DAYS' SESSION PLANNED

Convention This Year Is Expected to Be One of the Best Ever Held by the Michigan Association—Lamb Exhibit a Feature.

Lansing.—On January 14 and 15 the Michigan Improved Live Stock Breeders and Feeders' association will hold its twenty-third annual session during the M. A. C. in East Lansing.

This is to be one of the biggest gatherings of live stock breeders in the state, according to George C. Brown, of the animal husbandry department, M. A. C., and secretary of the association. About 1,500 attended.

Noted men from outside the state will speak January 14. The feature will be the mother lamb show. David McKay, of Fort Wayne, Ind., will judge the show.

The following associations will hold their respective meetings the first day in various parts of the agricultural building: Michigan Horse Breeders association, Shorthorn, Holstein, Jersey, Guernsey, Red Poll and Hereford Cattle Breeders, the Duroc-Jersey, Berkshire and Poland China, Swine Breeders, the Merino, Shropshire, Oxford and Hampshire Sheep Breeders. These associations will elect officers and transact their business on the first day of the gathering.

The first general meeting will be called at 2 o'clock p. m., with A. T. Roberts, of Marquette, speaking on the subject of "Live Stock Possibilities of the Upper Peninsula." The same evening the association banquet will be held.

State Banks Barred.

Attorney General Grant Fellows gave E. H. Doyle, state banking commissioner, an opinion that state banks cannot take advantage of the federal reserve act. The attorney general bases his opinion on the following grounds:

Third—Permission given in the federal reserve act to state banks not to surrender the state law which does not permit state banks to hold stock in other banks.

The attorney general cites a number of decisions to sustain his opinion, among them being the "bank guarantee decision" of the federal supreme court, which held that the control of state banks is a power of the police powers of the state.

Urges Fire Protection.

State Fire Marshal John Winship is following the recent disaster at Calumet with a letter to all fire chiefs in the state requesting their cooperation in the work of guarding against a repetition of the disaster.

The letter in part follows:

"The terrible disaster at Calumet on Christmas eve, in which many women and children lost their lives and entire families were wiped out in a few minutes, clearly demonstrated that it is not necessary for an actual fire to occur to cause a panic with awful results. The catastrophe in the northern Michigan city has brought many complaints to the department of unsafe conditions in many public buildings in various cities and towns. In a large number of churches and in many halls and lodge rooms, located on second and third floors, sufficient exits and fire escapes are not included. It is the earnest wish of the Calumet horror in case of a fire or panic.

"I feel certain you will cooperate in the good work and see that conditions in your city, so that never again will the state of Michigan be visited by a life catastrophe which has shocked the entire world, and I am asking you at this time to make a thorough personal inspection of all public buildings in your city."

Superintendents Plan Gathering.

State Superintendent of Public Instruction D. Carl has distributed January 20 as the day for the holding of the annual convention of county superintendents. The convention will be held in Madison. The time and place of meeting will enable the county superintendents to take advantage of the meeting of the country life conference to see the weekly farmers' course.

Apply for Reserve System Banks.

Four more Michigan banks have applied for membership in the federal reserve system, created by the new currency law.

Taxes Relieve Financial Pinch.

Although the state of Michigan has been technically "broke" for some time, the treasury is in better shape than it has been for years, and the state is now over as the state taxes are beginning to pour in and there will be an abundance of cash in the treasury in a few days. Treasurer Steel has $50,000 in state taxes to Auditor General Fuller this morning, the first county to pay in this year. Treasurer of State Treasurer Rasmer shows that there was $127,000 in the general fund.

Articles of Incorporation.

Phoenix Realty company, increased from $20,000 to $40,000; North Flint Realty company, Flint, decrease from $50,000 to $10,000; E. D. Sloan Model Real Estate business, Detroit; Ann Shair, Grace C. Shair and James W. Lomarnac, Detroit and Oxford Gravel & Stone company, Oxford, $50,000, business to be done in Bad Axe; G. A. Gross Lumber company, Petersburg, $10,000.

A sale was recorded which marks the last step in acquiring land on which the University Musical society hopes to erect a $200,000 University School of Music building at Ann Arbor.

The sale recorded was put through when Dr. Sophia Hartley sold her William street homestead to the society for $5000. A few days before this the society had purchased the Wheeler property which joins the Hartley property on the west, and is on the corner of Williams and Maynard streets. The Whiting property cost $7,000.

The purchases give the society 134 feet square, fronting on two streets. The present intention is to use the Hartley house as a car for a school of music while the old building, which is but half a block away, being for the small to accommodate all the pupils. The Whiting house will be moved into the lot and used as a home for the director, and a dormitory will be made out of it, Maynard street. This is the arrangement said to be made at the newly-acquired property; the building is the society shall deem it expedient to carry the proposed new building, which is to cost $200,000 or more.

Acquiring this property makes possible the use of a city block for religious or other church purposes. Because of the Hartley property is the Congregational church, and south of that West half of the University of Michigan. The old athletic office and to that is to be torn down to make room for the Newberry residence hall for men students. Women Students' Christian association building adjoins the Hartley property on the south of that, is the Alpha Xi Delta Chapter house of Christ church.

Want Better Equipment of Guard.

Adjut. Gen. R. C. Vandercook returned from Washington where he attended a conference between representatives of the militia bureau of the states and the war department relative to furnishing better equipment for the militia companies of territory. Major Vandercook says the result of the conference was satisfactory.

According to the plan mapped out at Washington, Congress will be asked to have the appropriation of the war department increased in order to provide better equipment for the artillery batteries of the various states, which a special appropriation will be introduced by a member of the house committee on military affairs.

Major Vandercook says that Congressman Patrick H. Kelley of Lansing is becoming quite a man of affairs at the national capital. He says Congressman Kelley is relentlessly attending all committee meetings and is working hard to get a firm grasp on the problems now before congress. Kelley is one of the most popular members of the Michigan delegation and the invitation which he has received to speak at the annual Michigan banquet at Boston is considered an unusual honor for a new member, according to Major Vandercook.

May Change Divorce Laws.

Declaring that there should be some radical changes in the law relating to marriage, that many divorces are granted by courts that ought not to be granted, that too little "thought" since has been attached to the probate judge, that there is considerable "red tape" in the administration of the law's delay," and that the judicial courts of the state should be more attractive to litigants, Mark W. Stevens, a member of the state constitutional convention, has begun to consolidate and revise the general statutes of the state relative to civil practice and procedure, domestic relations and general taxation, proposed among reforms to be address before the state judges' association.

The commission of which the Ethel attorney is a member is authorized to prepare and report to the governor separate bills for the consolidation and revision of the new statutes.

"There is a great deal of work," said Mr. Stevens, "for a revision and consolidation of the statutes of Michigan. The old statute offers some to that is to be torn down to make room for the Newberry residence hall for men students. Plan to Defeat Good Roads.

Determined efforts are being made by the farmers of the country road system to defeat the plan by putting the proposition to a vote at the spring election in Jackson. To this end petitions in 11 townships and four villages were presented to the board of supervisors, asking that the question be submitted to the people. Petitions filed at the spring election. It is said that petitions from every township in the county will follow.

In the presence of 1,200 persons who crowded the hall of representatives at the state capitol, the official oil portrait of Governor Ferris, painted by Percy Ives, the Detroit artist, was formally presented to the state of Michigan by its business men.

Judge Alfred J. Murphy acted as spokesman for the committee, making the presentation speech. On behalf of the state Chief Justice McGrath gave the Michigan supreme court accepted it.

NO TRUCE IN STRIKE

REFUSAL OF OWNERS TO RECOGNIZE MINERS' UNION AS PARTY TO PEACE IS CAUSE.

U. S. MEDIATOR QUITS TASK

Houghton, Mich., Jan. 7.—Governor Ferris has taken hold of the strike situation in the copper country. With his coming Monday a practical truce went into effect and both sides expressed a willingness to await his findings before initiating new measures in the industrial warfare.

John R. Commons of the department of labor announced on Saturday that his efforts to end the strike of copper miners by conciliation had failed after he had made a final effort to bring the warring factions together.

He did not hesitate to blame his failure upon the uncompromising attitude of the mine owners who refused to recognize the Western Federation of Miners as a party to arbitration proceedings to settle the protests.

"In a nutshell, the question was whether the union men should go back to work with or without protection of law. The companies refused to do anything but discriminate against members of the union," said Mr. Commons.

"It means a struggle to the bitter end," said O. N. Hilton, chief counsel of the Western Federation of Miners, when informed of the result. Chief Justice Moyer here since the labor troubles began, has devoted his entire energy to the attitude of the companies. "They wanted everything and would concede nothing.

"The union's last word was an offer to withdraw the Western Federation from the field, its place to be taken by a union affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, the United Mine Workers, with which the Western Federation of Miners is absolutely at variance. This was rejected absolutely by the companies. Thereupon the negotiations was telegraphed to the secretary of labor by Mr. Commons. He said that he had tried all the efforts made would be made by the secretary of labor to Washington.

The Houghton county grand jury was specifically charged by Judge H. H. O'Brien of the circuit court to investigate the kidnaping of Moyer. Moyer was forcibly deported from his bed and shot.

If the jury believes there is reasonable amount of evidence pointing toward persons connected with the kidnaping, they are to be investigated and indicted." Judge O'Brien charged.

The grand jury is made up of James MacNaughton's chauffeur, Edgar Rye, several mine superintendents and two Socialists. The evidence is being placed before the grand jury by George Nichols, a special prosecutor appointed by Governor Ferris to conduct the investigation.

24 LABOR MEN LOSE

U. S. COURT OF APPEALS SAVE CONVICTED DYNAMITERS MUST SERVE SENTENCES.

CASES OF SIX ARE REVERSED

Frank M. Ryan, President of International Association of Structural Ironworkers Among Hit by Judge at Chicago.

Chicago, Jan. 8.—Frank M. Ryan of Chicago, president of the International Association of Bridge and Structural Ironworkers, must serve seven years' imprisonment in the penitentiary.

This sentence, imposed upon him by United States District Judge A. B. Anderson, at Indianapolis, was on Tuesday affirmed by the United States circuit court of appeals in Chicago. Twenty-three other men convicted with Ryan in connection with the Structural iron workers and sentenced to from two to six years, will also have to go to jail, their cases being affirmed. Sentences imposed on six other men were reversed and their cases remanded to Judge Anderson for another trial.

The opinion in these cases which were out of the dynamite assault, revealed by the confession of the McNamaras, now in San Quentin prison, will read by Judge Anderson.

The following sentences were affirmed by the court of appeals: Six years' imprisonment: Michael J. Bonner, president of Bridge, Structural, Ornamental and Reinforcing iron workers, New Orleans; J. T. Butler, Buffalo; J. E. Munsey, Salt Lake City. Four and a half years' imprisonment: Harry S. Clancy, Four years: F. J. Smith, Cleveland, O.; John H. Harry, St. Louis; Frank Chapman, Pittsburgh; Parnell, Springfield, Ill.

The following other cases where the sentences were reversed and the men ordered for another trial: Alfred T. Troltmon, San Francisco, three years; James E. Ray, Peoria, three years; Fred Sherman, Indianapolis; William Bernhardt, Cincinnati.

Comment upon the decision of the trial which Federal Judge Albert B. Anderson heard at Indianapolis, the court of appeals said:

"The evidence preserved in the bill of exceptions takes several printed volumes, and it is notable that no error is alleged for exclusion of testimony throughout the extended trial except as to the admission of the testimony of the witnesses, McManigal and Clark, who have defendants under the indictment, but testified on behalf of the prosecution.

None of the defendants will be sent to jail at once. Attorneys for the convicted men, William N. Zollne and Peter W. O'Connell, have thirty days in which to apply to the U. S. Supreme court for a writ of certiorari that the cases may be carried to the highest court for review.

UTILITIES ACT IS UPHELD

Supreme Court in Ruling on Kansas Case Says State Must Have Power to Fix Rates.

Washington, Jan. 8.—The right of the Kansas public utilities commission to fix absolutely the rates which the public service corporations might charge their customers, without regard to franchises and contracts existing before the state utilities law was passed, was affirmed by the Supreme court of the United States on Monday. The decision was rendered in a legal fight between the Wyandotte County Gas company and the Kansas public utilities commission over the right of the latter to compel the gas rates. The court was called upon to decide whether contracts made by the company before the state passed a public utilities law could prevent the commission from fixing the rates on gas charged to consumers.

75 MEN DASHED TO DEATH

SELF DELUSION.

Many People Deceived by Coffee.

We like to defend our indulgencies and habits even when we know we are convinced their actual harmfulness.

A man recently confessed that whiskey is good 'or him on a cold morning, or beer on a hot summer day —when he wants the whiskey or beer.

It's the same with coffee. Thousands of people suffer headaches and nervousness year after year but try to persuade themselves the cause is something else—because they like coffee.

"While yet a child I commenced using coffee and continued it," writes a Wis. man, "until I was a regular coffee fiend. I drank it every morning and in consequence had a blinding headache nearly every afternoon.

"My folks thought it was coffee that ailed me, but I liked it and would not admit it was the cause of my trouble, so I stuck to coffee and the headaches stuck to me.

"Finally, the folks stopped buying coffee and brought home Postum instead. They made it right (directions on pkg.) and I had a fine drink of it. Since it would make with my head, and during that week on Postum my headache left me and I felt well.

Interview With Mother-in-Law Probably Would Have Made Things Warm for Mr. Jessup.

At a recent banquet reference was made to the helping hand, which resulted to Gov. Frank M. Fletcher of Oklahoma, an incident that happened in a western town.

One morning a rather commanding looking woman entered a newspaper office, and asked to see the editor. The editor was promptly predicted.

"Up your paper this morning," said the woman, in a cold, hard voice, "you say that Mr. Jessup is a hobo jakey, a swindler, a mud slinger and a crook."

"It is a matter of politics, madame," said the editor, apologetically. "I am very sorry that we were compelled to make statements of that kind. Your account, for I take it that you are a relative—"

"I am his wife's mother," answered the visitor, "and I want to say that you have spoken the truth about all of the truth. The next time you want to publish his biography I wish you would send a reporter to see me."—Philadelphia Telegraph.

ECZEMA BURNED AND ITCHED

263 Walnut St., Hillsboro, Ill.—"My child had a skin trouble on the lower limbs which developed into eczema. The eczema began with pimples which were so red they looked scalded and from the child's clothing they were greatly irritated. They seemed to burn, which made the child scratch them, resulting in a mass of broken pieces. They made her so cross and fretful that it was impossible to keep her quiet. They spread from her knees and ankles and she was constantly tormented by scaly itching eczema.

"I tried several well-known remedies, but got no relief until I got a sample of Cuticura Soap and Ointment, which did so much good that I went to Hillsboro and got them in ten days after she had been affected with the eczema." (Signed) Mrs. Edna Schwartz, Feb. 25, 1913.

"The lights went out, the usual grabbing for favors began, and then, when the lights were up again, Willie was the happiest boy in the room.

"What's the matter Willie? Didn't you get anything?" she asked.

"No," sobbed Willie, pathetically. "Soon as I got dose t'ings that contained man with the brown whiskers—hoo, hoo!—he grabbed my hands and didn't stop kissing them till the lights went up again!"

Zanzibar.

Zanzibar, now favoring as a possible pawn in an Anglo-German deal, was a place of ill fame in the nineties, without paying a heavy price in blood and treasure. The island of cloves was visited for the first time by the British fleet during the nineties of last year, but since then we have kept the upper hand. Very uncomfortable—for the sultan and for the people of Zanzibar. Professor Drummond visited the island in 1891. "Oriental in appearance, Mohammedan in religion, Arabic in speech, a cesspool of wickedness, fit capital for a dark continent." But the British fleet soon put an end to the nightly orgies, and, as Drummond said, "the British cricket team indeed can be beaten only by the combined strength of Mohammed and Bacchus."

WONDERFUL GROWTH OF THE CANADIAN WEST

The Cities of Western Canada Reflect the Growth of the Country.

As ice passes through Western Canada, taking the City of Winnipeg as a starting point, and then keeping to the south of the various cities and towns that lie between the railways that cover the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, and covering the space as the gaze is bent on those lie a fall that there must be "something of a country" behind it all. Then gaze any direction you like and the same view is presented. Field after field of waving grain, thousands and hundreds of thousands of them. Farm hands and laborers are at work converting the virgin prairie into more fields. Pasture land in every direction on which cattle are feeding, thriving and fattening on the grasses that are rich in both milk and beef properties, but it is unfortunate that more cattle are not seen. That, however, is a corresponding fault. There we have in a large measure the evidence of the wealth that has been laid up in cities, and it should not be forgotten that the cities themselves have assisted in producing this, who have come from other parts, and brought with them the experience that has taught them to avoid the mistakes of eastern and other cities. Men who are imbued with the western spirit of enterprise, energy and push, and accordingly success has been the result. A banquet recently given in Chicago, a number of years ago, to the City of Winnipeg were guests. Among the speakers was Mr. Hill, president of the road. In speaking of the remarkable growth of that city, which in Canada ranks as the third from a population of 2,000 to one of 200,000, he spoke of it as being the "wonder of Canada and of the continent."

"Now, how great that tide of commerce, which is the natural expression of when I tell you that the wheat alone grown in the Canadian Northwest this year is sufficient to keep a steady stream of one thousand bushels of wheat continuously night and day going to the head of the lakes for four months, and that not on the acre of land in the Canadian Northwest is the wheat crop the greatest of all crops." "The value of the grain crop alone to the farmers of the prairie provinces would be sufficient to build any of our large transcontinental lines, and all their equipment, everything complete, and have a balance."

"Now, I ask you are able to do this with only ten per cent of our arable land under cultivation what will our possibilities be when 50,000,000 of acres of the best land that the sun shines on are brought under the plow? Do you not see the portent of a great, vigorous, prosperous nation? Do you not see the portent of a great, vigorous, prosperous nation? THE GRANGE

NATIONAL GRANGE

Digest of Acts, Resolutions and Reports of Public Interest Adopted by the National Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, at its Forty-seventh Annual Session at Manchester, N. H.

A greatly extended and improved parcel post, and some reform and simplified postal savings banks and the lending of their accumulated funds to farmers are demanded.

Invitations for the next meeting of the national grange were received from Illinois, Missouri, New York and Delaware. Delaware was selected. California will probably be the convention state in 1915, when the Panama exposition is on.

The total assets of the national grange Oct. 1, 1912, were $969,967, and the total assets Oct. 1 1913, were $969,2304. The total expense during the fiscal year was $46,563.34, of which $14,000 was used directly for extension work.

The national grange favors loaning the money deposited in postal savings banks directly to farmers and home builders at a low rate of interest sufficient to pay the cost of the business, following so far as practicable the plans to successfully operated in Europe and under the necessary restrictions to insure safety.

The committee on foreign relations recommended—the establishment of free ports in the United States in order that the Panama canal might receive the greatest benefit from the Panama canal, especially since parts of the coast of the said canal, and congress was urged to take such steps as will secure the establishment of such ports. It further expressed approval of President Wilson's course in the Mexican situation, and the secretary of the national grange was instructed to inform the president that the national grange tendered his position in the Mexican matter.

The following officers were elected: master, Oliver Wilson of Illinois, overseer, W. H. Varz New York; lecturer, O. W. A. Gasser of New Jersey; steward, P. C. Bancroft of Delaware; assistant steward, J. A. Sherwood of Connecticut; chaplain, A. P. Reader of Kansas; treasurer, Mrs. E. S. Morse of Massachusetts; secretary, C. M. VAST QUANTITIES OF HARDWOOD FOR MICHIGAN CHEMICAL PLANTS

When the visitor comes to Cadillac, especially in the summer time, there is considerable of interest to show him but nothing attracts more attention than one of the big piles of four foot hardwood found near any of the chemical plants. The one shown in the accompanying illustration is seen from the South boulevard road, which extends around Lake Cadillac, a driveway of nine miles in length.

"Great Caesar!" is the exclamation "what a lot of stove wood that would make. It would last me a lifetime." When told the wood is not for burning purposes, but that it is used as the raw material for chemicals the visitor is likely to declare that it is a shame to use such fine wood for any other purpose than keeping warm in a cold country.

This pile of wood contains 10,000 cords, and is constantly being decreased through the dryers going into the chemical plant, and increased from the Cobbs & Mitchell company's camps in Charlevoix county. Through a system of heating and distillation the company gets from the wood acetate of lime, wood alcohol and other commercial chemicals. The wood as found in the huge pile, if used as fuel, would scarcely burn more than $4.50 a cord while when it has gone through the various operations in the plant it is said to net the stockholders of the company never less than $17 a cord.

The chemical plant of the Cadillac companies, three in number, are said to produce one-tenth of all the wood alcohol manufactured in this country, and one-sixth of all the acetate of lime. Acetate of lime is the main ingredient in the manufacture of gunpowder. Thus it is even this wood is the delve of peace prevail over the grim god of war, one of Cadillac's big institutions would be sort of flattened out.

Missaukee County's Gain.

Of the 20 counties in the western and northwestern part of Michigan, Missaukee county showed the greatest gain per cent. in the value of farm property in the years from 1909 to 1910, and in the increase in the value of farm lands. The former increased 21.2 per cent., the latter 23.1 per cent. The average value of farm land in this county in 1910 was per acre in this county in 1910 was $17.37, an increase of 9.25 per acre in ten years. Only 38.8 per cent. of this county's land area was in farms in 1910, and only 41.3 per cent. of its farm lands was improved.

In 1910 there were 9,952 cattle on Missaukee county farms and ranges, 2,318 horses, and 2,362 swine, 3,931 sheep, 835 colonies of bees, and 45,210 dozen of poultry.

In the last three years great advances have been made in agricultural and grazing interests, many farms have been cleared and many more head of cattle and horses have been put on the ranges. Like Clare county, Missaukee county is well adapted to grazing, and many westerners are coming here with their sheep.

The growing of potatoes have been an especial help to the easier of settlers in this county. Even a poor farmer can make good usually in the first year with that crop. Jaime Blaker, near Lake City, secured 4,500 bushels from seven acres last season. He sold early at 50 cents a bushel, and the amount he realized would pay for the average farm in this section. John Ellens of this county harvested on his average of 200 bushels this fall, which meant $120 an acre, not bad for even the best land in the state. Missaukee county is full of farmers who do as well or better with their potatoes.

Turpentine Plant Closed.

The plant of the Cadillac Turpentine company has been closed down because of the poor season, and the chance of its being reopened before next June are very poor. The price of the turpentine made at the mills in this county in 1910 was 9.25 per gallon, and the increase in the value of farm lands. The former increased 21.2 per cent., the latter 23.1 per cent. Cadillac Man After Oil.

Thos. Cadillac and Walter Coventry will shortly start a boom similar to that which took place when lumbering operations were started in this city. They are in the opinion of the group of local men who are expending $10,000 to sink an oil well, to definitely and finally determine whether or not there is a paying quantity of oil under Wexford county soil.

For several years it has been thought that this section of Michigan is well supplied with oil and when Girl Earns an Education.

If Miss Tom Hubberman, whose home is near Hudsonville, does not make her mark in the world, it will not be because she has not the grit to carry out any great plan she may take up. She wants to go to Holland to school, beginning next term, and remain there a year and a half. Her father will do what he can, and she sells of the potatoes grown on six acres it and intends to earn the rest herself. She has already saved up $100 and that he would give her $25 to paint the big barn. The potatoes were dug and crated earlier this fall than ever before, and the weather has been so favorable this year that the barn was painted before December 15. She did all the work of painting the barn, except the painting of the heavy ladder, when her brother helped her. Tom says she is looking for other men's jobs on school opens, when she will have enough money for a permit to go to school for a year and a half while she is in high school course. The girl

Adjacent to this farm are 800 acres of pine slashings which from year to year Prickett hopes to improve on and add to his already valuable farm. SAMUEL UNTERMYER ASKS FEDERAL BODY TO RULE AS CURB TO COMBINES.

CENSURES "ONE MAN" IDEA

Pujo Inquiry Counsel, Speaking in Chicago, Requests Executive Commission to Administer Law in Remedy—Cites Standard Oil Case.

Chicago, Jan. 7.—A powerful federal body to administer the Sherman anti-trust law is the prime remedy for the country's financial ills according to the statement of Samuel Untermyer on Monday at a luncheon of the Illinois Manufacturers' association here. Mr. Untermyer was the counsel for the Pujo committee, which recently investigated the "money trust." The subject of his address was "A Legislative Program to Restore Business Freedom and Confidence."

Mr. Untermyer ridiculed the court "dissolution" of the Standard Oil trust as "flagrant sham," with no restoration of competition among the component companies. He also gave warning against lodging in the attorney general the power of negotiating consent decrees" like that which has broken up the American Telephone & Telegraph company.

There must be, however, he said, an executive authority to assist the courts and the attorney general in the practical application of laws to liberate business from the throttling of illegal combinations, and this authority the Underwood bill would give to the industrial commission. The speaker did not recommend any plan for the reorganization of the commission.

Mr. Untermyer directed the attention of the business men who heard him to the fact that anti-trust legislation at length is the result of congress in a spirit of patriotism and not in the attitude of hostile criticism which characterizes utterances by banking organizations and individuals because before the passage of the income tax and currency measures.

In addition to a law for the industrial commission, Mr. Untermyer said congress should pass bills embodied in the 22 recommendations of the Pujo committee, dealing with banks, interlocking directorates, stock exchanges, clearing houses and the administration of the Sherman act.

At one point, talking about "domination" directors, he referred to the withdrawal of the house of Morgan from participation in the affairs of 28 corporations and said it is "most unsubstantial."

BRITAIN SHIFTS SIR CARDEN

London, Jan. 7.—Sir Lionel Carden, British ambassador to Mexico, is shortly to be transferred to the same office at Brazil. Although no reason for the transfer of Sir Lionel Carden recalls the fact that a recent interview with Sir Lionel at Mexico City will probably be Charles Murray Meriboy, senior counselor to the British diplomatic service, now accredited to Turkey. Although no reason for the change is given at the foreign office the transfer of Sir Lionel Carden reveals several instances of friction with Washington since he has been at Mexico. Sir Lionel's recent interview in action in presenting his credentials to Huerta on the day President Woodrow Wilson had formally communicated to the Mexican ruler his determination never to recognize his government. Another was a published interview in which the British minister was quoted as saying the American representatives in Mexico "did not understand conditions."

SOLVES A BIG ROADBUILDING PROBLEM.

Kalkaska county was one of the first in Michigan to solve the problem of handling big crews on roadbuilding jobs. The county road commissioners in this county, having experienced some difficulty in finding places to lodge their men near the work, hit upon a plan of buying a camping outfit and locating their men right upon the job. They supplied themselves with tents for dining room, bunk house, foreman's office and cook house, and these are furnished so as to keep the men in good working trim. When a piece of road is to be improved the camp is made by the side of the highway. If it is a mile strip, the camp is put as near the center of the mile as practicable so that every little company will be but a few rods from the day's work. The above picture shows the Kalkaska camp located at Rugg, where a mile of macadam road was being constructed.

MARKETING THE FRUIT

DEVELOPMENT BUREAU POINTS WAY FOR GROWER.

Specialist Shows How Trees Should Be Pruned, Sprayed and Cultivated, and How Products Should Be Marketed.

One of the tasks which the Western Michigan development bureau has taken over is that of aiding that the orchard products of the Western Michigan country go to market in better condition than they ever have in the past. To accomplish this end, it has hired expert orchard men and sent them to the fruit growers, that they might explain how trees should be pruned, sprayed and cultivated, in order to get the best crops and how when once the crops had been harvested. It is necessary to sort the fruit and pack it in suitable packages and in the most approved way. Three men have been employed by the bureau the greater part of the present fall in this practical work, and in consequence a very material improvement in the Western Michigan fruit pack, particularly the apple pack, is noted.

It was the custom in the years gone by for the apple growers to fill the interior of the barrels with products inferior to that which could be picked from a tree and then to top the barrel with fine large apples. But according to the new rules, the barrel has to be filled with the best apples from top to bottom and the top apples must not overexpand those in the interior of the barrel.

Pay for purpose of improving the pack of the fruit crop, the development bureau has adopted a brand name and a line of package rules. The special name is "Sunnyripe" and all apples bearing the "Sunnyripe" label are guaranteed to be of fancy quality. Many barrels have been packed this season according to the "Sunnyripe" specifications and these now bear this label.

The above pictured barrel is filled with Wolf River apples grown in Kimmet county. It shows what the Wolf River apple will do in Northern Michigan when given a reasonable amount of attention. But twelve apples were necessary to completely fill the top of the barrel.

HEADS UNIQUE ORCHARD PLAN

Hill Crest Fruit Farms Become a Success Under Presidency of W. K. Earle.

W. K. Earle is farm superintendent of the Hill Crest Fruit farms, located in Hesperia, Ottawa county. This enterprise is fast becoming a large one. Mr. Earle is a newspaper man, having graduated in Chicago some years since. He went West as many other young men have done and in Oregon learned the orchard game, particularly the handling of fruit trees as a commercial proposition.

Returning to the East, he became associated with a number of Chicago men and helped organize the Fruit Farms association. This association is different from all others, in that it is as much a co-operative organization as can easily be formed. The promoters evolved, an entirely new plan, and under Mr. Earle's aggressive management are working it to a position successful. The association each man buys his own land and has as many acres as he desires to put there upon and improve. Then the improving, the tree setting, cultivating and spraying, is done by a single crew under Mr. Earle's directing, each land owner being shown such improvements made as he desires and paying his share of the expense.

At the present time the farmers in the association are cultivating about 650 acres. In 1913 220 acres were set to fruit. Most of this acreage is devoted to apples, but some half, especially pear trees, given over to cherries. The five acres used for cherries were set to peach trees as an expert need. Six varieties of apples have been chosen for the apple orchards, these being Jonathan, Wealthy, Northern Spy, Baldwin, Rome Beauty, Melinda, Spy, Wagener and Wealthy. For sour cherries Early Richmond and Montmorency have been selected, and for sweet cherries Bing, Lambert and Royal Ann.

The trees were brought from Oregon, because Mr. Earle believes that Oregon trees are of a better quality than any he could get nearer by. The apple trees were one year old, the sweet cherry trees, and the sour cherry trees were two years old at the time of setting. Mr. Earle reports the loss of trees to be less than two per cent.

While the trees are coming into bearing, potatoes and beans are being grown between the tree rows. The cultivation necessary to produce potatoes and beans is beneficial to the trees, provided as much fertility is supplied as is taken out by the crops, and this the Hill Crest people are planning upon doing.

Using Young Trees.

It is only in exceptional cases that it can be considered a good plan to fill an orchard with young trees. In a majority of cases it will be advanced by the former growth.

Putting Fat on Lambs

If ten lambs are to be fattened for sale on a farm there will be some of them which will learn to eat it and feed grain continuously with good pasture until they go to the block.

Keep Mares for Breeding.

It is often well enough to sell the fillies and colts, but it is not done so an advantage, but it is usually a mistake to sell the best mares, keep them for breeding.

Cayenne Pepper to Fowls.

A poultry raiser at Domremy, France, has discovered that by mixing cayenne pepper with the food of fowls their plumage turns pink, which results in a vivid scarlet when cooked, and thus fetches a much higher price.

Small Fruit.

Currants and gooseberries will thrive in almost any soil and will stand considerable neglect and yet yield fair crops of fruit.

Hens Return Big Profits.

One of the exchanges publishes an account of two men who cleared more than two dollars each from hens during the past year, selling profits of 100 per cent. One of the men made about $1,000 on 600 hens and the other about $1,000 on 700 hens.

Radium and its Manufacture. Although until recently the manufacture of radium has been carried on almost wholly in France and Germany, there appears to be no good reason why our American Carnotite should not be treated at home, says a writer. Carnotite is much more easily treated than pitchblende and the essential features of methods for its chemical treatment are well known, although much of the mechanical detail of operation has been kept secret. As the mechanical requirement, however, are those which any well grounded chemical engineer should be able to solve, there seems to be no good reason why any of our carnotite ores should be shipped abroad, even at two or three tons the present market price of the material.

FOILING THE WILY BURGLAR

Musical Safe Is the Latest Scheme to Prevent Modern Bill Sikes Gaining Dishonest Living.

Nowadays the safe thief must be a highly intelligent aspect. The old time type of burglar has passed.

Every year the work of the professional safebreaker becomes harder and more fraught with danger. Music must now form a part of the training, says London Answers.

The latest type of safe has no locks, timepiece dials or different keys for locks or keyholes. Instead, there is a light stringed wire, which responds to its own musical note. The wire is connected with an electric battery to the safe door, and so long as the sound a tuning fork or a note on a piano, organ or trumpet is sounded the same way as the wire. When the note is sounded the current vibrates and turns on the current which operates the locking mechanism.

The wire can be tuned to any instance, necessitating, of course, the

MOST ANCIENT DRAWING OF HUMAN FACE

WHAT is declared by its discoverers to be the three known depiction of a human being has just been unearthed in France. It is the rude figure of a prehistoric monster's bone. According to those who dug it up it is at least 10,000 years old, dating back to the so-called Aurignacian age.

If they are right in their contentions and the strange drawing was actually made by an artist in his prehistoric "studio," it materially strengthens the theory that our ancestors, instead of possessing the apish features the type found at Neanderthal, Spy, and La Chappelle-aux-Saints, were creatures with skulls resembling that found at Piltdown, England, but declared by some to have had a brain development greater than that of present-day man.

This remarkable discovery was made on October 1 last in the cave of La Colombiere, beside the River Ain, in southern France, by Dr. Lucien Mayet, professor of human paleontology at the University of Lyon, and M. Jean Pissot of Poncin, a town close to the cave. The official report of the great find was read to the Paris Academy of Science by M. Louville and summarized at length in Le Illustration.

The cave of La Colombiere is reached on the right bank of the Ain, about 30 meters above the present level of that river. Between Poncin and Montluel-sur-Ain, as long ago as 1876 a scientist, Mr. Meyret, called attention to it as having been inhabited in prehistoric times. Ever since numerous investigators have visited it. They conducted their investigations so assiduously that the level of the cave formed during the Neanderthal period, which more like that of the pensioner of the Piltdown skull than that of the apelike "Neanderthal man" and his congeners. The nose, it will also be noted, is very similar to that of the Marsoulas man, likewise the heavy chin.

So much for the contentions of the Frenchmen who have made this remarkable find. Backed up though they are by good arguments, it is not likely that they will be swallowed without a struggle. On the contrary, they will probably be the cause of still another controversy to add to the already stormy annals of anthropology. For there is undoubtedly another side to the question.

First, as to the pictures just found of La Colombiere. In spite of the fact that those similar to them—including the human faces of the cave of Marsoulas—are general" ascribed by Frenchmen not to the Aurignacian but to the later Magdalenian age, others think them productions of Aurignacian artists. If this latter theory is accepted, the "man" of La Colombiere is simply one more to add to the nearly gallery of Aurignacian depictions of human beings. Even if he proves to be that and nothing more, he will be accounted a precious find, but naturally his value will not be so enormous as those who have found him and those who share their views would have us believe.

Second, as to whether the "man" of La Colombiere proves that we are descended from the Neanderthal-Spy-La Chapelle-aux-Saints race or the race represented by him of the Piltdown skull, the question is, that he may be neither as ape as they look to the sanguine Frenchmen. Plenty of learned men who have studied the subject of the descent of man are of the opinion that man may be descended from one race or from interlocking groups they contend that both of these races may have become extinct and that mankind sprang, perhaps, from some race which appeared later.

The latest news from abroad shows that the man of La Colombiere has already set learned tongues to wagging against each other. Already Messrs. Mayet and Pissot, the savants who found him, have a hornet's nest about their ears. A correspondent of London Illustrated News, writing in that illustrated London News, has placed himself on record as free to the belief that he of La Colombiere is the earliest picture of a man. Mr. Williams' idea is that we have to do here not with a faithful delineation of the human form but with a caricature. He writes:

"As Messrs. Mayet and Pissot say, the drawing is very clear, especially the face and upper part of the head. The back of the head and the neck do not seem to me very well defined in the photograph.

"The discoverers speak of this drawing as having some of the characteristics represented by the Neanderthal, Spy, or La Chapelle-aux-Saints skulls. In their opinion, the head resembles the small skull of Chancelade. They say:

"'The head is large, the forehead round and prominent (bombe), the face slightly obliquely. The face is long as though pulled out from behind toward a well distinctly projected forward; the chin is prominent, and has a short beard indicated by small lines; the nose is long and very wide; the eyes are large, the ears well formed, and has an indefinite expression.

"In this detailed description it is quite evident that Dr. Mayet and M. Pissot believe that we have here something in the nature of a realistic drawing of Aurignacian man. This is confirmed by their further statement that we have not previously found any engraved figures of such as any; this definite about the exact form of contour of the human head. Engraved figures of earlier periods, and that this want has now been filled by this discovery.

"With these statements and conclusions I find it impossible to agree. The well and two other engravings of the human face have been previously discovered, one in the Grotte des Fees in the Dordogne, and the other in the Grotte Gourdan at Les Eyzies (Dordogne.)

"I think it will be clearly seen that the great interest in this new discovery lies not in the belief that it is unique, but in the fact that it is not unique. It is a matter of the deepest interest to find in three three drawings certain identical conventions. The general shape of the head, nose, and chin is the same in all of them. The way in which the mouth is placed is the same in the two which show the mouth, and what our discoverers speak of as the 'indefinable expression of the eye' is produced by identical lines in all three engravings.

"All of this suggests several things, among which we may suggest that the Colombiere drawing can hardly be means to represent any particular individual; it is hardly possible that it was intended for a realistic production. It may be a mere outline effort, such as a child would make, or it may be a deliberate convention with a meaning of which we are ignorant. If the drawing from the Grotte Gourdan is a human face, it is probably intended to be funny and grotesque, serious flattery, or indifference, or fear, or gait, anxious flattery, or indifference, or fear, or gait, anxious flattery, or indifference, or fear, or gait, anx

The morning train going south arrives at 9:50 instead of 10:40. The afternoon train going south arrives at 2:20, the same as formerly; afternoon train going north 4:47—late evening train discontinued.

There are four "double holidays" this year. Decoration day and Fourth of July both come on Sunday. Washington's birthday comes on Sunday, which makes the following Monday the legal holiday, and Labor day is Monday, Sept. 7. Thanksgiving day is Nov. 26 and Christmas and New Year's day are each on Friday. Ash Wednesday is Feb. 25 and Easter Sunday is April 12, just two weeks later than last year.

Just show us why northern Michigan is not specially favored by nature. Denver had four feet of snow two weeks ago, completely paralyzing business; far famed California has recently had a cold snap that caused damage amounting to millions of dollars; the record thus far gives eastern Michigan low temperature and damaging storms. In Charlevoix, barring one brief blizzard and two zero nights the winter has been like spring, and automobiles have been running without interruption. Show us.

"If the American people would stop masticating dreadnoughts at the rate of three a year, and if they would cease drinking down two hundred battleships annually in the form of booze, the reign of world peace would be ushered in." Such was the contention of Hudson Maxim, the great inventor, who spoke at the "Peace" services held in New York the other day. He then called the attention of his audience to the fact that $30,000,000 is spent annually in the United States for chewing gum, and $2,000,000 is absorbed in alcoholic beverage. These sums would build several dreadnoughts and about two hundred battleships—vessels which would keep the peace by threatening everybody with war and ruin.

Grandeur of All.

"What is the greatest thing in the universe?" asks Victor Hugo. "A storm at sea," he answers and continues: "And what is greater than a storm at sea? The contended heaving on a starry, moonless night. And what is stranger than these midnight skies? The soul of man." A spectacle climax such as Hugo loved and still with all its dramatic effects, the pulsating movement of a vast and sublime and mighty truth.

Unfortunate.

"What are you crying for, Peter?" "Became I am so unfortunate."

"How do you mean unfortunate?"

"Well, teacher told us that there was 1,500,000,000 people in the world, and by gold I was the most stupid of them all."—Bergsvale Lurifer.

Last week M. A. Lovinson bought the interest of his mother, Mrs. Dante, in the dry goods and clothing store in the Lovinson block, conducted under the firm name of M. A. Lovinson & Co. Meyer A. Lovinson has leased the store for another year and will continue the business.

The pupils of St. Mary's school promise a treat to their mates attend "Dorothy" at the Charlevoix theater, Friday evening, Jan. 30. They will be assisted by the music pupils, and the Misses Irene Finnegan and Mildred Sweet, violinist, of East Jordan. Tickets at the popular prices may be had at the Central drug store or from the ladies of St. Mary's church.

J. A. Cameron, who has been very ill for the past two weeks with nervous trouble, is now convalescing rapidly. He wishes to thank his friends for their kindness during his illness. Mr. Cameron says he never realized he had so many friends; the ladies of the Eastern Star, and even little Miss Flora Dutton remembering him with flowers, which he deeply appreciates; Van Loan Bifflesnorp has very ably assisted Mrs. Cameron during her husband's illness.

A United States flag not less than four feet two inches by eight feet and bearing good dry lime, a white coat and the necessary appliances, are essential articles of school equipment, according to the state law and school officials who neglect to supply them are liable to fine and imprisonment or both. The law also provides that the flag must be displayed either inside or outside the school building during school hours. A this law has been disregarded in so many districts because of the carelessness or indifference of school officials, an effort is being made by the department of public instruction to have county commissioners and teachers insist upon the furnishing of a suitable flag and its display according to law. In one enterprising rural school the girls' sewing class has made the flag for the school as domestic art work.

TRUNKS OF ELEPHANTS.

They Serve Many Purposes and Take the Place of Hands.

Elephants are interesting because they have such varied feelings, such a wide range of intelligent appreciation. Dumbness this is in part due to the possession in the trunk of an organ the development of which has itself provoked development of brain power. Very great brain power could not have been developed as an accompaniment merely of hoofs; hands, however imperfect, were necessary or something else that would serve as a partial substitute for hands.

By watching a herd of elephants any one can speedily see the large range of uses to which the trunk is put and the large range of moods and emotions which it discloses and satisfies. Dur ing overtaxing the trunk and coiling one another with their trunks. Elephants are very curious, and the trunks are used to test every object which arouses their curiosity. The eye is constantly fondling and guiding the trunk, which feels, smells, tastes, and touches. The trunk is used to gather every species of food and to draw water. It is used to squirt dust or water over the body. It is used to feel rotten and dangerous ground. It is in constant use to try the wind so as to guard against the approach of any foe.

As one watches the great beasts the trunks continually appear in the distance them, snuffing, twisting, feeling each breath of air. Now and then a great ear is flapped. Now and then the weight of the body is slightly shifted from one colossal leg to another. The bone boasts are rarely exercised, but the muscle boasts are constantly in use. Not are they long silent, for noble from unoiled sockets or growls and sometimes shrill cries have conveyed intense meanings. Their eyes are very bad. Like the rhino, they can only see as a very nearsighted man sees. At a distance of eight yards or so, when in my dull colored hunting clothes, I could walk slowly toward them or stand in profile without their discovery.—Theodore Roosevelt in Scribner's Magazine.

PILGRIMS IN INDIA.

Of course pilgrims in India usually travel third class, and the best of such accommodations makes no pretension for comfort. Most of the carriages are divided into small cubicles, with long narrow wooden benches running along the two sides. There is no convenience for sleeping, and the travelers are packed into the compartment like sardines in a box.

On festive occasions, when Hindoo history is the hundred thousand to the sacred spots, it is a sight worth traveling many miles to see a pilgrim train bound for some shrine on the Ganges. When it stops at a way-side station scores of intending passengers try to force their way into the already crowded third-class carriages by battering down the locked doors or even endeavoring to crawl through the windows over the heads and shoulders of the occupants. The police use their batons freely to drive the intruders away, but usually a few manage to evade the constables and secure a foothold on the train.

Sometimes the authorities are compelled to carry passengers in goods trucks. They joint themselves in the bottom of these cars and remain there exposed to the intemperties of the weather for two, twenty, thirty, forty hours at a stretch, not heeding on the loss of the other—fortful babies crying, sick, aged women crouching—and the end of the journey is reached.—Wide World Magazine.

Education and Suicide.

The American Pessimistic doctrine that suicide increases with education and civilization and cities, "It has been said that the spread of the alphabet extended with that of self murder. For savage savagery has some life in it. Barbs, Bands and Spirits, which the stimulus of education is to low the fervent suicides on the continents of Europe only, while in France and Germany, where the people are more sensitive and refined and where the standard of morality is higher, the percentage is much increased."

Parental Effort.

"What are you working so hard for?"

"I want to provide for my boy's future." replied Farmer Corntassel. "I want to leave enough wealth so that I can save from the farm for a gold course."—Washington Star.

BEET GROWERS HAVE GOOD YEAR

CROP IS RICHER IN SUGAR

Report of W. H. Wallace Shows Big Increase Over 1912—Plant at Caro Slices the Greatest Tonnage.

Lansing.—In 1913 farmers who contracted for acreage with the Michigan Sugar company grew more money than for the corresponding period of a year ago, according to figures made public by General Manager W. H. Wallace.

The amount paid was $2,577,565.29. The number of tons of beets sliced does not show the increase as does the money paid, as the contracts calling due to the fact that the beets contained a higher sugar percentage. The yield was also better per acre.

The factory at Caro sliced the greatest tonnage, and the Sebewaing plant, which sliced 4,000 tons less yield and better product, Mr. Wallace made public the following summary of the year's business:

Alma	56,000	$ 94,000.00
Bay City	86,000	1 44,000.00
Caro	1,000,000	1,677,000.00
Croswell	95,000	159,600.00
Sebewaing	56,000	94,000.00

Foreign Students to Visit Michigan.

Seven years ago the Cosmopolitan club of the University of Michigan was organized and the Michigan union the event was celebrated with a banquet at which the secretaries of the boards of commerce of the various Michigan cities were guests of honor.

Dr. James B. Angell, president emeritus of the university, who will have been one of the speakers, but the extreme cold weather precluded his leaving his home, as a courtesy he affixed his autograph to the menu cards, which each of the 100 diners will keep as souvenirs.

President Hamilton gave an address followed by Juan B. Bonilla, of California, Columbia, president of the club; P. Wang, of Tien Shanghai, China, spoke upon "What the Foreign Student Has Meant to Michigan." Secretary Lee Bierce, of Grand Rapids, told "What the State of Michigan Has to Offer the Foreign Student," and in this connection and acting for the other commercial secretaries of the state he tendered a formal invitation to the foreign students to make a tour of inspection of the manufacturing plants of the state as guests of the secretaries.

This trip will be made in April and will include stops at Jackson, Battle Creek, Kalamazoo, Grand Rapids, Muskegon and Lansing.

Jackson could not send a representative, but sent a congratulatory telegram and an urgent invitation to the foreign students to join the spring trip. Secretary Byers H. Gitchell, of Detroit, telephoned that he would be unable to attend because of illness, but invited the club members to be the guests of the aircraft club in Detroit January 31. At that time Mr. Gitchell will open the Detroit Board of Commerce to the club.

Professor James F. Hird was toastmaster and following the program of speeches there was a musical program in which William James, of Capiznon, South Africa, and Y. F. Z. Hsu, of Shanghai, China, gave several selections from the Mikado, in costume. Kenneth Westerman, of Adrian, was chief.

State's Expenses Steadily Increase.

That the expense of maintaining the state government has increased enormously in the past 13 years is shown by figures compiled by Auditor General Fuller, which show that the fact that it cost $1,470,333.16 more in 1913 than in 1900.

In 1900 the expenses of the state government were $1,470,333.16. The figures for the other years, including 1912, are as follows: $1,586,159.59 in 1901; $1,624,037.96 in 1902; $1,618,286.22 in 1903; $1,622,266.22 in 1904; $1,724,656.09 in 1905; $2,034,223.19 in 1906; $2,118,025.67 in 1907; $2,390,464.81 in 1908; $2,316,223.19 in 1909; $2,320,706.70 in 1910; $2,320,470.70 in 1911; $2,570,805.55 in 1912; $2,463,179.04 in 1913.

Gov. Ferris Names Commissioners.

Acting upon the recommendation of the circuit court, Governor Ferris has appointed the following as jury commissioners for Kent county: Frank G. Pulte, William J. Graham and Vincent H. Scherer of Grand Rapids; Martin Cobb of Bowne township, and Charles H. Chase of Alpine township.

Michigan Good Alfalfa State.

It is declared by sales agents of farm implement and motor vehicle distributing companies that Michigan within the next five years will be one of the most fertile fields in the United States for the manufacture of alfalfa harvesting tools. The alfalfa culture in this state is yet in its infancy, but through the investigations of the heads of the extension department of the M. A. C. and the coaxing of alfalfa culture by implement men, the crop is found to become one of the state's agricultural staples.

Elect Grand Rapid's Woman.

Mrs. William F. Blake of Grand Rapids was named representative from the Fifth congressional district by the Michigan Suffrage association, which closed the meeting in Kalamazoo. A state bulletin will be issued monthly, telling of the work throughout the state. Mrs. Frank Wheeler of Hillsdale was named chairman of the publicity committee. She will raise her own funds to conduct the work.

Convict 114 Game Violators.

The Michigan state game, fish and forestry department report 117 complaints investigated against the game and fish laws during the month of December.

Of 125 complaints investigated the department secured 114 convictions. Game wardens and fish wardens collected to $1,832.40.

During the month of December there were 82 violations of the game laws and 33 violations of the fish laws.

Favor Eight Hour Day.

Secretary William Kane, of the Michigan conference of bricklayers, plasterers and masons, announced that the unions throughout the state which for the last two weeks have balloting on whether to adopt an eight-hour day instead of the nine-hour day, had voted almost unanimously in favor of an eight-hour day. The order will become effective May 1. It will affect about 1,500 bricklayers throughout the state, the other 2,500 working men having for some time been on the eight-hour basis.

State Anti-Saloon Meeting.

Plans for a puller of state effort, consistent with the campaign for national prohibition, and a program for 16 conventions, Michigan county campaigns, are to be considered at a state convention of temperance forces which convenes for a two days' session in Lansing on January 20. Non-sectarian clergymen and laymen, and other temperance workers of the state will be represented at the convention to the possible number of 700. The convention, under the auspices of the Anti-Saloon league of Michigan, will be held in Central Methodist church with sessions Wednesday night and Thursday. R. H. Scott of Lansing is state president.

The opening session of the convention on Wednesday evening will be addressed by Dr. J. A. Vance of Detroit, Dr. P. A. Baker of Columbia, and Dr. T. A. Cairns, a noted Socialist of Newark, N. J.

The second day's program will include E. K. Warren of Three Oaks, John P. Ketchum of Hastings, Walter S. Foster of Lansing, Rev. M. K. Meader of Coldwater, Mrs. Mary Stick of Flint, Rabbi Leon Rich of Port Huron, Prof. H. E. Pattengill of Lansing, D. W. Grandon of Hillsdale, Mrs. E. L. Calkins, state president of the W. C. T. U., Fred W. Corbett of Lansing, H. M. Leland of Detroit, president of the Cadillac Motor Car company, and Frank Fitch of Detroit.

The closing session of the convention Thursday evening will hear an address by the famous Sam Small of Georgia, and ex-Governor Patterson of Colorado will be expected.

A program for the political activity of the temperance forces in the state for the coming year will be outlined, and arrangements for the large campaign of the campaign, this to be decided upon by the executive committee.

President Hamilton gave an address followed by Juan B. Bonilla, of California, Columbia, president of the club; P. Wang, of Tien Shanghai, China, spoke upon "What the Foreign Student Has Meant to Michigan." Secretary Lee Bierce, of Grand Rapids, told "What the State of Michigan Has to Offer the Foreign Student," and in this connection and acting for the other commercial secretaries of the state he tendered a formal invitation to the foreign students to make a tour of inspection of the manufacturing plants of the state as guests of the secretaries.

This trip will be made in April and will include stops at Jackson, Battle Creek, Kalamazoo, Grand Rapids, Muskegon and Lansing.

Jackson could not send a representative, but sent a congratulatory telegram and an urgent invitation to the foreign students to join the spring trip. Secretary Byers H. Gitchell, of Detroit, telephoned that he would be unable to attend because of illness, but invited the club members to be the guests of the aircraft club in Detroit January 31. At that time Mr. Gitchell will open the Detroit Board of Commerce to the club.

Professor James F. Hird was toastmaster and following the program of speeches there was a musical program in which William James, of Capiznon, South Africa, and Y. F. Z. Hsu, of Shanghai, China, gave several selections from the Mikado, in costume. Kenneth Westerman, of Adrian, was chief.

To Investigate Wage of Women.

The wages paid $0,000 Michigan women will be investigated by the state commission of inquiry into the advisability of establishing a minimum wage.

Three books have been prepared, in which 125 questions are asked; 30 are for employers; 55 are for wage workers women and 11 are for women's clubs.

Among the places from which wage statistics will be obtained and to which inquiry accredited canvassers may be sent are Detroit, Grand Rapids, Kalamazoo, Saginaw, Jackson, Battle Creek, Muskegon, Bay City, Adrian, Traverse City, Lansington, Benton Harbor, Hancock, Sturgis, Hastings, Alpena, Middleville, Williamston, Rochester, Centerville, Colon, Three Rivers, Albion, Otsego, Coldwater, Hillsdale, Rockford, Manistee, Merrill, Niles, Chesaning, Vicksburg, Sturgis, St. Joseph, Port Huron, Ypsilanti, Flint, Ionia, Battle Creek, Monroe, Waterville, Plainwell, Belding, Sault Ste. Marie, Eaton Rapids, Clinton and Yale.

The occupations on the commission's present list include hosiery and knit goods, cigars and tobacco, adits, dresses, millinery, underwear, canned goods, foundries, shoes, laundries, woolen goods, paper, corsets, overalls, brass, stores and telephone, office.

Only manufacturing establishments employing ten women wage workers and more are being asked to fill blanks for the commission will send a blank to any woman wage worker, to any employer or to any woman's club or organization.

Nine states now have minimum wage laws, but only one of these gives the amounts that shall be considered a living wage for men and women. Thus there $11.85 a day as a minimum wage for an experienced girl, $9.25 a day for women beginner, $2 a day for women under eighteen years of age, and 90 cents a day for learners and apprentices.

Michigan's minimum wage commission is one of inquiry. The commissioners are Judson Grenell, chairman, Detroit, president of the board of education, of Detroit, engaged in real estate and Myron H. Walker, Grand Rapids, a lawyer. Miss Noelle M. Bissell, the first woman appointed on the state board, is secretary.

HOUSE BODY AMENDS SHERMAN LAW—JAIL TERM INCLUDED.

Interlocking Directorates Prohibited; Fixture of Prices to Consumer Barred.

OUSTED FROM TRINIDAD, COLO.

Stones and Clubs Hurled When Troopers Escort Aged Woman Out of Town—Two Men Perish in Michigan Mine Fire.

Washington, Jan. 12.—The subcommittee of the house judiciary committee on Friday completed a draft of the administration anti-trust bill which is an amendment to the Sherman law. They acted on the theory that guilt is personal and that trust magnates shall be subjected to imprisonment as well as fined.

The bill consists of a number of separate measures. These will be introduced in the house after they have been submitted to President Wilson for his approval. The most important of the measures provides a penal punishment for corporation officers found guilty of a violation of the antitrust laws.

Manufacturers will be forbidden to fix the ultimate price to the consumer of the article manufactured. There are drastic provisions prohibiting price fixing in restraint of trade.

The bill requires that no restraint of trade shall be deemed reasonable. There also will be definition of what constitutes a restraint of trade and the "rule of reason" writing into the Sherman law by the Supreme court of the United States will be set aside.

Interlocking directorates between banks and industrial corporations will be absolutely prohibited.

Railroads will be divorced from control or ownership of manufacturing or other establishments whose output is a commodity transported by the common carriers. In other words, no railroad may own or control a coal mine, steel manufacturing plant, or other industries which put out commodities handled or used by the railroads.

Congressman Introduces Resolution in House That Demands Stock Investigation.

Washington, Jan. 12.—An attack upon two of the greatest railroad combinations in the country, the New York Central and the Pennsylvania lines, was begun on behalf of the Progressives of the house in the introduction of resolutions by Representative Hinebaugh of Illinois. The first resolution calls upon the interstate commerce commission to report to the house upon the interlocking stock control of the New York Central over the Michigan Central railroad company and the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern company, and the influence of such control upon railroad cost, service and rates.

The second resolution directs the attorney general to transmit to the house his opinion as to the legality of the relations existing between the Pennsylvania railroad, the Pennsylvania company and the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad company in view of the supreme court decision in the Northern Securities case.

The resolution touching the New York Central system declares that "interlocking stock control confers all the powers, which actually come from interlocking directorships. Under the present system there is no honest competition between parallel railroad lines. The only purpose of legislation against interlocking directorates is to bring about honest competition in the interests of the public between these great transportation companies."

DEATH IN SOUTHERN CASE

Eugene Grace of Georgia, Who Said Wife Shot Him in 1912, Killed by the Wound.

Newnan, Ga., Jan. 14.—Eugene Grace died at his home here from the bullet wound he mysteriously received in Atlanta nearly two years ago. He suffered from partial paralysis since the shooting. Grace was wounded at his Atlanta home on March 1912. He summoned by telephone found him unconscious. At the hospital he accused his wife, Mrs. Daisy Opie Grace, of the shooting. Mrs. Grace was found at the home of Grace's mother here and was arrested. Later in the same year she was tried on a charge of attempted murder and found not guilty. Soon after the trial Grace left his Atlanta home to live with his mother in Newnan.

Wife of Ex-Senator Clark Is Among Those Who Are Arrested—Two Hundred Are Deported—Mine Fire Imperils Lives of Many Men.

Trinidad, Colo., Jan. 14.—Two troops of cavalry with drawn sabers charged 1,000 striking miners here on Monday and several men were serious ly injured in the battle that followed. The mounted troopers were escorting an automobile in which "Mother" Mary Jones, the strikes agitator, was being deported to Aguilar.

As the mob barred the way of the troopers, the aged woman, who has been active in the field wherever trouble brewed in every strike for years, stood up in the machine and shouted encouragement to her boys.

Stones and clubs were hurled by the strikers and several of the militia troopers were hooted from the saddle. None was seriously hurt. The mob lasted for fully a quarter of an hour before the mob was dispersed.

"Mother" Jones was deported from the southern Colorado coal fields during a by the militia. She returned to Trinidad from Denver.

"Mother" Jones left the train at the outskirts of Trinidad and later appeared at a local hotel. She was arrested by a detail of state troops, but escaped. The troops then set fire to her automobile and whirled through the streets with the cavalry drawn and leaping at full speed in front and behind the machine.

THOUSANDS ARE DEAD

CITY OF 60,000 UNDER ASHES

Tidal Wave Adds to Horror—Inhabitants of Kagoshima Reported Dead When Fiery Stream Sweeps Down on Them.

Nagasaki, Japan, Jan. 15.—A tidal wave followed in its wake to the entire quakes and volcanic eruptions which struck Kagoshima, in southern Japan, according to an official report.

It is believed the Kagoshima disaster will prove to be one of the most serious in the history of Japan. The loss of life and property increases as fuller details are received, and indications are that the death list will run into the thousands.

Ashes to the depth of six inches have fallen in the region of Kagoshima, on the east coast of Kyushu.

A postal employe who fled from Kagoshima says the city was in flames when he left. Many of the inhabitants were buried in the ruins of the Kagoshima Postal Telegraph office, which was destroyed by the earthquake and tidal wave and that many residences were ruined, while many people and animals were killed or injured. The military and army departments are hastening succor and supplies to Kagoshima. Government authorities declare that any official estimate of the extent of the disaster will be impossible for several days. The population of the city of Kagoshima, which is the largest seaport in Kyushu, is 60,000. The inhabitants of the adjoining island of Sagura, the center of the disturbance, is given as 15,000. On this island hundreds are reported to have perished beneath the volcanic ashes. Mount Sakura, which is 3,665 feet high, is one of the most active volcanoes in Japan.

Tokyo, Jan. 15.—The city of Kagoshima, which was almost destroyed by the volcanic eruption and tidal wave, has a population of 60,000. 120 ON SHIP REPORTED LOST

Halifax, N. S., Jan. 15.—The Royal Mail steamer Chignecto, 120 persons aboard, went aground on Briar Island in the Bay of Fundy, as she was battling against a terrific storm late before dawn on Tuesday.

Wireless communication with the stranded vessel ceased abruptly. The last message sent by Jack Sheridan, message from the engine room of the steamer, was that the water in the hold was flooded. No trace of her has been found and her fate is in doubt. The greatest fears for her safety are entertained. It is believed she is lost.

The wireless cry of the Chignecto which urged immediate aid, was picked up by the wireless station at Cape Sable, across the bay, and was relayed to a dozen vessels. They are now steaming southward in fog and mountainous seas to reach the location of the Chignecto.

STATE NEWS

Battle Creek.—A baby that arrived the home of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Blake found two great-grandmothers, two great-grandfathers and two grandmothers present to welcome him.

Marlette.—Robbers broke into the Pere Marquette depot and rifled a strong box, getting between $15 and $16 in money. Several thousand dollars worth of express orders were in the box, but were unmolested.

Sault Ste. Marie.—While a pouring tub in the mills of the Algoma Pulp company, in the Canadian Soo, was expectedly turned over, John Wojtowin, twenty-two years old, was buried in a river of molten iron and instantly killed.

Flint.—A small fire, starting in the bed of a boy in one of the dormitories at the Michigan School for the Blind caused a panic among the inmates, but no one was hurt. The building was emptied and the blaze extinguished.

Port Huron.—William W. Black, thirty-nine years old, who for twenty years has been a newspaper and advertising work in Port Huron, died after several days' illness. "Bill" was a well-known and popular man.

Bay City.—Mrs. Mary Ann Jones, aged 80 years, died at her home in this city. She was a native of Ireland and came to this country in 1847. She was married in 1852 and came to Bay City in 1857.

Hancock.—Two persons were killed in the Calumet & Hecla mine here when a piece of timber fell from the roof of an incline, crushing them to death. The victims were Frank Mitchell and Frank Pelto.

Grand Rapids.—Frank Dybrowski, who discharged his revolver several times and then "played possum" in order to make his sweetheart believe he had committed suicide, was sentenced to Ionia for from six months to two years.

Port Huron.—David M. Murphy, former proprietor of the City hotel, was drowned in St. Clair river. After an investigation a fishing outfit found by him was found on the shoals at the foot of Thomas street. Murphy recently retired from the hotel business.

Grand Rapids.—Declaring that the board of education allows the janitors at each school in the city to put but one towel a day in the washroom, thus forcing an average of 125 pupils to use the towel from one to three times a day, Fred Zierlevy, chief inspector of the department of labor, ordered a change.

Bay City.—Jay M. F. Newkirk, charged with malpractice in connection with the death of Frank Diamond, was acquitted by a jury in circuit court. The charge against the doctor was based on information from the grand jury. Doctor Newkirk is one of Bay City's leading physicians and his indictment caused something of a sensation.

Grand Rapids.—Because packers in Detroit and Chicago refused to deal with them in accordance with the specifications made for the Grand Rapids market, contractors and bids for supplying meat for the Michigan Soldiers' home for 1914 were rejected. The packers declared the meat specifications would mean waste that could be used in hamburger steaks.

Corunna.—Members of the influential churches of Owosso have learned with surprise and a touch of dismay, that every church in the city with the exception of the Congregational and the Second Avenue Methodist Episcopal churches, is advertised to be sold at sheriff's sale. The churches are exempted from general taxation, although the property they are surrying around to find out what specific tax has been overlooked.

The appreciation has taken the form of an appropriation of $250 to enable the Michigan agricultural college band to buy military overcoats. Fifty-five bandsmen will wear the new coats.

Ionia.—Fred Smith, seventy years old, of Muir, was crushed between two commercial travelers in the state, dropped dead on the steps of the house, three miles from Lansing. Just after he had returned from the state capitol where he had notified friends of the death of an old comrade, Grover T. Ballard, formerly of Muir.

Port Huron.—John Cropsey, a foreman in the Grand Trunk shops, was in the county jail on a charge of issuing a worthless check to his landlady, George N. Jerome of Marine City.

THOUGHT OUT A NEW "GRAFT"

Torrid Weather Gave New York Beggar an Idea Which Has Been Seemingly Turned to Advantage.

A man believed to be a professional beggar took advantage of the torrid weather to work on the sympathies of persons in the subway, the New York Sun relates. He came to the door of a heavy storm shutter, got on a northbound Broadway express at City Hall in the evening, at the Brooklyn Bridge station. He found a seat in a corner of the car, and the perspiring passengers regarded him with surprise and pity. They noticed that the beggar had a long beard and that the storm collar of the great coat was turned up and buttoned tightly about his neck. He seemed to be suffering much from the heat, for his lean face was moist with perspiration.

Presently he opened an old leather gar ter, which was clothes for either when made, and took out a pair of coal scuttle their coats. The beggar rolled up his trousers and let the lower part of his utter, as he wore no clothing underneath it. This information the guard communicated to several men in the car. Some of them thought the action in got a suit of clothes for the poor man. He passed a hat from one passenger to another, and several dollars in silver were obtained for the beggar. He put the coat on at the Grand Central station, thanking his benefactor tearfully. He was counting the money he collected in around the sympathetic audience when the train stopped, and another collection was taken up and handed to him. When the train left he was hurrying to a north-bound express at the bridge station.

As Koreans Stop.

Shopping in Korea is a very grave and solemn task and occupies the man of the house the greater part of the day. In the market here he purchases his provisions, cooking utensils, coarse cotton to him. When the men and the native drink, a liquor obtained from fermented rice.

Only one article of the same kind is purchased from a single store. It would be an offense against Korean etiquette to buy a second, a third, as this would deplete the stock too quickly and give the shopkeeper the trouble and work of restocking before he was ready! It would be a reflection on his business orders are not welcomed in this odd country; little and slow gain is the motto of the great dynasty of biblical scholars. The fact is that in Korea, where the tendency of the eating of this fruit of the "Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil" mentioned, no name whatever is given to the fruit. All that is said is: And when the woman saw that the tree was good for food, and that it was pleasant to the eyes, and a tree to be desired to make one wise, she took of the fruit thereof, and did eat, and gave also unto her husband with her; and he did eat" (verse 6).

In fact, scholars doubt very seriously whether it was the apple at all. They suggest that all evidence points to it having been the quince, fragrance of which was said to be the highest esteem by the Orientals. Another point in favor of the quince is that it is the fruit which was sacred to Venus, the goddess of love, and which is the name of the ancient writings the quince is very frequently mentioned in the Song of Solomon. In Babylonia Ishtar took the place of Venus in the Roman mythology, and it should be remembered that the story of the creation originated with the "Babylonians. All evidence seems to point away from the apple having been the "Forbidden Fruit," and town.de the quince as having been that fruit of the "Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil."

Bygone Chivalry.

"It is no use deceiving ourselves," she thought. "There's precious little chivalry now. Men don't idealize women as they used. They're grown far more suspicious and harder. Perhaps because women have grown so selfish of them! Anyway, something is gone out of life. Poetry? Illusion? And yet—Why is it that men still put us off our balance—even now—that they matter so much less, now that we live our own lives, and can do without them?"—Mrs. Humphry Ward in "The Mating of Lydia."

CHAPTER I.

The Owner of New York.

Percy Darrow, a young man of scientific training, industrial talent, effeminate appearance, hidden energy, and absolute courage, lounged through the doors of the Atlas building. Since his return from the volcanic island that had witnessed the greatest murder of his old employer, Doctor Schwartzenhorn, the greatest adventure of the murderers, and his own imprisonment in a cave beneath the very roof of an implosion, he had been noticing his shattered nerves had by their normal strength. Now he felt that at last he was able to go to work again. Therefore, he was about to approach a man of influence among practical scientists, from whom he hoped for an occupation.

As the express elevator shot upward, he passed a long slender hand across his eyes. The rapid motion confused him still. The car stopped, and the metallic gates clanged open. Darrow obediently stepped out. Only when the elevator had disappeared did his upward course bring to him the knowledge that he had disembarked one floor too soon.

Darrow's eye fell on a lettered sign outside the nearest door. He sniffed a dose of ether. Behind the door a small silky mustache, dropped his black eyeglass in a fashion that Darrow recognized, hesitated a moment, then stepped languidly forward and opened the door. The sign indicated the head quarters of the very modest consultation room behind which McCarthy chose to work. McCarthy, quite simply, at that time owned New York.

As Darrow entered, McCarthy hung up the telephone receiver with a smash, and sat staring at the instrument. After a moment he turned his small bright eyes toward the newcomer.

"Hello, Pete," he growled. "Didn't see you. Say, I'm so mad my skin crawls. Just now some measly little chump called me up from a pool room booth. What re suppose he wanted, guess? Oh, nothin'. Just told me to so many words for me to pack up my traps and get out of Wall street, and never come back! That's all! He wanted to know how I liked it, and barked out a short laugh, and reached for a cigar-box, which he held out to Darrow.

Percy shook his head. "No he wants me to go to Europe?"

"Wants me? Orders me! Says I, no! McCarthy laughed. "Lovely thought!"

He puffed on a cloud of smoke. "Says I to him, says I, my orders he'll send me a sign to convince me!" Darrow, in his turn, lifted a mere voice. He sought to have a big buzz in him and get rid of it in a hurry. He give me the shivers, like a dead man. I never been such a shaky feeling since I got a scared at a mid-night!"

Percy Darrow was surveying him with leisurely amusement, a slight smile playing over his sensitive lips.

"Sin sign" he pronounced it, spit to be a bomb," observed Darrow.

"He's nutty, all right," McCarthy agreed, "but he's got me. Guess I was doing the tall religious. He's got a grip on me, all right."

"Your affair," said Darrow. "Just the same I'd like to know what it is."

"Outer office—rot!" said the boss. "An outer office—this place followed up with people waiting, I'm going to put to say right out in meeting—if I want to, I'm the boss, and I'm better than you are!"

"Darrow smiled. "You know very well, my fat friend, that the only reason you like me at all is that I'm the one and only person who can come into this office who doesn't want one single thing of you."

"I suppose that's it," agreed McCarthy. "The telephone bell suddenly snatched down the receiver, listened a moment, and thrust forward his heavy jowl. "What? Who? Who? Who?" in answer to some question. While he was still occupied with the receiver Percy Darrow nodded and sauntered out.

CHAPTER II.

The Shadow of Mystery.

Darrow walked into the fight of steps to the story above. He hesitated a moment, then stepped off the elevator and made his way to the corridor. Hastily dusting his fingers. There he found a group of the building's tenants, among whom he distinguished Doctor Knox.

"Same complaint, I suppose—no phones, no lights, no bells," he remarked.

"Shame to be," replied Knox. "General condition, I take as though the main anterior had been cut outside."

"Inside bells? House phones?" suggested Darrow.

The repair man came in double-quick time and great crowd. Darrow went to work in an assured manner, with quick time and great crowd. Darrow went to work in an assured manner, with quick time and great crowd. Darrow went to work in an assured manner, with

WICKERSHAM
America's Most Popular Lecturer to Speak Here.

When fifteen years of age, Mr Wickersham earned two dollars by cutting corn by moonlight that he might buy a ticket to the Lyceum course given at the county seat, seven miles away. Returning from the lecture, he said to his chum, "When I grow up, I'm going to be a public speaker." "He, he," he answered "you'll make a dandy!" It was same as telling him the boy couldn't fly. Yet Mr. Wickersham has lecture in that state nearly 200 times, and in that very town six times. Speaking recently of that first Lyceum course he attended, he said:

I do not remember very much of what any one man said, but every one of them impressed me with his personality and left me with new ideals and new aspirations and inspiration. I have been living in a new and larger world ever since. Some man had given me ten thousand dollars at that time it would not be heralded in all the paper when it was published that he was be that we did not have been worth one ten thousandth part as much. We are learning to be, I never go into a community as a lecturer without thinking to myself that perhaps there is a little soul hid away in that town who will feel as I felt in the same manner in which I was helped by the first lecture I ever heard.

Two new things must be admitted, the last farmers as well as other producers must be content to sell their business and think it is so difficult to farmer money when they sell it to enhance the productiveness of their farms and make permanent improvements that are needed. And it is also to be remembered that the European farmer's credit is no better than the American farmer. It is the combined credit of a group of farmers that forms a credit association by which the money markets of the world will lend money where it is cheaply as on government bonds—besides. Why and so here?

The farmers' credit plan is formulated to be here to insist that it is the duty of every property, land and kindred subjects. Our agricultural leaders are at sea and our farmers are in deep water over the money lending and money borrowing problem. It has been stated recently that the 12,000,000 farmers of the United States add each year to the national wealth the tidy sum of nearly $600,000,000 and they are doing this on a borrowed capital of over $5,000,000,000, on which sum they pay annually interest charges of over $500,000,000. If commissions and renewal charges are counted the interest rate paid by the farmers of this country averages 8½ per cent, while the German or French farmers who borrow money from their own cooperative banks pay but 3½ to 4½ per cent. The question then arises, If there is such a saving to the farmers of foreign countries by co-operative banking, what is the reason co-operative banking is not practiced in this country?

The German farmers have 17,000 local co-operative banks, and through them they secure short time credit at moderate rates of interest. These local German banks are further organized into central co-operative banks, of which there are about forty or fifty, and the total currency of these banks in 1911 amounted to $9,681,000,000.

While our American farmers have been waiting for somebody to come forward with a plan for easier rural credits, our enterprising Jewish farmers have been busy solving the problem for themselves. The Jewish Agricultural and Industrial Aid Society of New York has been hunting the way for all farmers among the line, and while our commissions have been searching therein for information the Jewish farmer has been quietly helping himself in the principles of easier money through his own banks and loan associations. The total number of these banks according to the latest returns available, is 2,508, representing $1,404,000. They had eight co-operative banks in operation at the close of last year and probably more now. This question is given the credit of being the pioneer of co-operative agricultural credit in the United States. Simply patterning after one of the German systems on their own account, they have started a system of making this to provide the thing they need, and it is one that any other body of farmers in this land may adopt to secure if they will use the same intelligent methods as the Jewish farmer has practiced.

RURAL CREDITS.

Some Facts Concerning Co-operative Banking.

What Germany's Farmers and the Jewish Agricultural Aid Society Are Doing Along These Lines—System Tends to Discourage Tenantry—An Aid to Agricultural Development.

Korea Also Produces Oysters That Weigh Ten Pounds Each.

While the office of a correspondent had occasion to call on friends who lived near Seoul, the principal city of Korea, he was met at the door by a respectable gentleman, who had a basket in his hand and put it in the basket without a smile. The eggs were twice of the yellow are eggs, which a string tied on the outside of it, he even can see. The officer-gentleman selected the eggs from being broken white handling.

Meanwhile my hostess ordered two "small" oysters for dinner. This offer caused me to wonder a little, for I knew that there would be seven or eight, besides the servants, but when the oysters arrived all was explained. For one oyster was two and a half pounds, and the other five pounds. On inquiry I was informed that none of the oysters on the southern side of Korea reach as much as ten pounds.—Christian Science Monitor.

OUR INDIAN ATHLETES.

From the Race Standpoint They Are in a Class by Themselves.

Ask any expert to call the roll of American athletes and he immediately begins to include Indians in his list. The names of Bender and Bonhagen come to mind at once, and besides these there are Chief Meyers—those real name is Torres—Cayon, Hudson, the inscrutable Thorpe and a dozen others.

The noble red man takes no room enough in athletic annals to furnish pride for a nation of many millions of people, yet the total number of Indians in the United States is only a little over 300,000.

That is the most astonishing part of the record. If the city of Washington should produce such a group of athletes as the Indians have done experts and scientists from all over the world would come to the federal capital to learn the secret of its success. The entire Indian population of this country is less than that of Washington.

DON'T TRIFLE WITH COUGHS OR COLDS.
Many Have Filled Consumptive Graves Because They Neglected a Cough or Cold.
You never know how soon a cold will become a serious malady. It may be in the head to-day; in the lungs to-morrow and the next day you may be fighting deadly pneumonia for your life. It's much the safest to stop a cough. Inflamed and cough-worn throat and lungs offer the best chance to consumption germs to begin their murderous work. There's only one way to prevent these deadly diseases getting a hold on you. As soon as a cough or cold attacks you, take Dr. King's New Discovery until you are completely cured. Don't doze or two will do the business, saving you suffering and a doctor's bill. Nothing else can prove its wonderful power to cure coughs and colds.
"I feel sure it's a Godsend to humanity," writes Mrs. Ellis Morton, Columbia, Mo., "for I believe I would have consumption to-day, if I had not used this great remedy."
"I take great pleasure in recommending your Dr. King's New Discovery for the benefit of suffering humanity. It is a thoroughly reliable remedy for all coughs, croups and lung troubles. We have used it in our family for years and it never fails the best results. It saved my mother when two doctors gave her up. She had a very severe case of pneumonia and was in bed seven weeks and part of the time not able to turn herself. Dr. King's New Discovery, I did, and on taking it she soon began to improve, and four bottles cured her entirely. You may believe this if you wish and I will answer all inquiries, with postage enclosed for reply.

AROUND the WORLD WITH OUR MARINES

MARINES ENGRAVED BY WARD BROTHERS

MARINES LANDING IN CUBA

MARINES MARCH TO TRINIDAD, PANAMA CANAL

MARINES TRAINING IN SOMA

SEND a detachment of marines!"

It may be a call from almost any part of the world, a summons to turn out for almost any kind of military duty.

Whether it be to take part in a Boxer uprising in China or a Nicaraguan revolution, to guard the polls during an election in Panama or to guard the American consulate at Valparaiso, Chile, it is the American marine, the "first aid" man of the country's armed service, who rushes to the front.

And "rushes" is the word. For speed is the element which above all others is drilled, hammered and pounded into the marine from the recruitment of the marine. On the principle that a fire caught in its early stages will be easily extinguished the United States marine corps is organized to respond to any call at a moment's notice and another for the asking. In fact, their actual appearance on the scene has often prevented the outbreak of threatened conflagration.

"From the halls of Montezuma to the shores of Tripoli" is the way the song goes and they have made known in every part of the world.

"The halls of Montezuma!" Yes, the marines have seen service in Mexico. It was back in the days of 1847 when they were present at the storming of Chapultepec, the strong castle on the lofty foot-hill near Mexico City, where the ancient Aztec rulers held sway.

"To the shores of Tripoli!" Yes, it was back in 1805 that American marines marched across the desert with Gen. Eaton from Alexandria and after capturing the Tripolitan flag hoisted that of the United States for the first time in the history of the country on a fortress of the Old World.

China, Japan, Corea, Egypt, Algiers, Tripoli, Chile, Mexico, Cuba, Samoa, Hormosa, Hawaii, Santo Domingo, Porto Rico, Nicaragua—no, this is more than a mere geographical list of countries. It is a roster of some of the countries in which the American marines have been called on for service. And they sing:

"From the Hall-Hole of Cavite
To the Ditch at Panama,
You will find them very nearly
Of Marines—that's what we are:
We're the watch-dog of a nation,
Or we dig a magazine,
Though we labelled beggars are manifold.
Who would not be a Marine?"

Ubiquitous they are in field of action. Manifold are their duties. Amphibious creatures also they are, fighting by land or sea. They are called "soldiers of the sea." Ready for "fun or frolic" they serve on war vessels and land, both in times of peace and war.

When fighting on the battleships or cruisers to which they are assigned they man the sixinch, two-inch and three-inch guns; and the six pounders of the battleships and secondary batteries. Their arts trained and fully equipped for instant service in landing parties. When they land they take with them if needed ship guns of three, five and six-inch calibre. Part of their training is to mount these pieces in suitable shore positions. They are taught the various methods of slinging and transporting ordnance.

Ashore in foreign countries they fight or perform peaceful duties, according to need. And when there is any fighting to be done, they are generally the men who start it. They open the way for bigger fighting, if such should be necessary. They are the forerunners of both the army and navy. They are the "hurry up, clean up as quick and cut 'em alive" boys. Except in case of big and important fighting, the marine usually finish the job alone. As the marine corps all told comprises only 10,000 men and 344 officers it could not fight a war but for the dozens of smaller calls for military aid, it is all sufficient. If either the army or navy or both are to come into action later on, it is usually the marines who have taken the first step against the enemy.

"Our flags unfurled to every breeze
From dawn to setting sun;
We have fought in every clime and place
Where we could take a gun:
In the snows of far-off Northern lands
And in sunny tropic scenes,
You will find us always on the job,
The United States Marines."

There has been only one year since 1900 when the marines were not called on for duty on some foreign shore. And during that period only 57 of them have been killed. Nineteen of these, one of them an officer, fell during the international relief expedition to protect the foreign legations at Pekin during the Boxer rebellion in 1900. In the following year two were killed in the Samar campaign in the Philippines. Five were killed in Nicaragua in October, 1912, while fighting against revolutionists. The president of Nicaragua, members of his cabinet and other prominent citizens of the Central American republic attended the funeral services of the four marines killed in the fight at Barranca Hill, near Masaya. In addition, as soon as General Chamorro, then minister of foreign affairs to Nicaragua, now minister from that country to the United States, learned of the deaths of the marines, he called on American Minister Weitzel and expressed his sympathy and that of his government.

In 1900 we had marine detachments landing in China to assist sailors and marines from other countries in relieving the besieged legations at Pekin. In 11 days this was accomplished. In 1901 they landed in Samar, one of the Philippines; also were called to Panama on the Isthmus of Panama again in the three following years.

In November, 1912, a company of marines had the novel experience of riding camels across the deserts of Africa, as they accompanied a representative of the American state department into the heart of Abyssinia to its capital for a conference with the famous King Menelik. In the same year another company went to Seoul, Corea, to protect the Japanese legation during an insurrection.

Santo Domingo and Panama needed marines in 1903. In the following year it was in Cuba and Panama that they served in Panama on account of disturbed conditions incident to the holding of an election, in Cuba as part of the "Army of Cuban Pacification," which succeeded in pacifying the incipient Cuban revolution of 1906, remaining in the field and occupying Cuba for almost two years. In this case the marines were first in the field and the only troops engaged in the determination of the insurgent forces.

Panama at election time in June, 1908, saw the marines again in police at the polls. Threatened destruction of American property in Nicaragua sent the marines there in December, 1909, and in the following year they saw service in the same revolutionary country. On account of the revolution which resulted in the founding of the Chinese republic, marines were sent there in 1911 to relieve the legation guard. Last year they fought in Nicaragua, and this year they went to Santo Domingo, although they were not compelled to go ashore in the latter country, their presence on a gunboat in the harbor being sufficient for the needs of the occasion.

In 1907, the one year since 1900 when the marines were not called on for foreign military service, they aided in the humanitarian work of helping the earthquake sufferers of the island of Jamaica.

Opportunity for foreign travel is one of the inducements held out by the recruiting officers in the service. From one-half to three-fourths of a marine's enlistment, it is pointed out, may be spent outside of the United States or at sea. And the marine may travel and see the world without expense to himself. Not only are all his traveling expenses paid but he receives a salary in addition; and if he has a desire to be economical, it is shown that a marine can lay by a fair sum of money out that, too, without denying himself the necessities of life, while also allowing himself a few moderate luxuries. If he remains in the service 30 years he can save more than $10,000. Then he can retire with all this money to his credit and with a pension in addition of from $540 to $675 a month, according to the rank he held at the time of retirement. During the 28 years more than 500 marines have been placed on the retired list.

There is not a single vacancy in the marine corps. Its quota of 10,000 men and 344 officers is kept filled, re-enlistments or recruits taking up all the vacancies as fast as they occur.

In spite of the attractions which are held out for enlistment in the marine corps, foreign travel, great variety of service, comparatively light work most of the time and so on, it is not a mere matter of application followed by a perfunctory examination which will land a man in this service. The examination is severe. This applies equally to physical fitness, although mental and moral qualifications are considered also and rank high in the mind of the recruiting officers.

Applicants at recruiting stations are rejected for many reasons. Men are not wanted who are married, any more than they want those who not meet the desired physical requirements. The marine corps desires no bad men, high character and will not accept men who, in the opinion of the officers in charge, are likely to prove deserters, or cowards or weaklings in any way, or who may have a bad influence on the other men.

Recruiting officers are alert in efforts to prevent the enlistment of any men who try to get into the service as a means of escaping from the results of misdoing. Such men, it is always feared, will try deserting when opportunity offers. When a man is recruited his Rertillion record is promptly forwarded to Washington, where records are searched to see if he has ever been enlisted in any branch of the service and discharged for cause. As the register does not search for four or five days, this gives time to catch them if they have tried to get in wrongfully. Criminals are sometimes caught in this way trying to escape the clutches of the law by enlisting in the government service. Washington has other Bertillon records besides those made in the recruiting offices.

Enlistment in the marine corps is for four years. Last year those who had been in the service liked it so well that 40 per cent of those whose terms expired, reenlisted for another four-year period. The training is systematic and careful, developing the best that is in a man. There are regular exercises for strengthening weak parts of the body, quick enable the marines to stand the rigors of the hardest campaign with a minimum of physical fatigue. The pay of the newly enlisted man is $15 a month and keep, which includes food, shoes, areas for clothing and so forth. In addition there is extra pay for men who win marksmanship medals, who receive good-conduct medals and who are proficient in various lines of work. It has been shown that a marine, after allowing himself a fair amount each month for extras, can retire after 30 years' service with more than $10,000 in bank drawing interest at 4 per cent.

Kipling sings of him:

"An' after I met 'im all over the world, a dozen' all kinds of things,
I'ave handled 'im with a Gatlin' gun to talk to them 'eathen kings.
'E sleeps in an 'ammock instead of a bed, an' 'e drills with the deck on a shiv;
There isn't a job on top of the earth 'e can't do, don't know to do
You can leave 'im at night on a bald-man's 'ead to paddle 'is own canoe

The American marine, "Soldier of the Sea," known all over the world from Gibraltar to Yokohama, has been a strong factor in helping to maintain the prestige of the United States, to fight its battles and stand guard on many foreign shores. This influence is not likely to decrease with the passing years. "The marines have landed and have the situation well in hand," will continue to be the report heard from them.

HIS WAY OF THINKING.

"A thief is usually something of a philosopher."

"How do you make that out?"

"Doesn't he take an abstract view of things?"

SCIENTIFIC AGRICULTURE PROVES PAYING BUSINESS IN MICHIGAN

Five brothers farming in partnership, a combination unusual in northern Michigan, but in Miles township the five sons of the late A. B. Young own a farm of 320 acres of good land, all owned in the family. Arthur, the oldest, is the only one of the boys who is married. The other four brothers live with their mother, who takes an active interest in their progressive farming operations.

Agriculture is followed by the Young brothers along scientific lines, with the motor river being their dependence for hauling and holding the soil. They turn off nothing but bags and cream.

The farm is utilized only for the growing of hay, corn, oats, spelts and alfalfa, and of the latter they have 15 acres with a fine stand. These crops in turn are mostly fed to the large dairy herd and the hogs, always using carefully balanced rations.

All land is worked on the three-year rotation plan, except alfalfa land, where the six-year rotation is followed.

Horses are also plentiful on the place, about 20 being kept there at present. About half of these are required for the work. The balance are young stock, of which some are for the market.

The dairymen herd contains 30 milch cows and these are revenue producers. Only the cream is sold, the retailing of the milk having been discontinued several years ago. Doing away with the retailing gives them the skim milk to feed to the calves and hogs.

The swine herd is of the big type Poland China breed, and now the boys are they fed on balanced rations, but these hogs are given the best of care in every way. The use of a steam cooker and feed grinder the feed is carefully prepared. The pen in which swine hogshouse attracts the attention of every visitor. The structure is of frame, 22x42, concrete floor throughout, and a 12-foot feeding floor surrounded by pens.

Care is taken to guard against hog cholera and certain to regularly administered under sanitary conditions almost as strict as when human beings are operated upon by surgeons. Over $100 worth of serum was used this season to protect the herd. Every hog sold this fall brought nearly $100 and there is a herd of 175 left to feed over winter and market in the spring.

In every department of the farm is found modern equipment and machinery, including silo, traction engine, corn husker, silo-filler, etc.

The Young brothers are finding that it pays to turn back onto the land what it grows, even in increased production per acre. They are strong believers in the value of the dairy herd, both as revenue producers and soil builders.

"Beyond Cadillac, Oblivion."

This was a phrase that formerly reputation seem to hold that view is the opinion of Sheriff Louis Chamberlain and Chief of Police Charles Paquette of Cadillac. Not that Cadillac is a hell hole, a place of crime or even the rendezvous for gamblers, but they feel that many convicts leave that Cadillac is the best wood headquarters for Michigan, the gateway through which it is alleged, convicts pass to get into the outside, or better, the lower peninsula.

Cadillac is well known over Ohio, Illinois and Kentucky through the vast amount of advertising land companies have given the Cadillac Tract. In these states it is the boast that all the crooks know much about Cadillac. They make the mistake of believing the country is still new all about here, and not until the officers prove reality that runaway husbands from the south, army deserters from the west and east, and many a time murderers from Chicago are only to catch even in the north woods, do they realize that the beautiful little city of Cadillac is not the quiet, isolated burg they expected to find it.

Useful Dogs in Michigan.

Readers of Jack London's stories of the dogs that have been of such invaluable work in transportation work in the Alaskan country probably do not know that here in Michigan are dogs that have done just as good work and as much of it, except over shorter distances.

The conditions that obtain in the extreme north of Michigan are almost much the same as those of the Canadian northwest, and even in Alaska. Snow may be sometimes deeper, but the weather rarely gets colder in Alaska than it often is some parts of the upper peninsula of Michigan.

The topography of the country in the far northern portions of Michigan, Wisconsin and Minnesota where the timber cruisers work, is not much unlike timber country, in upper Canada where dog teams have been in use for a generation or half a century and are still common, so that there is no much reason for dog teams being called into use in settlers far removed from railroads south of the British line as above it.

One of the best known timber cruisers in the Michigan forests is Charles F. Hickok of Gaylord, forest engineer for the Michigan Lumbermen's Manufacturers' association, who for many years, in addition to work all through the woods, including much of Canada, has made use or dog teams, usually two or three dogs to the team, in his work on sledges—Sport, a Golden Dane, a beautiful animal of pure breeding, and an animal that is closer to his master in point of affection than many children are to their parents.

Sport is a dog possessing a high degree of intelligence, is a trained tracker and a splendid traveler. In galt he passes or rests as the fancy strikes him. He weighs 100 pounds in good condition and is nine years old. He has traveled several thousand miles as leader of dog teams, ranging from Canada to the dogs to the north, northern Michigan, northern Minnesota and Canada.

Crossbreeds are the best for the work and in this particular the upper peninsula of Michigan has brought to the fore some of the best sledge dogs in existence. This is not generally known, as the men who by cross breeding have produced these dogs are woodsmen living in the outlying districts, men of quiet mien, as is characteristic of the dogs as well, as they are great quiet fellows, perfectly tractable, gentle and at all times ready to do their master's bidding.

The best dog is a mixture of blood-hound, mastiff and Great Dane, and is an animal of wonderful muscular power, heavy-chested, clean, strong limbed, with a beautiful coat of hair, light in color and tinted with a hue of gold.

These dogs develop a wonderful degree of intelligence under training and are the best sleigh dogs when once they become used to the harness. A team of them to live on these dogs away one with his shoulder pressed to the collar, moving a load of 500 to 600 pounds and seemingly enjoying the work, is a novelty when compared to other methods of transportation.

Mr. Hickok, in his many years of timber cruising, has had many dogs, but never another that meant so much to him as Sport. He is of service not only in the winter on the sledge, but in the dry weather he is as good as a man in discovering bruth fires that are likely to cause much trouble and he is quicker than a man to report it.

Sport has become a familiar figure among lumbermen and lumberjacks from Cadillac the south line of the hardwood operations in this state, north throughout the entire state—in spring of this season he is still very effective on the sleighs.

As in Maine.

Mark Twain once told a story which was supposed to contain a number of jokes, and the joke included the statement that a man who had a grudge against whom he had a desperate grudge by stringing a farm in Maine. The joke seemed to be that this story was told, that a farm in Maine and it would make the worst farmer that an ordinary mortal could be expected to make.

But just now we are facing the fact that a farm in Maine is much more desirable than a farm in Michigan. This shouldn't be true, but it is. Michigan land is still cheap, very cheap, and as we possess how in the advertisements of Michigan's cutover with big tracts on timber, it is light and sandy and some of it was burned over. But the fact remains Northern Michigan people will recognize that this description applies to nearly every county in this section of the state.

But here are some differences: In Aroostook county, Maine, they are harvesting year after year, with a very small percentage of failure, from 300 to 500 bushels of potatoes per acre. They are doing this through better cultivation than is being provided here.

In Aroostook county, Maine, where, as has been said, the land is almost a duplicate of our northern counties, it is bringing from $100 to $150 and $200 per acre. The land is no better than that in Michigan, but in the state it is much more thorough and painstaking. And it is the word that is making the difference in quantity and quality of production and in price.

In Aroostook county the snow comes earlier than in most sections, just as it does in Michigan, but instead the ground is not frozen deep, but the crop under the snow is harvested as soon as possible in order to escape the frost. Potatoes in this section are now quite a hard freeze the first of December usually commence to bundle the potatoes in the ground, and in this again is it known that the status of farm there answers fully to this usual trouble and perplexities here.

But let it be repeated again, the facts that should be most emphasized in this statement, that the land of Aroostook county, Maine, which is as nearly an exact duplicate of the land of northern Michigan, as it is possible to produce, is selling for from $100 to $200 per acre and is producing from 300 to 500 bushels of potatoes per acre.

Our land is not selling for so much and we are not producing as many bushels of potatoes as they are in the eastern county, but we can do it and some day we will, and when we reach that degree of production land in northern Michigan will be selling at as high for from $100 to $200 per acre.

Sentiment in Advertising

That sentiment can be used with good effect in advertisement the Germans evidently believe; otherwise it is difficult to account for the following letter which recently appeared among the business notices in a German paper:

Mr Dearest Charlotte: My heart is almost broken because your father has forbidden me to call on you and I know the only reason is because I am not wealthy. I cannot, however live without you and so we must meet somewhere.

Meet me tomorrow morning about ten o'clock at ——— in ——— street—I mean that large store where they sell music clothing. You know it is such a popular place that it's always crowded and therefore no one will be able to spy on us. Besides I intend to buy an overcoat and I'd like to have your advice. In this store they have clothes of all colors and styles so that I could never make up my mind if I were alone. Now remember, my darling, I'll expect you at ten o'clock and I hope you won't disappoint me."

British Guiana.

British Guiana was partially settled by the Dutch West India company in 1580, and was from time to time held by Holland and France, being finally by surrendered to Great Britain at the Peace of 1814. The climate is hot but not generally unhealthy; at intervals of some years there are outbreaks of yellow fever. Sugar forms 93 per cent. of the export trade, and the growing of the cane is the chief employment of the people. Gold mining has attracted considerable attention, and there are promising diamond fields. The chief seat of the colony is known to develop its great agricultural and mineral resources.

Schoolyard.

Senator Carl L. Wallace of Minneapolis and Oscar Oberly and Herman Kruse of St. Paul have closed a deal for 2,500 acres of schoolcraft county lands. The men have investigated conditions here and they believe this county is destined to become one of the best counties in the state. The men propose to do some general farming, but the most part the land will be devoted to growing sea stock farming. They looked over parts of their own state and Wisconsin before coming to this after a trip has been sent him from some other source.

Cadillac is well known over Ohio, Illinois and Kentucky through the vast amount of advertising land companies have given the Cadillac Tract. In these states it is the boast that all the crooks know much about Cadillac. They make the mistake of believing the country is still new all about here, and not until the officers prove reality that runaway husbands from the south, army deserters from the west and east, and many a time murderers from Chicago are only to catch even in the north woods, do they realize that the beautiful little city of Cadillac is not the quiet, isolated burg they expected to find it.

Useful Dogs in Michigan.

Readers of Jack London's stories of the dogs that have been of such invaluable work in transportation work in the Alaskan country probably do not know that here in Michigan are dogs that have done just as good work and as much of it, except over shorter distances.

The conditions that obtain in the extreme north of Michigan are almost much the same as those of the Canadian northwest, and even in Alaska. Snow may be sometimes deeper, but the weather rarely gets colder in Alaska than it often is some parts of the upper peninsula of Michigan.

The topography of the country in the far northern portions of Michigan, Wisconsin and Minnesota where the timber cruisers work, is not much unlike timber country, in upper Canada where dog teams have been in use for a generation or half a century and are still common, so that there is no much reason for dog teams being called into use in settlers far removed from railroads south of the British line as above it.

One of the best known timber cruisers in the Michigan forests is Charles F. Hickok of Gaylord, forest engineer for the Michigan Lumbermen's Manufacturers' association, who for many years, in addition to work all through the woods, including much of Canada, has made use or dog teams, usually two or three dogs to the team, in his work on sledges—Sport, a Golden Dane, a beautiful animal of pure breeding, and an animal that is closer to his master in point of affection than many children are to their parents.

Sport is a dog possessing a high degree of intelligence, is a trained tracker and a splendid traveler. In galt he passes or rests as the fancy strikes him. He weighs 100 pounds in good condition and is nine years old. He has traveled several thousand miles as leader of dog teams, ranging from Canada to the dogs to the north, northern Michigan, northern Minnesota and Canada.

Crossbreeds are the best for the work and in this particular the upper peninsula of Michigan has brought to the fore some of the best sledge dogs in existence. This is not generally known, as the men who by cross breeding have produced these dogs are woodsmen living in the outlying districts, men of quiet mien, as is characteristic of the dogs as well, as they are great quiet fellows, perfectly tractable, gentle and at all times ready to do their master's bidding.

The best dog is a mixture of bloodhound, mastiff and Great Dane, and is an animal of wonderful muscular power, heavy-chested, clean, strong limbed, with a beautiful coat of hair, light in color and tinted with a hue of gold.

These dogs develop a wonderful degree of intelligence under training and are the best sleigh dogs when once they become used to the harness. A team of them to live on these dogs away one with his shoulder pressed to the collar, moving a load of 500 to 600 pounds and seemingly enjoying the work, is a novelty when compared to other methods of transportation.

Mr. Hickok, in his many years of timber cruising, has had many dogs, but never another that meant so much to him as Sport. He is of service not only in the winter on the sledge, but in the dry weather he is as good as a man in discovering bruth fires that are likely to cause much trouble and he is quicker than a man to report it.

Sport has become a familiar figure among lumbermen and lumberjacks from Cadillac the south line of the hardwood operations in this state, north throughout the entire state—in spring of this season he is still very effective on the sleighs.

As in Maine.

Mark Twain once told a story which was supposed to contain a number of jokes, and the joke included the statement that a man who had a grudge against whom he had a desperate grudge by stringing a farm in Maine. The joke seemed to be that this story was told, that a farm in Maine and it would make the worst farmer that an ordinary mortal could be expected to make.

But just now we are facing the fact that a farm in Maine is much more desirable than a farm in Michigan. This shouldn't be true, but it is. Michigan land is still cheap, very cheap, and as we possess how in the advertisements of Michigan's cutover with big tracts on timber, it is light and sandy and some of it was burned over. But the fact remains Northern Michigan people will recognize that this description applies to nearly every county in this section of the state.

But here are some differences: In Aroostook county, Maine, they are harvesting year after year, with a very small percentage of failure, from 300 to 500 bushels of potatoes per acre. They are doing this through better cultivation than is being provided here.

In Aroostook county, Maine, where, as has been said, the land is almost a duplicate of our northern counties, it is bringing from $100 to $150 and $200 per acre. The land is no better than that in Michigan, but in the state it is much more thorough and painstaking. And it is the word that is making the difference in quantity and quality of production and in price.

In Aroostook county the snow comes earlier than in most sections, just as it does in Michigan, but instead the ground is not frozen deep, but the crop under the snow is harvested as soon as possible in order to escape the frost. Potatoes in this section are now quite a hard freeze the first of December usually commence to bundle the potatoes in the ground, and in this again is it known that the status of farm there answers fully to this usual trouble and perplexities here.

But let it be repeated again, the facts that should be most emphasized in this statement, that the land of Aroostook county, Maine, which is as nearly an exact duplicate of the land of northern Michigan, as it is possible to produce, is selling for from $100 to $200 per acre and is producing from 300 to 500 bushels of potatoes per acre.

Our land is not selling for so much and we are not producing as many bushels of potatoes as they are in the eastern county, but we can do it and some day we will, and when we reach that degree of production land in northern Michigan will be selling at as high for from $100 to $200 per acre.

The Secret of Health is Elimination of Waste

Every business man knows how difficult it is to keep the pipes below and drains of his flat free from the accumulation of serious papers. Every housewife knows how difficult it is to keep her house free from accumulations of useless things. So it is with the body. It is difficult to keep it free from the accumulation of waste matter. The waste is properly eliminated the troubles of the body soon become clogged. This is the beginning of most human ills.

DR. PIERCE'S GOLDEN MEDICAL DISCOVERY (In Tablet or Liquid Form)

Assists the stomach in the proper digestion of food, which is turned into healthy nourishing blood and all poisonous waste matter is promptly eliminated through Nature's channels. Diarrhoea, sour and sunken stomach, bloated and after-dinner drowsiness are the result of a clogged system. Don't be misled by the claims of substitutes. NOT MUCH OF A PROBLEM

Observing Boy Had Sure Way of Determining the Breed of Chicken Served for Dinner.

At a recent dinner in a suburban district, where all the guests were amateur chicken raisers, after a discussion of the rate problem the conversation turned to the best breed of hens. After the good points of Leghorns, Minorcas, Leghorns and others had all been brought forth the host said:

"Well, the ultimate end of every chicken is the pot, and you can't tell the difference when it is on the table. Let's see how many can tell the kind of a hen we have just eaten."

All agreed it was a very good kind, but there were many guesses as to the breed. The only child at the table, a twelve-year-old boy, was the one who guessed correctly.

The host assisted him to this and said: "Jimmie, how did you know it was a Plymouth Rock?"

"Oh, that was easy," he replied. "I found a feather in the gravy."

35 BUSHELS PER ACRE was the yield of WHEAT

100 acres in WESTERN CANADA

on many farms in Western Canada during 1909. Such some yields are not exceptional in new districts where land can be bought for $20 to $30 per acre. At high yields and with wheat at 70c per bushel, a farmer can easily make the purchase price of the land from the first crop. Mixed farming is also a profitable business. Many farmers report a net profit of $4,000. His wheat averaged 35 bushels per acre and oats averaged over 80 bushels to the acre.

Thousands of similar instances could be cited to show the prosperity of farmers in Saskatchewan and Alberta.

The cost of 160 acres on absolute free homestead in Western Canada, is only $10 to $15 for entry fee.

WESTERN MICHIGAN RIVERS ARE BEING HARNESSED.

The water power resources of western Michigan are being developed as well as the agricultural resources. The above picture shows a view of the recently constructed dam and power house on the Muskegon river in Ionia county. This dam was completed but a few weeks since and is now furnishing power and light for the villages of Beulah, Benzonia, Frankfort, Elberta and Crystalia. In the early future the wires are to be strung so as to carry power and light to Honor, the county seat of Ionia county, and to Coldwater in Manistee county. The dam has a head of 36 feet. The power house is equipped with two 500 horse power dynamos. The construction of the dam and power house used 4,000 barrels of cement and nearly 50 tons of steel. This is the second power plant on the Muskegon river, and more propositions are to be developed as soon as there is a demand for the power. Manufacturing enterprises are to be interested in the cheap power.

MEET IS BIG SUCCESS

STATE HORTICULTURAL GATHERING IS FULL OF INTEREST.

Topics of Interest Are Discussed by Experts and Much Benefit Derived From Interchange of Ideas on Fruit Culture.

The forty-third annual meeting of the Michigan State Horticultural society was held in Traverse City the early part of December. The meeting was remarkable, because of the large number of representative fruit growers brought together. The meeting was attended by large fruit growers from southern Michigan and those from western Michigan. There were also men from central and eastern Michigan. The several topics upon the program were discussed with ability and many benefits were derived from the discussions. The big question was B. J. Case of Sodus, New York, who is an authority on the new New York Fruit Growers' association, and has made a record by discovering how to get 100 bushels per acre as an annual crop. He proved an inspiration to many of the Michigan fruit growers, and in return was given a few ideas which he considered worth of taking back with him to his New York orchards.

Attention was given to the marketing side of the fruit industry, and R. Hunter, manager of the Chicago branch of the North American Fruit exchange, was in attendance. He spoke upon the subject, "The Marketing and Selling End."

One of the features of the meeting was the evening of illustrated lectures by professors from the Michigan Agricultural college. Prof. H. P. Gould showed lantern slides views of beneficial and injurious insects that are of interest to the fruit growers. Prof. H. J. Eustace, in an impressive talk, which was illustrated by lantern slide views, described parts of the Michigan orchards and the methods followed in their care.

The usual banquet on the second evening was attended by 175. The program of music continued for two hours and a half, there being 15 speakers and each made a contribution that was considered of value to those who were in attendance.

A team of eight students from the Michigan Agricultural college attended the meeting on the second and third days, and took part by running an apple judging contest and a speaking contest. Their activities added considerable dash to the meeting.

The last day, Dr. Rhea Mumford, leader of the farm management work in Michigan, spoke for a half-hour upon what the movement means to the fruit grower. He succeeded in convincing many that district and county agents are needed in order to cope with the many problems that arise for the fruit grower to solve.

The exhibits of orchard machinery and orchard fruits, conducted in connection with the meeting, were of high order and attracted many people. Approximately 200 gallons of apples from a dozen different counties in the state were put upon display. Also a large collection of glass jars containing fruit in canning solution, shown by the Western Michigan Development Bureau.

J. Pomeroy Munson of Grand Rapids was re-elected president of the society, and Leon D. Tuttle of Pewville, Mich., was re-elected secretary. J. S. Morrill of Manistee was elected to a place on the executive committee, as was also E. D. Lard of Ionia county. This distributes the executive committee fairly well over the state. The next annual meeting of the society will be held at Benton Harbor.

Lectures Before Granges.

James F. Zimmar, assistant agriculture, connected with the federal department of agriculture, stationed at Manistee in western Michigan, is spending the winter lecturing before the Granges of the ten counties in that section of the state. He has found that the most satisfactory way for reaching the people that come under his jurisdiction, and the Grangers are glad of the opportunity to hear what he has to say, is to open up questions regarding the matters that are giving them difficulty. Many questions of agriculture, and has enough meetings scheduled to keep the busy the greater part of the season.

HARVESTING PEACHES IN MASON COUNTY.

There are certain parts of western Michigan that are known as peach sections, because of the fine quality of the fruit produced and the immense crops harvested. One of these is the high ground in Mason county to the west of Pinnebah village. About 11 years ago a few of the more enterprising farmers discovered that the air drainage of this section was sufficiently good to permit of the growing of peaches, and a number of fine apple orchards were set out in the county during the past five years the orchards have been producing big crops for their owners. The above picture is a view in one of these orchards. It bears on the Jay Sanford farm. The picture shows the 1913 peach harvest.

Lake as a Storm Force.

According to a recently prepared report by the weather bureau the average date of the last killing frost for the Grand Rapids section of Western Michigan is from May 1 to 8, while the average date of the first killing frost in autumn is from October 1 to 10. In extreme seasons there have been frosts as late as June 1, and as early as September 20. This makes the average length of the crop season for Western Michigan approximately 160 days as compared with 140 days at Ann Arbor, Michigan, and almost as short a season for other parts of the state situated further inland. Lake Michigan acts as a kind of storm fence, which is of great value to farmers and fruit growers.

Pure-Bred Sheep.

Pure-bred sheep should be kept because they have been bred to a certain purpose, but the variety scrub sires crossed on a pure-bred ram will bring lambs that are a great improvement.

ALBERTA CROP YIELDS

At Macleod, Alta., weather conditions were excellent all through the season. Ninety per cent of the wheat up to Oct. 1st graded No. 1, the only No. 2 being fall wheat. The yield ranged from 20 to 40 bushels per acre, with an average of 28. Oats yielded well, and barley about 60 bushels.

Invermay is a new district in Alberta. Here wheat graded No. 2 and some of it went 50 bushels to the acre, oats going about 70 bushels.

Lethbridge correspondent says: "In the Monarch district the yield on summer fallow is averaging thirty-five bushels, a large percentage No. 1 northern.

"All spring grains are yielding better than expected in the Milk river district, south. A 300 acre field of Marquis wheat gave 41½ bushels.

Experimental farm results on grain sown on irrigated land place 'Red Fife' wheat in the lead, with a yield of 59.40 bushels per acre. Oats yielded 132 bushels to the acre.

Red Fife averages in weight from 60 to 63 pounds, and at Rosthern the Marquis wheat will run as high as 64 pounds to the bushel, while a sample of Marquis wheat at Arcola weighed no less than 65 pounds to the bushel. This variety is grading No. 1 hard.

Calgary, Alta., Oct. 8.—The problem of handling Alberta's big grain crop is becoming a serious one, and there is a congestion at many points in southern Alberta. One thousand cars could be used immediately. The C. P. R. prepared for a normal year, while the yield of grain was everywhere abnormal, with an increased acreage of about 25 per cent.

Bassano, Alta., Sept. 28, '13.—Individual record crops grown in Alberta include 1,300 acre field of spring wheat grown near Bassano which went thirty bushels to the acre and weighed sixty-six pounds to the bushel.

Edmonton, Alta., Oct. 1, '13.—All records for the largest shipment of grain by one farmer will be broken this year. If the estimate of C. S. Noble of Noble, Alberta, proves correct. Mr. Noble has notified the Canadian Pacific Railway here that he will have 350,000 bushels of grain, chiefly barley and oats, ready for shipment very shortly.

"Anyone taking up land will find Alberta an ideal province. The soil is a rich black loam, varying from 6 to 12 inches in depth. The land here in this district is not wholly open prairie. At intervals, sometimes closely, sometimes widely, scattered, there are small plots of poplar and willows. These generally grow round some small depression in the land and the snow drifts here in the winter and melts in the spring filling these hollows (provinces 'slews') with soft water. Nearly all these sloughs have old buffalo tracks to them, for it was from them that they always got their water. The poplars are very useful for building barns and henhouses. Wild grasses are plentiful, while tame grasses, such as timothy, brome and western rye grass do remarkably well.—Advertisement.

The state law provides that all public schools must hold "fire drill" at least once in each month. There is no use of parents writing notes to the teachers asking that their children be excused. State superintendent of public instruction writes the superintendent of schools at Capac, where some of the parents were arrested because their children were required to participate, "Expel the children if they will not take part in the drill."

The Methodist Sunday school of Charlevoix is a winner. The attendance of 200 per Sunday is a good index of an interest taken. It has a corps of wide-awake teachers and officers, which is producing results. Banners, charts, blackboard talks and music aid greatly in driving the lessons home. Next Sunday every mother present will receive a 15c copy of "The Mother's Magazine" for February free of charge. All persons not in other schools urged to attend this school.

In the Historical Society program for last Friday night, we credited the paper on "Pere Marquette" to Mrs. Brayton Saltonstal. Mr. Saltonstal contributed that number, although we should be credited with keeping it in the family. The paper, which entailed much research and very much work, proved to have been one of the very best contributions to Historical Society lore in the more than thirty years of the Society's existence. The topic could not have been entrusted to better hands, as Mr. Saltonstal is a pioneer of the Northern Michigan region, and his heart was in the work, seconded by a very able mind. We regret that a combination of circumstances prevented our attendance.

POLLUTED WATER.

Cheap and Simple Method by Which It May Be Purified.

The best thing to do with polluted water is to keep it out of your mouth and stomach, unless you get some pure water. Of course a man might starve to death in some place following that advice, so here is the best that I think to do. Disinfect the dangerous water. Here is the way to do it.

Dissolve a teaspoonful of chloride of lime in a capful of water; mixing well, that all lumps are thoroughly broken up, then add three more capfuls of water. Slightly stirring well and allow to stand for a few seconds in order that any solid particles may settle.

This mixture, if kept in a tightly stoppered bottle, may be used for four or five days, when a new solution should be prepared. Add one teaspoonful of this milky looking solution to each two gallons of water to be purified and stir thoroughly in order that the weak chlorine solution will come in contact with all the bacteria which may be present. Allow this to stand for ten minutes. This will give approximately one half part of free chlorine to 1,000,000 parts of water and will effectually destroy all typhoid and colon bacilli or other disease germs in the water. The water will be without taste or odor, and the trace of free chlorine will rapidly disappear. This method is one which is now recommended in the health literature of the country.

Water so disinfected is not dangerous as far as the chloride of lime is concerned if allowed to stand for ten or fifteen minutes after mixing. The chief danger is that not enough disinfectant will be applied to render the water safe in all instances.

HUMAN HEREDITY.

It Is Confined, So It Is Asserted, to a Likeness to Parents.

There are few subjects on which so much "scientific" nonsense is talked and written as on heredity. Not very much is known of it as regards plants, less of animals and almost nothing as regards humanity. To read books on heredity, especially those of the Eugenic society, is to read a mass of sign positions and hazardous inductions where most of the facts are negative and only the exceptions are positive.

The very meaning of "hereditary" is not understood. If any quality is truly hereditary then it is always hereditary. It never occurs except as the result of heredity, and it is constant—that is to say, it invariably follows that there is no quality of which this can be said. "Feel genius is not hereditary is known. Even talent is not. Nor is any aptitude. A lawyer's son more often wants to be a soldier or an artist than a lawyer, notwithstanding the environment, and it is so with most professions. The exception seem to be due to training and influence, not to hereditary transmission.

A superficial likeness to parents seems hereditary, but that is all that we can assert, and that outward likeness by no means infers an inward likeness. There is nothing so easy and nothing so fatal as this tendency to attribute to heredity what is due to training or want of training. It excuses supineness in governments and professions.—H. Fielding Hall in Atlantic Monthly.

Thin Cutting.

When Irvin Cobb, the writer, was on the World he attended a ball game at the Polo grounds. The park was packed. Just before the game Harry Stevens, who had the refreshment privileges, strolled by the press box and called out to a group of which Cobb was a member.

"Great crowd, eh, boys? I'll bet there's about more people here than they expected. I guess that means I'll have to go in and prepare about 1,000 more ham sandwiches."

"Well," remarked Cobb, "that will pretty nearly necessitate the cutting of another ham, won't it, Harry?"—Everybody's.

It is announced by a London physician that on an average women are six inches taller than they were fifty years ago, but perhaps that is just the way they feel.

Traverse City Record: D. H. Day, president of the Western Michigan Development bureau, was at his desk at the bureau offices today, mapping out plans for the big annual meeting of the membership which is to be held on Wednesday of next week. The bureau is starting on its sixth year and in many ways is more strongly established than ever before. This is largely due to the optimism, the foresight and tenacity of the president. The bureau has given a turn to western Michigan civilization which will be apparent even when the youngest man now living has passed away.

Senior Benefit a Great Success

Last Tuesday night Bay K. Immel entertained a large and appreciative audience with his clever impersonations of the characters of Shakespeare's play "The Merchant of Venice," and also gave several light readings.

The impersonations from Shakespeare were the best ever given in this city, and their merit was quickly recognized by the audience in which were many close students of Shakespeare. Mr. Immel showed a remarkable talent and great ability to handle all classes of readings. The light readings which were for the most part humorous or philosophical greatly added to the pleasure of the evening's entertainment.

Frank Ackert, who has been in the employ of the Pere Marquette on the upper bridge for eight years, left Tuesday on his annual vacation trip. He has always had P. M. transportation on these jaunts, but this year he enters the class of employes who are entitled to 1,000 miles beyond a P. M. terminal. Inspector Frank will visit Cincinnati, Covington, Toledo and other points. If anybody deserves a good time it is Frank.

It is due the publisher of this paper to state that the past two weeks he has been unable to give several hours to local interest the attention and space which their importance deserved. This shortage in our columns was due to the fact that about half of the type with which this paper is printed was, as a result of the recent fire, "dumped" into what the printer describes as "pi." None but a printer knows wholly what this means. Unfortunately insurance does not cover this feature of the case. And we are yet bankrupted for the reasons above.

Death of Ben Weaver

Again we are called upon to record the death of a pioneer and former resident of Charlevoix. Benjamin Weaver died at his home in Waukegan, Ill., last Wednesday. He was the brother of Capt. Geo. Weaver, Mrs. John O'Neill, Mrs. Louis Meyer, and half brother to Capt. Tabey Flanigan all of this city. He leaves a wife and four children.

Deceased came to Charlevoix about twenty-five years ago, and resided here fourteen years. He was an expert attractor, and was deputy register of deeds under A. R. Upright and his successor, F. J. Meech. He was engaged in the same business up to the time of his fatal illness.

The funeral was held in Waukegan. The remains were brought here for interment beside his mother in Brookside cemetery, arriving Saturday morning. He was 54 years of age.

Circuit Court

As we go to press the February term of the circuit court is on at the court house, opening with fourteen cases of naturalization.

There are ten criminal cases, most of them coming over from the January term.

There are but six civil cases and six chancery cases, four of these being divorce cases.

There is a probability of the term continuing through this week.

Petoskey News: Mrs. Jackson Ingalls, mother of Will Ingalls, well-known west side resident, and one of the oldest residents of Petoskey, is slowly recovering from a serious attack of pneumonia at Petoskey hospital. She is able today to sit up in bed and seems to be in less pain.

Judge Mayne last week granted temporary injunction restraining the Citizens' Telephone Co., of Traverse City, from collecting more than $12 in residence and $24 on business phones, from imposing a penalty for payment in arrears and from installing any more party lines, until the question is decided in the courts.

Petoskey News: Mrs. Elizabeth Zipp, the mother of George Zipp, a well-known resident and business man of this city, passed away Tuesday at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Ada Darling, at Central Lake. The remains were taken to Mancelona, where the funeral was held Thursday afternoon from the home of her daughter, Mrs. Wilcox. She was 81 years of age and survived by her two daughters and four sons, George and Arthur Zipp of Petoskey, Fred Zipp of Bay Shore, and Homer Zipp of Grand Rapids.

At a hearing before the referee in bankruptcy at Grand Rapids last week, W. C. Walsh, owner of the Boyne Falls bank, recently declared bankrupt, made a compromise to endeavor to raise money with which to pay his preferred creditors 100 cents on the dollar and the others 80 cents on the dollar. His liabilities amount to $12,000 and his creditors have given him 90 days in which to raise the money. While a number of Boyne City people had claims on the bank, the heaviest loss is felt by the working people, camp laborers and foreigners who have settled in and about Boyne Falls, placing all of their small savings in the bank at that place.

A wedding luncheon was given at the Bridge residence, where the family of the bride are spending the winter, and the happy young couple left on the afternoon train for Chicago, where they will reside. The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. Bellings, and is one of Charlevoix's most charming and accomplished young ladies.

Her father previous to his sudden death was one of our leading citizens and was several times mayor of our city. The groom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. James Cuddy of the Chicago Club, and is one of the foremost young men of Charlevoix. The young couple will have the best wishes of everyone in this city where both have grown to man and woman hood for a long and happy married life. A number from here went heartily in this expression of good will.

NET LICENSE

Most Local Fishermen Are Ignorant of the Provisions of the New Law in Force [illegible] provisions of the fishing law of 1913, fishermen operating nets are required to have a license costing $10.

Few probably know of the law, which is quite explicit. The fishing license law is a revenue measure of the legislature, and the federal inspectors assume the small fine [illegible] offenders are more or less [illegible] attach of benumbed at Petoskey hospital. She is able today to sit up in bed and seems to be in less pain.

DEVELOPMENT BUREAU

Annual Meeting Re-Elects President Day—Makes Showing of Remarkable Success

The annual meeting, Wednesday, at Traverse City, of the West Michigan Development Bureau, inscribed "Permanence and Success" in its records. It gave current vent to the appreciation of the splendid work of Pres. Day by reelecting him for the sixth time. Practical as everything, showing far more than forty years residence therein what western and northern Michigan is, and assuming a clear vision of what the immediate future is, D. David H. Day, in our opinion, is the best man for the place that the territory could select.

A. S. White, Grand Rapids, and E. J. Harris, Ellsworth, were re-elected as vice-presidents and E. E. Handel, Manistee, was reelected treasurer. John L. Gillson, secretary. Fifty directors were elected for the ensuing year. Forty men were re-elected and five new men added. The new directors are: Chas. B. Culver, Antrim county; M. M. Du sham, Emmet county; C. W. Carman, Kent county; C. A. Rinehart, Mason county; O. P. Marvin, Muskegon county; J. D. P. Barnes, Newaygo county; G. A. Weiser, Ann Arbor railroad and E. W. Abbott, B. C., G. & A. R. R. The annual reports showed that the Bureau is doing a bigger work than at ever has in the past. It has secured a place in the sun for the Western Michigan than it was getting two years ago. It is also taking care of a large number of local problems, and assisting the various organizations in the territory to carry forward their numerous programs of development. The election retains D. S. Payton and F. F. Robbins on the board of directors, and Mr. Payton on the executive committee.

Starting out thus with the prestige of remarkable results, the Bureau's future is assured. It is needless to say that the energetic, intelligent work of Secretary Gillson is a great factor in this (his) fruitful work.

And it is a conceded fact that no similar organization in the state can equal the West Michigan Bureau in the large and permanency of its work. Moreover it is the pioneer development agency.

Funeral of Thomas Scroggie

The body of the late Thomas Scroggie arrived here via Petoskey on the early morning train Thursday, and the funeral was held at the home of his brother William Scroggie. The services and interment were attended by a large concourse of Charlevoix and Hayes people, besides several relatives from other parts.

According to the following dispatch from Jackson Citizen Press, Mr. Scroggie could not have been killed had he granted the wish of his wife:

"Thomas J. Scroggie, of Owosso, block agent for the International Harvester Co. in the Gleason district, or block, who was killed in the wreck Sunday night, would have been alive today had he heeded the premonitions of Mrs. Scroggie. He was due in Jackson Monday morning, and in order to be at the office of the company on time he left Owosso Sunday night on the Michigan Central. Two hours later the train was wrecked three miles north of this city, and he was one of the four killed. Friends here say Mrs. Scroggie dissuade him to stay in Owosso until Monday morning."

BUSINESS NOT TO BE HAMPERED, SAYS WILSON

President Outlines Plan for Regulation of Trusts.

SQUARE BUSINESS WITH LAW

Explicit Definition of the Policy and Meaning of Existing Laws is of First Importance—Antagonism Between Business and Government Is Now Over.

Washington, Jan. 20.—President Wilson delivered the following message today before a joint session of the two houses of congress:

"Gentlemen of the congress:

"In my report to the states of the Union, which I had the privilege of addressing to you on the 1st of December last, I ventured to reserve for discussion at a later date the subject of additional legislation touching the very difficult and intricate matter of trusts and monopoly. The time now seems opportune to turn to that great question, not only because the current legislative which absorbed your attention and the attention of the country in the months gone by has reached its end, but also because opinion appears to be clearing about us with singular rapidity in this other great field of action. In the matter of the currency it cleared sufficiently at the opening of the short-lived extra session of congress to permit the passage of legislation which has proved beyond question to be the most effective means of restoring the currency of the country to its proper functions in the business world, and that legislation has been followed by a quiet but very decided change of opinion in the business world with regard to the various measures which they have been organized and established, it seems to be coming to a clear and all but universal conviction in anticipation of our action as if by the way of preparation for what may easily be seen and easier to see and act upon with confidence and without confusion of counsel.

Business of Interpretation.

"Legislation has its atmosphere like everything else and its atmosphere of accommodation and mutual understanding which we now breathe with so much refreshment is matter of another congratulation. It ought to make our task very much less difficult and embarrassing than it would have been had we been obliged to continue to act amidst the atmosphere of suspicion and antagonism which has so long made it impossible to approach such questions with dispassionate fairness. Constructive legislation, when successful, is always the embodiment of convincing experience and of the mature public opinion which finally comes to the support of that experience. Legislation is a business of interpretation, not of origination, and it is now plain what the opinion is to which we must give effect in this matter. It is not merely or mainly opinion. It springs out of the experience of a whole generation. It is clarified and strengthened by long contest and those who for a long time have with it and sought to change it are now frankly and honorably yielding to it and seeking to conform their action to it.

"The great businessmen who organized and directed the great business enterprises which have so amply justified their existence by their efficiency, have had to pass through a period of disquietude and even of misunderstanding and suspicion which has so long made it impossible to approach questions with dispassionate fairness. Private Monopoly Intolerable

"We are all agreed that private monopoly is indefensible and intolerable, and our program is founded upon that conviction. It will be a comprehensive but not a radical or unacceptable program, and those are its bounds, the changes which opinion deliberately sanctions and for which business waits.

"It awaits with acquiescence in the first place for laws which will effectually prohibit and prevent such interlockings of the personnel of the directorates of great corporations—banks and railroads, industrial, commercial and public service bodies—as in effect result in making those who borrow and those who lend practically one and the same, those who sell and those who buy but the same persons trading with one another under different names and in different combinations, and those whose affect to compete, in fact, partners and owners of some whole field of business. Sufficient time should be allowed, of course, in which to effect these changes of organization without inconvenience or confusion.

"Such a prohibition will work much more than a mere legalistic good. In correcting the evils with which it has arisen because for example, the men who have been the directing spirits of the great investment banks have usurped the place which belongs to independent industrial management working in its behoof. It will bring new men, new energy, a new sort of initiative, new blood into the management of our great business enterprises. It will open the field of initiative to many young men who have been obliged to serve when their abilities entitled them to lead. It will give the necessary hearten the young men coming on and will greatly enrich the business activities of the whole country.

Harm and Injustice Done.

"In the second place business men as well as those who direct public affairs now recognize, and recognize with painful emphasis, the great harm and injustice which has been done to them. If not all, of the more reflective systems of the country by the way in which they have been financed and have been diverted into channels inimical to the interests of the men who financed them and of other business enterprises which those men related to prosper.

"The country is ready therefore to accept and accept with relief as well as approval, a law which will impose upon the interstate commerce commission the power to investigate and regulate the financial operations by which the railroads are financed to be supplied with the money they need for their proper development to meet the rapidly growing requirements of the country for increased and improved facilities of transportation. My second position action in this matter is that we should prohibit absolutely and forever the payment of bonuses or other gifts in such forms as will draw the lines now familiar, and must of course be undertaken if we are to secure to the country the benefit of the destiny of the country. Until these things are done, conscientious businessmen the country ever will be unsatisfied. They are in these things our mentors and colleagues. We are now about to write the additional articles of our constitution of peace, the peace that is honor and freedom and prosperity."

KERMIT ROOSEVELT AND HIS FIANCEE

The recent announcement of the engagement of Kermit Roosevelt, son of Colonel Roosevelt, and Miss Belle Willard, was received with great interest. Miss Willard is the daughter of the American ambassador to Spain and is considered one of the most refreshed girls in Richmond, Va., her home city.

TWO ERUPTIONS OF VOLCANO SAKURA-JIMA AND QUAKES CAUSE TERROR.

JAPS MUST ABANDON ISLE

Geologist Okada Asserts Craters Will Continue to Be Active—Official Report Shows Loss of Life Is About 10,000.

Kagoshima, Japan, Jan. 20.—The volcanic Sakura-Jima is again active, two eruptions occurred on Saturday, accompanied by a severe earthquake, causing the collapse of many more buildings. Numbers of the inhabitants of Kagoshima who had returned again fled in terror from the city. Ashes are falling thickly.

The volcanoes continued very active all day and emitted great quantities of stones and ashes. Numerous explosions occurred and poisonous gases were ejected, making breathing difficult. The emperor's envoy has found it impossible to make the trip around Sakura-Jima. There has been some boating here. The sea in the Gulf of Kagoshima seemed to be boiling and the quantity of floating pumice-stone was so great that it prevented navigation.

Blackjacks from the Japanese sea discovered a native craft containing 14 refugees from Sakura who were in a starving condition. They reported that, owing to the floating masses of pumicestone and the high seas, they had been unable to steer their boat and had spent three days adrift at the mercy of the elements and without a morsel of food.

The geologist Okada is of the opinion that Sakura-Jima will continue in eruption for a month.

CONVICTS FLEE; 7 DIE

EX-CONGRESSMAN THOMAS OF ILLINOIS SLAIN AND WOMAN SHOT DURING BATTLE.

THREE PRISONERS ARE DEAD

McAlester, Okla. Jan. 21.—As the result of an attempt on the part of three prisoners to escape from the state penitentiary here on Monday, seven men are dead and one woman is wounded.

The dead:

F. C. Gaston, deputy sheriff.

F. C. Godfrey, guard.

H. H. Lowrey, guard.

Judge John H. Thomas, formerly congressman from Illinois.

China Reed, prisoner.

Tom Lone, prisoner.

Charles Ellis, prisoner.

The injured:

Mrs. Mary Foster, prison stenographer, shot in leg.

J. W. Martin, tinkeyr; shot in cheek.

C. D. Woods, guard; shot in arm.

Judge Thomas, a Muskogee attorney, was formerly congressman from the second Illinois district. He was killed by the order of the code commission. He served five terms in congress from the Egypt (Ill.) district.

Reed, Lane and Ellis, the three prisoners, escaped from the shop, killing the three prison officials and Judge Thomas. After which the three fled to the penitentiary consulting a client.

The prisoners then entered the penitentiary and met at the point of revolvers forced F. C. Rice and Miss Mary Foster, the latter a prisoner, stenographer, to go with them to a waiting auto. Gaston ordered them at bay. A bullet from one of the prisoners' guns entered the leg of Miss Foster. Gaston, Godfrey, Ellis, Lane and Lowrey, who had been in pursuit of the fugitives.

In the meantime the sheriff of Pittsburg county had been notified and asked to quickly summon a posse of gunmen. Before the prisoners had gone more then a half mile from the penitentiary, however, they were overtaken by the penitentiary guards. A battle took place on the highway in which all three of the convicts were shot to death. Gov. Lee Cruce was notified of the disturbances long distance by Warden Bird.

The first intimation prison officials had that anything was wrong was when the men attacked the two guards and marched them in front of them into the penitentiary office. Deputy Warden Gaston was in the office talking with Judge Thomas of Muskogee. As the men entered they pointed their pistols at Gaston. Gaston jumped to his feet and attempted to hold the men back, but he was afraid of hitting the guards, who were serving as bodyguards for the prisoners. At the second shot from Gaston' pistol the guards fired their shotguns and died at the point.

Men who were fleeing in the road to one side of the prison saw Miss Foster fell out of the vehicle. Then the guards closed in and shot the prisoners to death.

RAIL STRIKE OF 5,000 ENDS

Delaware & Hudson Officials Submit to Union Demands—Brotherhood System—Federal Mediator Agent.

Albany, N. Y., Jan. 21.—The strike of the Delaware & Hudson shops began on Monday morning and by noon tied up the entire system, was settled in a night. Railroad officials met the union's demands that they restore two seniority rights—the fireman, brakeman, engineer, and F. A. Slade, a conductor. The men concerned in the strike will return to duty at once. Five thousand were involved in the strike.

G. W. W. Hanger, a member of the railroad brotherhood mediation committee, brought about the agreement.

The brotherhood men first took up the seniority question that they had asked for. Hanger then suggested to the company officials that they yield to the demand. The men then agreed to be recalled, was impossible.

Gov. Lee Cruce, the first body of men walked out. From then until noon washers, coal-men, firemen, hostlers, roundhouse men and others, deeply affected by the strike, joined the ranks of the strikers.

TO IGNORE MINE WAR

RULES COMMITTEE REFUSES TO PROBE COPPER STRIKE.

Prosecutor of Houghton County, Mich., Will Ask Relief from Mayor.

Washington, Jan. 20.—Democrats of the house rules committee decided on Monday against the proposed congressional investigation of strikes in the copper mines of Michigan and Arizona, do coal district. The democrats determined that as the West Virginia investigation is the business of the house it is kind, that if the Colorado and Michigan situations were to be acted upon the senate was the body to consider them. Democrats of the house committee concluded there were no questions to either strike concerning the federal government and that there was nothing to show that the state authorities were unable to cope with the situations. The entire committee will meet Tuesday.

Houghton, Mich., Jan. 20.—Charles J. Moyer, president, and six other officials and organizers of the Western Federation of Miners, who are under indictment here for conspiracy, will be considered fugitives from justice by Houghton county prosecutors unless they return voluntarily to the state and stand trial, it was announced here on Saturday.

Charles H. Moyer, president of the Western Federation of Miners was indicted on Thursday for conspiracy, together with other officials of the federation in connection with the copper strike.

The first count of the indictment charges conspiracy to prevent by force and arms the pursuit of their vocations by employes of the mining companies. The bill names Moyer and the other officials of the federation charged a misdemeanor.

ANN ARBOR MAN HEADS ENGINEERS

J. J. COX IS ELECTED PRESIDENT AT FINAL SESSION OF GATHERING.

OTHER OFFICERS SELECTED

Thirty-fifth Annual Meeting of Michigan Society Is Held in West Lansing—Banquet Is Feature.

Lansing.—The thirty-fifth annual meeting of the Michigan Engineering society closed its convention in East Lansing with the election of the following officers:

President, J. J. Cox, Ann Arbor; vice-president, A. J. Todd, Cadillac; secretary, S. P. Hoxster, Ann Arbor; directors, J. D. Hoag, Ann Arbor; G. W. Russell, East Lansing, and Don Shields, Grand Rapids.

Because of the fact that the new session of the society in 1917, at Ann Arbor, will take place at the same time that the state legislature convenes, it was considered wise, in making any recommendations on legislative matters.

The feature of the conclave was the banquet at the Hotel Downey. In discussing the valuation of public utilities session, Hon. L. T. Herman declared that Michigan was in arrears of most of her sister states as regards legislation on public utilities.

"In our state," he said, "development has been left to the chance of a few years ago, and with the result that we have no adequate system of public utilities control. The time has come when we must take up the question of public utilities control and deal with it."

Hon. Frank Dwight, of Detroit, and Hon. Alfred Lucking, of Detroit, also spoke on the subject.

Port Huron Man President.

The Michigan live stock men in East Lansing for the last session of the Breeders and Feeders' association, Hundreds from all parts of the state were present at the meeting. Following are the officers who were elected:

President, A. B. Stevenson, of Port Huron; vice-president, W. W. Foster, of Mt. Clemens; secretary, A. G. Brown, of East Lansing, and treasurer, C. B. Hartlett, of Pontiac, were reelected. D. A. Spencer was chosen as assistant secretary.

Abram Renick, manager of the American Short Horn Breeders' association, declared: "We need not import Canadian beef or that from Argentine or Mexico. Canadian beef is not sufficient to supply the Chicago market for more than a week, while Argentine and Mexico cattle will go to Europe. The product of the Michigan meat market is, therefore, better than it has ever been in the past."

A. T. Roberts, of Marquette, speaking of the live stock possibilities in the upper peninsula, maintained that the "utilization for sheep raising of cut-over timber lands, of which there are several million acres in proving a money-maker and the upper peninsula is the place for such experiments for cheap productive land in the United States."

The reports of the four sheep breeders' associations indicate a tendency to raise more sheep. It was brought out that Michigan is not nearly so unfortunate as other states in the matter of dog chicken ravages.

A judge of carcasses in the weather jambs show W. H. Shands, of Hastings, took first prize with the Shropshire lamb that won the championship on foot yesterday. His chief competitor calling was third and a Hampshire owned by R. I. Bolton, of Dimondale, placed second.

Bean Jobbers Discuss Disease.

The bean disease has ravaged the bean crop of 1913 out 1914 in parts of Michigan $2,000,000, and that estimate was made by the bean jobbers at their annual convention at Detroit.

Instead of leaning it up to the second thousand farmers of the state to light menace to what is fast becoming a big industry in the interest tinder, the Michigan bean jobbers are seeking to team all about Michigan and to remove the infection from the bean grower lists toward the middleman.

The entire delegation listened to a paper on "Plant Diseases and Their Treatment," by Professor J. A. Muncie, who, for a long time has studied bean diseases. The information he furnished will be given general publicity by the bean jobbers.

Following a business meeting, the gathering was entertained for its formal welcome to the city, delivered by Mayor Jeffries. Geo. George Harris, of Pontiac, president of the Michigan Bean jobbers' association. President Fred Foster, of Saginaw, presided over the work of the year, and announced his retirement. Professor J. A. Muncie's address following the banquet, and P. Wang, of Pekin, spoke on China.

Lansing.—Ex-Senator Jonas, reelected court, was the principal speaker at the annual banquet of the Ingham co., B. M. Isbell, Jackson, "Iron History." Charles Bullock, Lansing, Judge Arthur J. Tuttle, of the federal court, was the principal speaker at a banquet, given in honor of Judge Arthur J. Tuttle, of the federal court, Saturday night, at the Isbell, Jackson, "The National Food of Mexico." Prof. Fred Gilbert, of Ann Arbor, "Four Decades of Progress." Hon. Fred Bickell, Lansing, "Iowa Not Its Profit." F. E. Nowlin, Albion, "Four Decades of Progress."

Honorable N. P. Hull of Dimondale, represented the state senate. He referred to the past relations which had existed between the drovers and the jobbers. He urged for cooperation in the fighting of bean diseases, and in the marketing to the best advantage of all.

Opposed to "Cured Insane" Marrying.

Concluding with a dinner served by Dr. O. R. Leslie, the annual meeting of the joint boards of control, of the state institutions of Ionia, was declared to have been the best ever held.

The next will be at Newberry, in July. The last meeting was very resented. The discussions were live ones.

Dr. James D. Munson of Traverse City, declared the state sterilization law and said that it was intended as a law to prevent discharged patients from marrying.

Dr. Munson said, "In the case of illiterate state institutions and not be able to reach the border line of mildness. Some children cannot be predicted." Dr. Munson said that Mr. Bernard Bad Axe attack a responsive chord by declaring Governor Morris to be "above the average of governors." Clark is a Republican.

Dr. Long presented a resolution, calling for the appointment of a special legislative committee, with these boards to promote new legislation, instead of the state board of health, to be able to hold to increase the salaries of the medical policemen, whom Shields represented.

CALLS JUDGE UNFAIR

"CAUSED UNJUST VERDICTS"

Editor of Georgia Newspaper Asserts Judge Sought Publicity and Said He Sold Him Opsains for Years.

Macon, Ga., Jan. 22.—When the investigation of the charges against Judge Emory Speer was resumed here today the committee announced that the attorneys for the judge would be restricted in their cross-examination of witnesses.

It seemed to be the opinion of the committee that the inquiry should have been allowed Speer's counsel in this particular in consideration of the fact that this is equivalent to a grand jury inquiry and is not a trial.

The exact point whereon witnesses from various parts of the state have arrived, Otto Kelly, of Atlanta, General T. B. Felder. The Judge's lawyers and friends are confident that the first day's probe did not hurt him. J. W. Preston, Sr., a retired attorney, was the first witness. He said that in the John P. Roberts case and in the case of Judge Speer had decided the defendants a fair and impartial trial and manifested an intent and purpose to bring about their conviction. He said Judge Speer generally "cut down the fees of all cases before him. He praised Judge Speer's mental capacity and ability to preside, but said he "seemed to take up the charge of all cases and sought to try juries." Witnesses and Judge Preston declared that "Judge Speer's temperament was overstrung and "caused unjust verdicts."

Hinton Winberly, ex-city attorney, was asked if he had discussed with Henry Jemison case. Winberly was sent to Cornwall and it was only after repeated questions from Chairman Pharr that he admitted that Judge Speer was fully informed of the Supreme court mandate to the Jemison case and that Judge Speer did not act on the mandate for over seven months.

T. J. Simmons, managing editor of the Macon News, testified that Judge Speer frequently solicited publicity and often wrote articles about himself and cases in court. Leon Poll Law, druggist, testified that he sold Judge Speer about four ounces of opium per year for ten years or more.

Mr. Felder also testified that after he had sold a congressman, he was consulted with Judge Speer and his attorneys in the matter of the case in the cession in violation of law and that he was cited for contempt by Judge Speer in 1912 and 1913.

11 SAILORS TRAPPED

LIEUTENANT AND MEN GO DOWN IN SUBMARINE A-7.

Efforts Still Being Made to Raise Warship But All Hope of Rescuing Men Is Gone.

Plymouth, Jan. 20.—An all-day search by a fleet of torpedo boats, to which a attached cables to raise from the bottom of Whitsand bay, failed to locate the sunken British submarine A-7 on Sunday. Although hope of any of the crew being alive was long ago given up six hours being the maximum time they could breathe after the ship sank—the search will be resumed.

Desperate efforts were made on Pri day to rescue Lieutenant Welman of the British navy and a crew of 11 men from submarine "A 7"—which sank during maneuvers in Whitsand bay.

Whether the men are dead or alive had not been established on Friday, but navy officials here expressed the opinion that all had perished.

The exact spot where the little vessel sank has not been determined. The "A-7," in company with the "A-8" and "A-9," was cruising off shore while engaged in maneuvers. Its sister ships claim that the "A-7" came to the end of the maneuvers, but nothing has been seen of the "A-7" since it opened its valves and dived.

When the officers of the other vessels found that the submarine was in distress they sent out signals for aid. Rescue boats were immediately rushed to the vicinity where the "A 7" went down. They threw out grappling irons and dragged the bay until darkness set in, but their efforts were fruitless.

The "A-7" was in charge of Lieut. Gilbert N. Welman, who holds rank in another officer. A number of the sailors were married, some making their first trip in a submarine.

COL. GOETHELS CANAL CHIEF

Wins Fight to Keep Politics Out of Panama and Will Have Power to Appoint 2,000 Men.

Washington, Jan. 20.—Col. George W. Goethals is to be permanent governor of the Panama canal zone. This was declared on high authority here on Friday. He has won the fight to keep the canal out of politics and will have almost autocratic power in the appointment of 2,000 men who will complete the canal. Goethals has made one of the biggest captures in years. Recognized as the man who built the canal in the record time, he revived his boyish idea and established a fine farm. Last year he raised 160 plates of apples and 1,000 bushels of potatoes. Cases of eggs were shipped to Washington, D. C., where he received from Secretary of Agriculture D. F. Houston a diploma because of his remarkable ability as an agriculturist. He is brought together for the purpose of showing the farmers in the Canal zone that whole weeds are most likely to live their trouble. The display has been worked up by E. W. Abbott, land agent for the U. S. C. C. A. railway. It recently said that in one, of the west are state a field of 1,000 acres of oats, was burned when it was discovered that a few noxious weeds had gone to seed. The blaze started in the highest activity was present in the neighborhood where the three prizes landed.

NATIONAL GRANGE.

The Order Is Strong Both Numerically and Financially.

An Outline of Principles For Which the Grange Stands—Always Active In the Interest of Legislation to Help the Farmer.

By J. W. DARROW.

The forty-seventh annual session of the national grange, Patrons of Husbandry, was held in the city of Manchester, N. H. The meeting of last year was held in Spokane, Wash. Thirty or more states entitled to delegates in the annual session are represented by the master of each state grange and his wife, who make up the voting body. In the grange room the women stand on an equal plane, hence it is that one of the two voting delegates is a woman. Year after year efforts on the part of some of the delegates are made to change this part of the laws to have the method of representation in the national grange changed from one representative corresponding to the senate of the United States to membership representation, same after the manner of the house of representatives, but there is a strong prejudice against making a change which would cut down the influence of the smaller grange states. Those who favor such a change are willing to believe that proportional representation is the correct and most equitable. Each of represents a lot of trouble on the details of the proposed plan for such representation, particularly with reference to the number of members that should entitle a state to extra votes. Consequently the matter is often as it comes up for action is laid aside, believe there is disagreement on this point. Then the matter of is assumed a question for additional delegates is one for serious consideration and to avoid this either could not power the present delegates could add thereto some one who is one of the parties objecting. State Master Vrooman of New York presented a resolution at the last session of the house on the basis of representation as follows: Every state master and his wife shall have each one vote in the grange and in addition shall have one vote each for every 10,000 members above the first 10,000. The resolution was turned down.

The order is strong financially, by a big assess amounting to over $150,000, and is increasing letting up with one to toward a million members. The Pennsylvania state grange is largest in New York that state now having upward of 105,000 members. Some counties in New York have seen more members than entire states in the west. For instance, Jefferson county has a membership of over 7,700, Chautauqua has 7,450 and St. Lawrence and Wayne over 5,000 each. Other states of large membership, ranging from 40,000 down to 20,000, rank as follows: Maine second, Michigan third, Pennsylvania fourth, Ohio fifth, New Hampshire sixth.

The grange has always been active in the interests of all legislation that will help the farmer, be it in this or any other state. Besides that, it believes what it does profitably to do with agriculture, it has always stood for legislation in behalf of all the people in the aggregate, has served it. Many of its policies, instituted years before they had been incorporated into any party platform or legislative measure, have been one by one taken up by the grange does not claim to have been the sole cause of such legislation it does claim to have lent most efficient aid in its consummation. Its work and its putting certain excellent laws upon our statute books, both in state and nation, it points with satisfaction to its record in behalf of postal savings, the conservation of our natural resources, good roads legislation and numerous measures affecting the welfare and the general good of the people, and other legislation in the interest of the farmer and also some good laws for the elevation of the farmer to a higher educational and social plane.

Top-heavy of the national grange are the reports made by last year's committee of the national grange. It covers federal aid in road improvement, on this which is strongly opposed in some quarters. After calling attention to the fact that our farmers have to pay $120 per ton more for a ton of fertilizer than is asked over our roads than it cost if we had highways equal to those of France, it says: "Our country is large and so the fact that what is good for one section is a section of another and as well as cross state highways, it cites the expenditures made in the government making better roads in some of our outlying possessions, mentioning particularly the Philippine Islands, $2,000,000 for roads in Porto Rico, recently $7,000,000 building a blue trail through Alaska and so on. Our navy cost $175,000,000 a year, and in 1911 it cost $11,000,000 to send our fleet around the world. It taught people to know we have 13,000 miles of coastline." While the grange does not criticise these expenditures it believes that "the congress of the United States should see that sufficient funds are provided for road purposes and so distributed among the several states as will bring about a better interest in better roads in all sections of the country."

In reference to the question of taxation the grange has enunciated certain basic principles around which it may gather its efforts and determine forceful, lasting details and minor matters to work themselves out as best they may." Some of these principles are these:

First—Since taxation is necessary for the maintenance of peace and the protection of property, individual or corporate, therefore so property, either real or personal, which is protected by law should be exempt from taxation except such as is specifically exempt by the state constitution.

Second—In order to secure equality in the distribution of the burdens of government, if personal property is to be exempt from taxation on account of the indebtedness of the owner thereof, then all kinds of personal property and real estate should be entitled to the same exemption.

Third—All corporations, real estate and personal property should be taxed for local purposes at the same in the same kind of property is taxed when owned by individuals.

Fourth—No city shall be permitted to make a separate assessment, and all property everywhere shall be uniformly assessed at its fair cash value.

These are not all, but some of the main principles laid down by the national grange. Relative to internal revenue taxes the grange believes that those taxes should be confined to luxuries and that an increase of internal revenue tax should be placed on all malt and intoxicating beverages.

The national grange stands in the [illegible] of those who desire the advancement of education, some three years particularly. It is emphatic in its indorsement of the Page-Wilson vocational education bill now pending in the congress of the United States. It believes it to be essential, favorable and suggestive of greater possibilities beyond. It believes in throwing open the public school buildings whether in use for regular school exercises for such other public purposes as the voters of the school district determine, as for community meetings, entertainments, etc. It commends and approves the work being done by the department of agriculture in sending out experts to assist in promoting farm efficiency. In the agricultural counties of each state. It emphasizes the fact that the supreme purpose of all education is not merely knowledge for possession, but for use; that that education, above all other, is to be sought whose possession inspires its possessor to larger usefulness and service in the world. To this type of education, primarily for the boy and girl, but likewise for every man and woman, by the use of every facility of modern possession, the grange stands irrevocably committed and eternally alert.

In a brief article like this it is impossible to do more than to define three or four of the lines of endeavor of the grange in securing for the farmer and all farmers, whether members of the Order or not, some of the "rights and privileges" which they are believed to be entitled to. Space it to say now that the demands of the grange are, on the whole, most conservative and sane, and in the attainment of the ends they have in view they will continue to use the very influence of the organization in behalf of their measures.

THE GRANGE

Conducted by
J. W. DARROW, Chatham, N. Y.
Editor of the New York State Grange Review

NINE BIG REASONS.

Why Pennsylvania Grange Opposed $50,000,000 Loan For Roads.

First—It is not a good business proposition for any business to borrow money when it is not necessary. The state has abundant resources to construct roads without borrowing a dollar. We can now raise from current revenues from $500,000 to $600,000 annually.

Second—Should more money be needed the state grange proposed a plan many years ago providing for a tax on I mill on corporate property.

Third—The interest and sinking fund charges on a $50,000,000 loan will require $3,000,000 annually. On fifty year bonds the interest charges and principal would cost vast millions until paid. Why not pay as you go instead of working for a dead horse?

Fourth—Years ago the state borrowed at various times and times amounting to about $50,000,000 for our public works, canals, etc. The interest and sinking fund charges plus the cost of repairing and maintaining these canals so burdensome to the people that they were finally sold at a tribute. Shall we repeat that experiment?

Fifth—The highway department has proved itself intelligent and wasteful. It has disobeyed the law in not preparing bulletins to systematize and instruct township supervisors. It has issued no report since 1909.

Sixth—New York has borrowed $150,000,000 for roads and road canals. Ohio has borrowed no money and has three times as many miles of good roads as has New York. Ohio has equalization of taxation. All kinds of property pays the same mill rate, and the assessors are elected at big mills. It is the same rate on a mortgage as on a farm. The average mill rate on Pennsylvania farms is 18 and on corporate property 3 mills.

Seventh—The permanent road has not yet been discovered. Our expensive roads are lasting from two to ten years. It is a wrong principle to issue long time bonds for improvements that will be gone before the bonds are due.

Eighth—The farmers of the state have been deceived, ignored and bamboozled in this whole road business. State aid for township roads provided for by law has been refused, the town ship roads stolen, and now under the new township road law passed at the last session of the legislature the local road taxes are to be spent under the orders of the highway department. This department has neglected to maintain and keep in repair the roads now in their possession and seems to know nothing about our dirt roads. It has now about 125 officeholders and clerks at Harrisburg, plus about 4,000 scattered over the state.

Ninth—The grange believes that by defeating the bond issue the customers and clients of our road boards will be systematized and all our roads improved in the course of two or three years, so that legislation can be passed to protect our roads and keep them to repair at the lowest possible cost.—American Agriculturist.

REPORT FOR THE YEAR.

There Were 411 Granges Organized and Reorganized Last Year.

The number of granges organized and reorganized from Oct. 1, 1912, to Sept. 30, 1913, both inclusive, is as follows:

Organized.—California, 4; Colorado, 5; Connecticut, 3; Idaho, 1; Illinois, 1; Indiana, 8; Iowa, 6; Kansas, 23; Kentucky, 2; Maine, 14; Maryland, 6; Massachusetts, 22; Michigan, 18; Minnesota, 17; Missouri, 10; Montana, 18; Nebraska, 43; New Jersey, 2; North Dakota, 1; New York, 28; Ohio, 29; Oregon, 8; Pennsylvania, 103; South Dakota, 22; Virginia, 1; Washington, 13; West Virginia, 2; Wisconsin, 21; Wyoming, 11; total, 411.

Reorganized.—California, 1; Colorado, 1; Illinois, 2; Massachusetts, 1; Michigan, 1; Ohio, 1; Pennsylvania, 4; Washington, 1; total, 12.

The grange is becoming national not only in name, but in scope of work, more and more every year. The local ones in growth in membership for the year ending Sept. 30, 1913, were as follows: 1910 Washington led with 105 new granges, Michigan being second with 18 granges. In 1911 Ohio had organized 39 new new granges and was closely followed by Washington with 34 granges. Ohio kept up its good record in 1912, with 39 new granges organized, Washington closely following with forty-eight. This year the lead has come a little further east, and Pennsylvania reports fifty-three new granges, and Nebraska, Washington and Michigan have forty-five. The total of granges organized throughout the country this year shows above the normal gain, the record since 1910 being as follows: In 1910, 690; in 1911, 453; in 1912, 472; this year, 411. The total for the four years is 1,745 new granges and 178 reinstated. The growth is steady and permanent, and this nation's wide growth, coupled with increasing wealth, shows that the grange has not stepped in and has appealed to the civic pride of the farmer to clear up his home town. It has also offered a number of fair things, the board of agriculture for the best articles written by any member of a grange in Maine on the subject of "feasible improvements."

C. L. Lee is master of the Minnesota state grange and is serving his second term in that office. Mr. Lee is actively interested in the agricultural affairs of the state and has been for the past twenty years.

Progress in Ohio.

State Secretary E. F. Crane reports the number of granges in good standing in Ohio Oct. 1 as 092, a gain of twenty-five granges for the year, number of members in good standing, 43,[illegible], a gain for the year of about 2,000. This is a satisfactory growth considering that this has been a hard year to do grange work. The next state grange meeting will be held at Lima, O., on Dec. 9-11.

Where Science Fails.

Science has wrought many achievements, but it has not cleared up a single elemental mystery, and it has created a thousand lesser mysteries that never were imagined until science came. Science has demonstrated that the oak of a world used to be an acorn, but how that corn came into existence or whence it obtained the material to make that acorn have beaten an oak science has not possible for a mammoth Brobdingnagian forest. Even in his forest at 7:35 in the morning it may have been only 10:20 or more or less to have them selling on the street as newspapers at 10:20, because that the manufacturer himself is a boy that has a mind or is a mind that has a little boy, cannot even guess.—Atlantic Monthly.

Iron Mold Stains.

Iron mold stains spread in any fabric when the weather is damp or in the wash. To remove them stretch the stained part over a basin, and pour a little water, so that the steam may penetrate the fabric, and apply with a feather a teaspoonful of salt dissolved in a dessertspoonful of lemon juice. When the stain is strong dip the material well into the hot water, afterward rinsing very thoroughly in cold water.

Proved It Was Simple.

In a registration booth in San Francisco an old colored woman had just finished registering for the first time.

"Am you sure," she asked the clerk, "that I done all I has to do?"

"Quite sure," replied the clerk; "you see it's very simple."

"I's ought to knowed it," said the old woman, "cause I done what I have been doin' it all done years I might 'a' knowed it was a powerful simple process."

SYNOPSIS.

Percy Darrow, a scientist in search of a wife, enters the office of Mr. Carthy, a matrimonial agent. Carthy has had been threatened by an angry husband and he thinks Darrow is the man. Carthy tries to get Darrow out of the way by sending him to Helen Robinson, a lovely stenographer, who he says is in danger. Darrow goes and finds Helen being pursued by a villainous looking man. Darrow knocks the man down and Helen escapes. Darrow goes with Helen to her home. The next evening the author is summoned to the office of Carthy. Darrow is there and he explains his adventure. CHAPTER IV.

Darkness and Panic.

Probably the only men in the whole of New York who were surprised at and unsentimentally the fact that the entire electric light system of the city was paralyzed were those in the newspaper offices. Those capable citizens immediately set to work adaptation to new environments and to wide reaches of imagination came to the rescue of experiments, and accepted the inevitable.

Within ten minutes the Despatch had messenger boys on tap instead of bells, telephones, telegraphs, gongs, and a variety of lamps and candles in place of electricity. Within an hour Broadway town was speculating why in blazes it was so much darker than usual. The Despatch was out after news.

Meaden, city editor, detailed three men in the office to "get" Carthy. Was it bad all happened

"And if the scientific men haven't any other notions, ask 'em if it's anything to do with the earth spasms through the tail of the comet," he told them.

The rest of the staff he turned out for stories of the effects. His imagination was struck by the contemplation of a modern civilized city deprived of its nerve system.

After conversing with critical politicians, theater and hotel assignments, he sent Halsted to the bridge; Long man to the C-and Central; Kennedy, Warren and Thomas to the tubes, subways and ferries. The others he told to go out on the streets.

They saw a city of four million people stopped short on its way home to dinner. They saw a city, miles in extent, set back without preparation to a communication by messenger only. They saw a city, unprepared, blinking its way by the inadequate illumination of a half-century gone by.

Hallowell found a packed mass of humanity at the bridge. Wires dangerously in a crash, even with incessant outgoing trains sucking away at the surplus, now was a panic—a panic the more terrible in that it was solid, solid, inert, unshakable. Women fainted, and stood unconscious erect. Men sank slowly from sight, signalled, shouted, but comforted, but crushed in the dull roar of the crowd, and were seen no more. Around the edge people fought frantically to get out; others, in the grip of overwhelming, brute instinct, fought as hard to get in.

The police were unavailing. They could not penetrate to break the center. Across the bridge streamed a procession of broken and battered humanity, escaped from or cast forth by the monster. The daylight was fading, and within the shade men could not see each another's faces.

Longman at the Grand Central observed a large and curious crowd that filled the lobbies and perked the streets round about. They waited for their trains, and the trains gathered. The ten minutes trains continued to enter the yard. The guided Long man until he remembered that gravity would bring in those this side of Harlem. None went out. The waiting throng was a hotbed for rumors. Longman collected a few of the more amusing stuff, and was quite well satisfied with his story until he saw Halsted. The assignment sneaked.

Fire in the subways and tubes the stoppage of the trains had automatically discontinued the motion ventilation. The underworld, unreasonable in material terms of the nonexistent third rail, dangerous, stood their ways painfully to the stations. With inconceivable slowness the multitude moved upward. Strong men staggered fainting into the streets. When revived they held dreadful intervals of exhaustion over windrows of bodies there below.

Through the gathering twilight of the streets, dusky and shadowy, flitted ba like the criminals of the underworld. What they saw, that they took. Growing bolder, they progressed from pocket-picking to holdups. From holdups to looting. The police reserves were all out, they could do little. Favored by obscurity, the thieves plundered. It would have needed a solid cordon of officers to have protected adequately the retail district. Swiftly a guerrilla warfare operated up Bleeker, Christopher, Barrow, Carmine streets, and Fourth streets of the city.

Here and there fire broke out. Men on bicycles brought in the alarms; then, as twilight thickened, men on foot. Chief Croker promptly assigned blank bookcoins in all the fall towers, and the firemen held a hundred scared ass to watch the night.

At eight o'clock, two hours after the inception of the curious phenomena, the condition suddenly passed from a condition came to the outside parts of the city in different ways. Lower Broadway, for a refuge, did the lights and transportation facilities resume their functions. Most of the lights were being lighted when the paused experts. Here and there the blaring of a gong or bell, the ring of a bell, the response of a voll of amusement to test, brought the meters of the lightings that their rebellious offspring again asserted. In the Bronx, a halfhour the city's illumination again reflected softly from the hace of the autumn sky, the clatter of the nervy trolley, the wail of the motor sirens again smote the air.

Malachi McCarthy, having caught a ride on a friendly drag, arrived home. At eight ten his telephone bell for the first time jangled its summons. McCarthy answered it.

"I'm Simmons, the wireless operator," the small voice told him. "Say! There's a lot of these fool messages in the air again. You know what they said last night about six o'clock, and what happened.

"Let's have 'em," growled McCarthy.

"Here she is: 'McCarthy, will you do as I tell you? Answer. Remember the sign at six o'clock.' It is signed 'Jack.'

"Where did that come from?" asked the boy.

"Can't tell, but somewhere a long ways off."

"How do you know that?"

"By the sound."

"How far—about?"

"Might be anywhere."

"Can you get an answer back?"

"I think so. Can't tell whether my spark will reach that far. I can send out a call for it."

"Well, send this," said McCarthy. "Go to hell."

On the evening of the phenomena, some moments after the lights had returned to his apartments, where he had dressed unusually early, and by daylight. This was because he had a dinner engagement uptown. It was an informal engagement for a family dinner at seven o'clock, but Percy had been requested by one of the members to come at about six. This was because the other members would presumably be dressing between six and seven.

"Can't You See How We Need Each other?"

The young man found a fire blazing on the hearth, although the evening was warm. A graceful girl sat looking into the flames. She did not rise as the scientist entered, but held out her hand with an air of engaging frankness.

"Sit down," she invited the guest. "This is a fearful and wonderful time to ask you to venture abroad in your glass clothes, but I wanted to see you most particularly before the rest of the family comes down."

"You are a singularly beautiful woman," observed Darrow in a detached manner, as he disposed his long form gracefully in the opposite armchair.

The girl looked at him absently.

"That is intended as an excuse or explanation—not in the least as a compliment," Darrow went on.

"You would not be so obliging, if I were not—beautiful!" she back the girl. "That is indeed not compliment."

"I should be especially so obliging," amended Darrow lazily, "but I should not feel so generally satisfied and pleased and rewarded in advance. I should have more of a feeling of virtue, and less of one of pleasure."

"I see," said the girl, her brows still level. "Then I suppose you are not interested in what I might ask you as one human being to another?"

"Pardon me," Helen interrupted Darrow, with unusual decision. "This is just what I am interested in—you as a human being, a delicious, beautiful, feminine human being who could wash hold the created universe to a lucky man."

"But not the whole—"

"Yes, the whole," mused Darrow, relaxing to his old indolent attitude, "the whole, he round himself to explain. 'I am a scientist, for instance. You could not be a scientist, you have not the training.'

"Nor the brains," interposed Helen. Warford, a trifle blandly.

"Nor the kind of brains," amended Darrow. "I have enough of that myself," he added. He leaned forward, his eyes suddenly lost in the depths of his brown eyes. "Helen," he pleaded, "can't you see how we need each other?"

But the girl shut both her eyes, and shook her head vigorously.

"Unless people can be everything to each other, they should be nothing—people like us," said she.

Darrow sighed and leaned back.

"I feel that way, too the devil of it I can't think it," said he. Then after a pause: "What is it you want of me, Helen? I'm ready."

"Jack," said she.

"What's the matter with Jack?"

"Everything and nothing. He's just out of college. This fall he must go to work. Father wants him to go into the bank. Jack doesn't care much, and will drift into the office unless something stops him."

"Well?" said Darrow.

"An office will ruin him. He isn't in the least interested in the things they do in offices; and he's too high spirited to settle down to a grind."

"He's like you in spirit, Helen," said Darrow. "What is he interested in?"

"He's interested in you."

"What?" cried Darrow. "Wish I were a family trait."

"He thinks you are wonderful, and he knew all about all your adventures and voyages with Doctor Schermerhorn. He admires the way you look and act and talk. I suspect him of trying to imitate you." Helen's eyes gleamed with amusement.

Darrow smiled his slow and laugh smile.

"The last time I saw Jack he stood six feet and weighed about one hundred and eighty-five pounds." he ventured.

"The imitation is funny," admitted Helen, "but based on genuine admiration.

"What do you want me to do with him?" drawled Darrow.

"I thought you could take him in with you; get him started at something scientific, something that would interest and absorb him, and something that would not leave all his real energies free for mischief."

Darrow leaned his head against the back of the chair and laughed softly. So long did his amusement continue that Helen at length brought him rather sharply to account.

"I was merely admiring," then explained Darrow, "the delicacy and infinity of the proposal. It displays at once such really remarkable insight into the psychological needs of another human being, and such abysmal ignorance of the demands of what we are pleased to call science."

"You are the most superior and unsparing and conceited man I know!" cried Helen. "I am sorry I asked you. I'd like to know what there is so silly in my request."

Jack is physically very strong; he is most courageous; he has a good disposition, a gentleman's code, and an eager likable nature. I gather further that he does not the honor of admiring me personally. He has received a general, not a special, college education."

"Well!" challenged Helen.

"Oh!" cried the girl indignantly, and half rising. "You are insulting!"

"No," denied Darrow. "Not that—never to you, Helen, and you know it! I'm merely talking sense. Leaving aside the minor considerations that am myself looking for employment, what use has a science for a bullfighter? Jack has no aptitude for science; he has none of the accurate training are absolutely essential for science. He probably wouldn't be interested in science. At the moment he happens to admire me, and I'm mighty glad and proud that it is so, but that doesn't help. If I happened to be a saloon man, Jack would quite as cheerfully want to be a barkeeper. I'd do anything in the world to help Jack; but I'm not the man. You want to hunt up somebody that needs a good bullfighter. Look do:

"I hate such a cold-blooded way of going at things," cried the girl. "You show no more interest in Jack than if he were a—"

Darrow smiled whimsically. "Indeed I do, Helen," he said quietly; "that is why I feel so sorry for little. Science would gain no quicker than an office—in the long run. What he wants is a job of action—something out West—or in the construction of our great and good city. Now, if I had a political pull, instead of a scientific twist, I would land Jack in a minute. Why don't you try that?"

"Father and Harry are enemies," she said simply. She arose with an air of finality.

"I must use your telephone," said he, without apology.

He was gone barely a minute; then returned to the table with a clouded brow. Almost immediately after the company had risen from the board, he excused himself and left.

Darrow, in his hat and coat, however, he returned for a final word with Helen.

"Where is Jack this evening?" he asked.

"Dining out with friends. Why?"

"Will you see him tonight?"

"I ask if necessary."

"Do Tell him to come down to my room at eight o'clock tomorrow morning as he can. I've changed my mind."

"Oh!" cried Helen joyously. "Then you've concluded I'm right, after all?"

"No," said Darrow, "but I'm thing carries out to its logical conclusion. I'm going to need a good bullfighter for."

CHAPTER V.

A Scientist in Pink Silk.

The next morning promptly at eight o'clock Jack Warford, in response to a muttered invitation, burst excitedly into Percy Darrow's room. He found the scientist, draped in a palejpink silk kimono embroidered with lightblue butterflies, scraping methodically at his face with a safety-razor. At the sight the young fellow came to an abrupt stop, as though some one had met him with a dash of cold water in the face.

"Hello!" said he, in a constrained voice.

Darrow cast a glance through his shiny little bathe at the newcomer.

"Yes, my amiable young cantine, just up."

Jack looked somewhat puzzled at the application, but seated himself. "Helen said you want to see me," he suggested.

Darrow leisurely cleansed the component parts of his safety-razor, washed and sponged his face, and dried.

"I do," said he, "if you're game."

"Of course I'm game!" cried the boy definitely.

Darrow surveyed his fresh, young, clear face and the trim taut build of him with dispassionate eyes.

"Are you?" he remarked simply. "Possibly. But you're not the man to be sure of it.

"I didn't mean it as bragging," cried Jack, flushing.

"Surely not," drawled Darrow, stretching out his long legs. "But no man can tell whether or not he's game until he's tried out. That's no reflection on him, either. I remember once I went through something my best friend murdered; being shot at a dozen times myself as I climbed a cliff; seeing a pirate ship destroyed with all on board, apparently by the hand of Providence; escaping from a big volcanic boatup into a cave, and having the cave entrance drop down just behind me. I was as cool as a cucumber all through it. I remember congratulating myself that, anyhow, I was going to die game."

"By Jove!" murmured Jack Warford, staring at him fascinated. Evidently, the super-beautiful garment had been forgotten.

"Then a warship's crew rescued me, and I broke down completely and went into a sanitarium for a season at all. I'd just managed to postpone finding it out for a while."

"Jove!" cried Jack Warford cried Jack.

"Well, if that sort of reaction happens along before the trouble is all over, it may inconvenience the rescuers," Percy Darrow pointed out. "No man knows whether or not he's game until he's tested." Darrow's vacant whimsically, "I imagine you're likely to postpone your reactions as long as you can."

"What's up? What do you want me to do?"

"Stick by me; obey orders," said Darrow.

"What's up?"

"Did you notice anything in the papers this morning?"

"They're full of the electrical failure last night. Haven't you seen them?"

"Not yet. While I dress, tell me what they say."

"The worst was in the tubes—" Warford began, but Darrow interrupted him.

Way of the World.

The poor man, penniless, friendless, was starving.

Rather than that, he cast himself in the river to drown.

A passerby, seeing the poor man in the water drowning, plunged in, swam to him, and brought him, almost to his last gasp, ashore.

The poor man's friends labored with the poor man and at last brought him back to life.

Then they congratulated the poor man on "Lero having been help at hand to save him from a watery grave.

And making up a purse for the brave fellow who had thus gone to the poor man's rescue, he and they went their ways.

Who Is Your Master?

By REV. I. H. RALSTON
Secretary of Correspondence Department Moody Bible Institute, Chicago.

TEXT—Ro. ye man can serve two masters. Matt. 6:24.

Experience proves that everyone has some master. While this text indicates that a man may attempt to serve two masters, he can serve only one. Our thought must not be confined to choice between two masters only. There may be several. The question being that a man serves only one. Mammon may mean self, the world, the flesh or the devil. We mention our thought in three possible masters.

Self as Master.

Man, as a rule, thinks he is his own master. He says: "I am the captain of my soul, I am the master of my fate." Yet, he is the most helpless of the world.

"Presume not God to scan."

Man presumes these words to mean that a knowledge of God is not his first duty. In many cases he utterly disregards God in his selfish pursuits. Ambitious of a perfect man, and strives to develop his manhood. A party of travelers in the Alps were starting out one morning to scale one of the highest peaks. They had a young man to go with them, and on his determination of what he did not intend to make the ascent. He replied, "I will go as far as I think it is safe for me to go." He was a fool. He fell and lost his life. Man, in his self-sufficiency, is a fool. Man, in his self-sufficiency, is a fool. Man, in his self-sufficiency, is a fool

Otsego County Man Breeding Foxes and Other "Varmints" for Their Fur

Perhaps one of the most curious and yet one of the most important and profitable of the smaller enterprises carried on in Otsego county, says the Gaylord Advance, is conducted near Waters by W. Chalker & Sons. Several years ago this firm started on a small scale the raising and breeding of foxes and other fur-bearing animals on their farm four and one-half miles southeast of Waters. Gradually the business has grown, the firm constantly experimenting in the methods of raising the animals and in their more profitable crossing, especially among the several breeds of the fox tribe.

From time to time this firm has had in their possession black breeding foxes, whose actual value has ranged as high as $5,000 or more per pair, but the market has been so active on these animals that they have kept them only a short time.

Recently the firm purchased two very rare specimens of fox, a pair of pure white Arctic foxes, which they secured through an European agency. These animals are not native to this country and have seldom if ever been seen on the western hemisphere. Even in their native haunts they are becoming very scarce, and as a result the price now commanded for a pair of good breeders is large. Chalker & Sons purchased the animals as more of an experiment than anything else, their idea being to cross them with other breeds.

In addition to the white foxes, the farm is at present stocked with a pair of black cross foxes and eight pair of red foxes. Possum, skunk, mink, coon and muskrat are other members of the furry tribe which they are now raising with great success. Both skunk and muskrat are gradually replacing many of the more costly furs and in recent years, numerous skunk "farms" have sprung up all over the country, and where proper care has been given to the animals, the industry has invariably proven successful, the little animals multiplying rapidly and the fur commanding a high price.

Chalker & Sons find their chief market for furs on Prince Edward island, and annually make several presents to that country.

POPPY FIELDS OF PERSIA.

Round about Shiraz, or for an Persian, southward to the country of the date palm, a great deal of opium is grown, and several thousand chests are shipped from Shiraz to China and various other large centers of the twenty seasons. The collecting of the opium juice begins in June, when the flowers having faded and the leaves fallen, the poppy heads are ready to be tapped. When the sun stands low on the western horizon the men with the tools start their work, making one or two incisions in the fleshy green skin of the bowls on the side toward the setting sun. During the cool night hours the bowls, strong smelling vicious juice comes out and collects in pearl-like drops on the surface of the wound tissue.

Before the rising sun gains sufficient power to dry or crystallize the sticky substance the gathering is in full swing. Stepping carefully from plant to plant, the men gather the opium on the broad blades of their crescent shaped collecting knives, which have bottomed a hole about an inch high to prevent the juice from dropping off. As soon as a knife-full it is handed to the owner of the land or his foreman, who stands among the collectors to see that none of the precious drops are hidden away by the workers to increase their daily wages. As soon as the morning work is over the fields are deserted until the afternoon, when new incisions have to be made. Each plant is tapped twice, and a large number need alive from twenty to thirty grains of opium.—Christian Herald.

MYSTERY OF SIGHT

Most Wonderful and Inexplicable of All Our Senses.

LIMITS OF THE HUMAN VISION.

There Are Colors All About Us That the Eye Cannot See, as We Cannot Distinguish Beyond the Extremes of the Spectrum Red and Violet.

No two persons see precisely alike any more than any two persons hear precisely the same. The differences in these perceptions are due to the wide disparities not only in the organs of vision and hearing, but also to the differences in mental makeup of the individuals.

There are often unsolved problems or to sight than any other sense. It is the most wonderful and at the same time the most inexplicable sense that we possess. Every school child is taught that we see because rays of light reach the retina of the eye after passing through the transparent cornea, that curved surface which is in direct contact with the external air, the aqueous or watery humor, and the crystalline and vitreous humors.

The eye is thus made up of three separate lenses, through which the light pieces before reaching the retina. When observed from outside it is plain that all the images appear to be reversed in the eye. We see everything upside down, but in some way this reversal is corrected, so that things appear to us as they should, though this simple point has not yet been explained by the most advanced science.

But the eye sees not only images and light; it also distinguishes color. And here is one of the greatest problems with which the eye has to deal. The white light of a ray of sunshine is divided by a prism into all of the colors from red to violet, and it is one of the greatest triumphs of modern optics to have proved that what we call color is nothing but the speed with which some parts of the ray of sunshine strike upon the retina.

The eye can perceive waves striking it as low as red and as high as violet, but there are many rays both above and below the red and violet, the extreme of the spectrum, as they are called. The human eye cannot perceive them because the limits of the tissues or the frequency with which they strike upon the retina are too great or too small for the human organ. Yet they are most important, exercising a great influence upon human beings.

The ultra violet rays are known now by their chemical action and are termed chemical rays, while the infra red rays are heat rays and are known as such. So it is evident that there is much that the eye does not or cannot see, even with all the mechanical aids which have been provided in telescope, microscope, etc.

What really carries the message of vision to the brain, center of vision, which is at the back of the head, is the optic nerve, and the fact that if you have a pnip in the back of the head it is probably due to eye strain is admitted by all physicians. If you feel that strain and headache located at the occiput the first thing to do is to consult an oculist and get the glasses which will correct the error of vision. Your eyes may be wrong in any number of ways. Either there may be a defect in some one of the lenses or the nerve may have become weakened or the means of accommodation by which the eye is formed may be wrong. The fact is probably the component of troubles and may be easily corrected if promptly taken in hand by an expert.

Cross eyes are only defects of muscular control, and the latest researches point to the necessity for correcting this defect as promptly as possible. Many parents make the fatal mistake of not calling in the specialist even when their notice that an infant "crosses the eyes." But it is in the early stages that this trouble may be best corrected; otherwise the muscles become fixed in their error and the defect is permanent.

It is never too early to put glasses upon the child who requires them. It is often too late to save the child from permanent injury of the most beautiful, most expensive and most useful organ.—New York World.

LOOKS LIKE A SEA OF ICE.

Curious Lake of Soda in the Wilds of East Africa.

Lake Magadi in British East Africa is famous for its vast deposits of soda. Until recently few people have seen its shores, for it lies in the midst of a barren and waterless district, but the rail way that was started a few years ago by an English company opens the way for travelers to this curious natural phenomenon. A recent visitor describes it in also London Field:

Ordinarily it looks as if it had frozen and as if snow had then fallen upon it, partially thawed and frozen again. The temperature gives the lie to this appearance of condensed ice, for the heat is extreme and at midday almost unbearable. The sun burns the feet even through a boot, and the sharp, projecting spines, which resemble hoar frost, will pierce any except the thickest sole. After the rains there is a layer of water over the greater part of the lake, which turns a lovely pink color. By moonlight the scene is wildly beautiful.

The lake contains at least 200,000,000 tons of crystalline substance, composed almost equally of carbonate and bicarbonate of soda. Surface and underground streams of saturated soda liquor continually feed it. The apparent supply of soda is enormous, and as fast as it is removed a new surface, formed from the "mother liquor" beneath, replaces it. Native have collected soda from the same spot year after year without making the slightest difference in the abundance of the supply.

In sad but loving remembrance of our dear son and brother who died one year ago, Jan. 31, 1913:

Oh dearest, sweetest brother,
How you have passed away.
It seems not that it is one year ago—
But only yesterday.
When we was speak your loving name,
Our eyes with tears are wet.
Oh, brother! how we loved you,
And love you as we forget.
The Lord took you from us—
It was His holy will;
And left in our hearts a vacancy
Which no one can ever fill.
But in our saddest moments,
One happy thought holds sway—
We will meet again, dear brother,
And be happy some sweet day.

FROM LOVING PARENTS, BROTHERS AND SISTERS.

House Dresses
....That Makes This Store Popular....
We've sold thousands of house dresses but never any like these. You will search the country over for their equal. The most fashionable stores in larger cities carry and feature
ELECTRIC BRAND
and yet they cost no more than ordinary house dresses. And why? Listen—
The makers of Electric Brand have specialized on House Dresses for years—they make nothing else. They buy tremendous quantities of fabrics and get rock-bottom prices. Because of their vast output they can afford the services of high-priced designers the most clever. Each operator is a specialist she does one thing, and does it well.
You can be just as attractive and neatly attired in the house as on the street—and at no greater cost than for an ordinary house dress. They wash easily and are made of fast colored, guaranteed fabrics—chambrays, percales, ginghams. Look where you will you can't find better house dress values. It will pay you to see our assortment.

The Right and Wrong of It

As Louis Schmied, member of the Schmied-Siemon Co., contractors, erecting the new Kresge building at Park street and Adams avenue west, saw the Detroit Tribune, stripped into the steel skeleton of the structure one day last week a heavy iron bolt struck the floor a foot from him.

"That came near being an accident," mused Mr. Schmied, as he looked skyward. "Funny how that happened to fall."

Mr. Schmied didn't think it was so funny when he saw a crowd of about 1,000 men surging back and forth in front of the Kresge building yesterday morning, threatening the non-union men who were working in the building. Police were busy keeping them moving. He found that bolts, pails of mortar and pieces of wood had been "accidentally" dropping from the upper floors of the structure for several days, and in each case the plummet struck near a non-union worker.

The demonstration yesterday was the result of trouble that has been brewing for several days and which culminated in the union men demanding that the contractors keep "closed shop" and that all non-union men be discharged, no matter how long their service with the company. About 60 men, half the force working on the building, walked out. It is said, because the contractors refused to comply with the demands.

"There was no dispute about wages or hours," said Mr. Schmied. "The union men insisted that we employ only union labor and demanded the discharge of the non-union workers.

"Many of our men, non-union workers, have been in our employ for years, and have rendered faithful service. We will stand by them; that is why we refused to comply.

"We have nothing against union men and are willing to employ them, but we keep an open shop."

A Question With Two Sides to It

It is amazing how readily some people snap at an advertising scheme that some outside concern falls into them. Most of them are without merit, and all of them of doubtful efficiency. One that we have in mind, particularly, is the electric display on that architecturally artistic structure on Bridge street.

Will some one tell us wherein the town or the advertiser has benefited by it? After a week that it may be considered a novelty nobody looks at it. Does it say anything about "Charlevoix the Beautiful," or Western Michigan Development? Does it exert any influence on those who motor here from other parts? And yet the price thereof goes to swell the coffers of some outside concern which does not care a rap whether or not Charlevoix prospers. And it is to with all these outside advertising fakes.

Meanwhile, the local papers are, fifty-two times a year, sending abroad the truth about Charlevoix and Northern Michigan. We know nothing of what it costs, and we care not, but this paper rejects all advertising from other cities and towns which are competing for Charlevoix trade, and thereby has lost hundreds of dollars. Candidly, business men of Charlevoix, is it right?

A Great Structure

Without doubt the finest structure of its kind in Northern Michigan is the big new boathouse being erected by Price Bros. for the Chicago Club.

The building stands at the mouth of the old river which separates the Club grounds from the island. Its dimensions are 156 feet. It stands on 50 clusters and has 42-foot "stalls" for motor boats.

But the most striking feature of the structure is the strength and stability of it. The frame is of heavy timber, reinforced by strong iron fastenings. It is in every way proof against ice or wind.

The frame is completed and the work continues. The cost of the building is about $12,000.

The building will have three handsome cupolas, and, architecturally, will be a striking adornment to the harbor.

Primary Petitions

Mayor, Harry Nicholls; Alderman 1st ward, Geo. W. Frost; 2d ward, W. R. Earney; 3d ward, Chas. Carey. Supervisors, F. J. Meech and Chas. J. Zettler in their respective wards.

The democrats organized for the campaign Tuesday afternoon and filed the following ticket for the primaries: Mayor, Dr. J. A. Auld; clerk, H. F. McHugh; alderman 1st ward, Jos. F. Hewhat; 3d ward, F. M. Harris; 3d ward, Geo. Anderson. Supervisors, 1st ward, R. N. Faulkner; 2d ward, Alex. Cameron; 3d ward, W. H. Miller.

Etc. early Friday morning caused $20,000 loss to firms in the Munson threestory brick building at Traverse City. Those to sustain loss were: The Northern Music House and the Economy Store had their stocks badly damaged by water; the Knights of Pythias' property is believed to be almost a total loss; the Jeanman Business College sustained heavy loss on its stock room.

The Truth About Calumet

Basing our opinions upon our own personal investigation, we believe that the following from Leslie's Weekly, is a correct analysis of the cause of the Calumet strike trouble:

"The Michigan copper strike has cost nearly four score lives and the loss of millions of dollars in wages and in earnings to the mining companies, yet the majority of miners never wanted to strike. The strike was the work of the Western Federation of Miners, and was due largely to rivalry among its leaders. While President Charles E. Moyer was in Europe attending the International Miners' Congress, Vice-President Char. P. Mahoney called the men out, hoping thus to get prestige as the leader of a successful strike. A great majority of the employees of the Calumet & Hecla Mining Co., have voluntarily petitioned the company never to recognize the Western Federation of Miners or employ its members.

"There was no issue between the miners and their employers that might not easily have been settled without a strike. For three or four years, however, the Western Federation of Miners has been working among the men of Michigan's Upper Peninsula and the strike offered the possibility of fastening the closed shop on the operators, which would come a new and profitable collection agency in the interest of the organization. Its prolongation will the resultant suffering among the miners and their families has been due not to the miners themselves, but to the officials and agents of this outside organization, who are sent to stir up what promised to be a most fertile field for contributions to their federation.

"When Thieves Fall Out"—Etc

Prosecuting Attorney Geo. G. Covell, for 12 years United States district attorney with headquarters in Grand Rapids, doesn't suit Sheriff C. Allan Smith of Grand Traverse county. Sheriff Smith went to Lansing for a conference with the governor and the attorney general. With him he took a mass of affidavits to back up his complaint that Covell was in no way worthy of his office. The sheriff did not ask directly that steps should be taken to remove the prosecutor, but he intimated that something should be done. The state officials promised to investigate. Covell served three terms of four years each as district attorney. He went out of office Dec. 16, 1912, being succeeded by Fred C. Weimore of Cadillac.

Smith is the man who, when game warden, did not know a whitefish from a menominee. Covell is the man who secured the removal of the Charlevoix deputy collector of customs because he (the deputy collector) would not support him for congress.

The Beaver Island Mail

On Saturday word came from St. James to the Charlevoix postmaster to send all Island mail to Cross Village, and a full dray load was sent the same day.

Tuesday morning at eight o'clock the mail started from the Island, via Hog Island, with hopes of getting through by Wednesday noon. Seven passengers accompanied the outfit, all residents of the mainland who have been stranded on the Island three weeks.

LATER—The mail equipage made a good run across the channel, arriving at Cross Village early Tuesday evening. The mail comes per week. The carriers report the roughest traveling they ever encountered on the route.

"College Life," With Local Talent

With all its scintillating scenic effects and its catchy, tinkling music, "College Life," the three act college musical comedy comes to the Charlevoix Theater Friday night. A cast and chorus of 30 Charlevoix people will assist Clyde P. Steen and Otis E. Mann, of Chicago, who are directing the production.

"College Life" is being presented in Charlevoix under the auspices of Pine Lake Lodge No. 122, Knights of Pythias, and is brought here after an exceptionally successful tour of this section of the state. Press notices speak in especially high terms of the production at Alpena, Bay City, Saginaw, East Jordan, Manistee and Harbor Springs.

Those who will compose the local cast are: Lee Smith, Paul Scroggie, Jr., Miss Helen Meech, Miss Peterson, Dean Scroggie, Everess Nordrum, Otto Powers, Miss Mildred Johnson, H. C. McCartney, Miss Marjorie Miller, Miss Annette Nordrum, Paul Hansha and Mr. Steen. In addition there will be a chorus of forty.

The Christian Science Monitor

As a newspaper par excellence the Christian Science Monitor is at the head of the procession. Its quality appeals to the printer, the publisher and the editor—to the printer for its artistic typography; to the publisher for its systematic "make-up," and to the editor for the surpassing candor and ability displayed in its editorial columns on every conceivable subject of international interest. As a newspaper to be taken home at nightfall and read by the family around the leaping hearth, we consider it the best in the United States. This is not an advertisement, but a newspaper man's voluntary recognition of newspaper merit.

Teachers' Institute

In spite of the stormy weather which prevailed, over one hundred of the teachers of the county attended the Inspiration Institute held at East Jordan on Feb. 2d and 3d.

Supt. L. A. Butler, of Boyne City was appointed by the department as conductor and gave three very able and interesting addresses during the meeting.

In his discussion of the subject of Nature Study, Prof. Butler took up a study of the emergenses of northern Michigan. He proved conclusively to those present, first, that this subject can be made very interesting, and second, that very many of us really see but very little as we go on our way. He had branches from the ten evergreens which are common in this county, and showed the teachers of the county some of the ways in which each one differed from all of the others, and by which each particular one could be correctly classified.

It is really astonishing how little we really know of the common things about us. It may be true, as claimed by some, that being able to name plants or evergreens will not mean much to us in the matter of dollars and cents, but if we could teach our children the habit of observing things, we would establish with them one of the greatest sources of information and education. It is the establishing of this very desirable habit that nature study has its great value.

His talks on primary arithmetic and geography were equally interesting and many valuable suggestions as to the teaching of these subjects were given to the teachers of the county.

Prof. Vandenberg of the Central State Normal gave three very excellent lectures. His discussion of "The Moving Hod in Education," left us with a new and clearer idea as to how we should measure our value to our community as teachers. He made it very clear to us that taking a class from "Decimals to Mensuration" in one term was not necessarily doing a valuable work for the class.

His other addresses were full of good things to think about. He is certainly a very practical educator. He studiously avoided high sounding theoretical propositions and confined himself to a discussion of ideas that could be actually worked out by the average teacher in her school. The very close attention of the teachers of the county to his talks is ample proof of his ability in presenting a subject in an interesting way.

Prof. Harrop gave four addresses the last day of the meeting. We will not attempt to review the work of Mr. Harrop. Ask those who heard him. He is all that Gov. Ferris said he was and more. One teacher said, "I learned more in half an hour about the Civil War than I ever knew before." Prof. Harrop is a polished, scholarly gentleman. He is an orator of ability, very entertaining, yet very earnest in his work.

We consider him on a par with Dr. Foss, who was with us last year, and the teachers who heard Dr. Foss have said, over and over, that no storm would prevent their hearing him again should he come back to the county.

The most disappointing feature of our institutes is the lack of interest taken by the patrons. We wish that the patrons would come out and hear these men. It would do them good and would stimulate interest in school work.

This institute, though spring opens on with but a few days notice, was one of the most helpful that we have had.

We are indebted to Mrs. A. L. Coulter of Charlevoix, Mr. Otto Powers of Traverse City, Mrs. Alice Kenyon of East Jordan, the East Jordan High School chorus and orchestra for the excellent selections rendered during the meeting and which were enjoyed very much by those in attendance.

County Normal Notes.

(ETHYL TACOBS.)

Mr. DeVoe visited the class a short talk on some of the points made at the teachers' institute, Thursday morning.

Miss Whiting reported on the teachers' institute Wednesday.

Lila Howe and Ethyl Jacobs have completed their work in practice teaching in the training room.

There was no school Friday morning on account of a broken boiler.

Edna Srigley and Esther Walker finished their work in practice teaching Friday afternoon.

Rhoda Cliff and Edna Srigley are editors for the week.

Willard Howe is substituting in Miss Lewis' room during her absence.

Oswayo Outlook: Hon. J. W. Fearson, of Boyne Falls, was in our city Tuesday. Mr. Pearson was in the house two terms and stepped aside from the occasional race for Frank D. Scott, of Alpena. Mr. Pearson's name is being urged by his friends now for the state senate, and the people of this side of the district would be pleased to support him if he should decide to run. Lee Mordford is in the race. Mr. Mordford is thought a lot of throughout his present representative district and there is no question but that he would get the undivided support of that portion of the district, if nominated. The fact that Hon. Hinkley, of Petoskey, is out for congressman would also have a tendency to complicate matters somewhat for Mr. Pearson. Both Mr. Mordford and Mr. Pearson are men of high qualities, recommending them to the position of trust. Neither are bigoted or bullheaded. We think the Outlook feels that when the time comes their influence will be united on one or the other.

It has again been demonstrated that the Grand Traverse region is practically free from the hard storms that strike other parts of the country and that no matter what the season may chance to be people who live here are reasonably sure that they will not be shut up in winter by snow blockades or lost to places in summer by cyclones and other weather manifestations. The weather in this locality is as near right as can be expected and with the changing climate which is making it colder and more uncertain to the south is making this region a still more desirable place in which to live.

Penalty for Restraint of Commerce, Unfair Business and Interlocking Directorates — Auspe Provisions Made for Trade Commission.

Washington, Jan. 28.—The administration's trust bills, embodying the programs advanced by the president in his recent message, have been presented to congress.

The bills have received the approval of Mr. Wilson and the Democratic leaders of both houses of congress. With little modification they will be enacted into law. Their purposes are:

1. Dissolution of unlawful monopoly or restraints of trade.
2. Prohibition of unfair trade practices.
3. Creation of an interstate trade commission.
4. Regulation of corporation directorates and prohibition of interlocking directorates.

Unlawful Monopoly Defined.

Unlawful monopoly is defined as any combination or agreement between corporations, firms, or persons designed for the following purposes:

1. To cripple or carry out restriction in trade or to acquire a monopoly in any trade, commerce, business, or manufacture.

2. To limit or reduce the production or increase the price of merchandise or any commodity.

3. To prevent competition in manufacturing, making, transporting, selling, or purchasing of any merchandise, produce, or any commodity.

4. To make any agreement, enter into any arrangement, or undertake to prevent free and unrestricted competition among purchasers or consumers in the sale, production, or transportation of any product, article, or commodity.

The penalty for violation of the law is fixed at not more than $5,000 or imprisonment for one year or both.

Guilt is made personal through a section that whenever a corporation shall be guilty of violating the law the offense shall be deemed to cover the individual directors, officers, and agents of such corporation, as authorizing, ordering, or taking part in prohibited acts, and they shall be punished as prescribed above.

A paragraph prohibiting holding of companies is to be added to this measure.

Covers Unfair Trade Practices.

The bill for defining unfair trade practices declares that to discriminate in price, between different purchasers of commodities, where the effect may tend to injure or destroy a competitor, either of the purchaser or of the seller, shall be deemed an attempt to monopolize interstate commerce.

It is specifically declared that the law is not intended to prevent discrimination in price between purchasers of commodities, where the grade, quality, or quantity of the commodity sold, or that makes only due allowance for differences in the cost of transportation.

Further, it is prescribed that nothing contained in the act shall prevent persons from selecting their own customers, "but this provision shall not authorize the owner or operator of any mine engaged in selling its product in interstate or foreign commerce to refuse arbitrarily to sell the same to a responsible purchaser, if any such purchaser, who applies to purchase."

No attempt is made to define what is meant by "unfair competition" but it is declared to exist "when any person, firm, or corporation, who applies to purchase," shall be unjustly discriminated against in the matter of price, or other terms of the sale of goods, wares, or merchandise, or who shall be unjustly discriminated against in the matter of allowing a rebate upon, or payment on the condition, or understanding that the purchaser thereof shall not deal in the goods, wares, or merchandise of a competitor or competitors of the seller.

Deals With Damage Suits.

A judgment against any defendant in a suit brought under the anti-trust law the bill provides shall constitute a prima facie evidence against such defendant conclusive as to the same issues and conclusive as to the same issues in any other or other actions by parties to other proceedings brought under any of the provisions of the law.

For the benefit of those injured by the business or property, by any person or corporation violating the law, or failing the law the statute of limitations applicable in such cases shall be suspended.

Injunctive relief is accorded against threatened loss or damage by a violation of the act, under the same conditions and principles that injunctive relief against threatened conduct which will cause loss or damage is granted by courts of equity.

It is recognized that a proper bond shall be executed against the issuance of an injunction improvidently granted, and it must be shown that no adequate or irreparable loss or damage is imminent.

Bills Interlocking Directorates.

Concerning directorates the bill on that subject, which is known as the "Clayton" bill, provides that after the expiration of two years from date of approval of the act, provides:

"No person engaged as an individual or as a member of a partnership or as a director or other officer of a corporation in the business of selling railroad cars or locomotives, or railroad rails or structural steel, or mining or selling coal, or conducting a bank or trust company, shall act as director or other officer or employe of any railroad or other common carrier or corporation which conducts an interstate business.

"No person shall at the same time be a director or other officer or employe in two or more federal reserve banks, national banks, or banking associations, or other banks or trust companies which are members of any federal reserve bank, and a private banker and a person who is a director in any state bank or trust company not operating under the provisions of the federal reserve law shall not be eligible to serve as a director in any bank or banking association or trust company operating under the provisions of the law."

Violation of these sections is made punishable by a fine of $100 a day, or imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both.

If any two or more corporations have common directors, it is declared the fact shall be conclusive evidence that there exists a real competition between such corporations and the elimination of competition shall be construed as a violation of the law against trade and be treated accordingly.

The trade commission is provided for commission of fire members, with the commissioner of corporations as chairman, and transfers all the existing powers of the bureau of corporations to the commission.

The principal and most important duty the commission includes conducting investigations will be to collect reports when requested in the form of decrees of the court.

With this in view, the bill empowers the court to order a case of pending litigation to the commission, including the proposed decree, for information and advice.

Much Criticism for Bills.

The trust bills as presented will be the subject of sharp criticism on the part of progressives who contend the claim they do not go far enough. It will be contended that the definition of monopoly remains inadequate that the prohibition of unfair trade practice does not cover the ground, that commonly lies that interlocking stock control is not covered and that the powers of the proposed trade commission are insufficient.

It is interesting to note that the proposal to place the burden of proof upon a combination believed to be violating the law has been omitted. No attempt is made to define what constitutes monopoly based on patents. The proposal to allow any person who feels aggrieved by the action of the officer charged to be in the unwillingness of the courts to impose such penalties as remains optional under the proposed measures will be counted to free or implicate.

Trade Board May Dissolve.

In connection with the trade commission President Wilson declared in his message that the country demands such a commission only as an indispensable instrument of information and publicity as a clearing house for facts by which the public may be kept in the mind and the managers of business undertakings should be guided.

The bill prescribes that the commission act as to constitute a "public record" but the body is authorized to make public the information "which from and to such extent as may be necessary" or by direction of the President.

It is apparent that the public mind cannot be guided unless it has the facts, and then it will not go unless the commission or the attorney general deem it politic.

In other words, public hearings will not be held as they are held by the Interstate commerce commission.

Settlement of Differences.

With important features of the bill is that which legalizes the policy of the administration of trying to impose an unlawful condition by agreement between the corporation attacked and the attorney general.

This feature is comprehended under the phrase "the commission may consider, upon the request of the attorney general or any corporation affected, to investigate whether a combination is violating the law. In case the commission should find such violation it shall be its duty to report to the attorney general a statement of the objectionable acts and transactions and the readjustment necessary for the offending combination to conform to the law.

These conclusions are to be "advisory to the attorney general in terminating any agreement with the corporation affected or by suing the said unlawful combination or combine."

In other words, whatever may be the conclusion made by the attorney general with the commission's advice and assistance, it will give the reorganized combination legal standing so long as it conforms to the term of the agreement.

Thus it is proposed to pass by law a tremendous power to the hands of the attorney general. This power has been assented to attorneys general, and particularly by Mr. McReynolds.

Will Give Courts Advice.

In a statement accompanying the bill made by Congressman Clayton, chairman of the house judiciary committee, it is said that the "principal and most important duty of the commission, besides conducting investigations, will be to aid the courts, when requested, in the formation of decrees of dissolution.

Penalties Are Light.

The penalties provided in the bill are light, being limited to a fine of $5,000 or imprisonment for one year or both.

Guilt is made personal through a section that whenever a corporation shall be guilty of violating the law the offense shall be deemed to cover the individual directors, officers, and agents of such corporation, as authorizing, ordering, or taking part in prohibited acts, and they shall be punished as prescribed above.

A paragraph prohibiting holding companies is to be added to this measure.

Covers Unfair Trade Practices.

The bill for defining unfair trade practices declares that to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities, where the effect may tend to injure or destroy a competitor, either of the purchaser or of the seller, shall be deemed an attempt to monopolize interstate commerce.

It is specifically declared that the law is not intended to prevent discrimination in price between purchasers of commodities, where the grade, quality, or quantity of the commodity sold, or that makes only due allowance for differences in the cost of transportation.

Further, it is prescribed that nothing contained in the act shall prevent persons from selecting their own customers, "but this provision shall not authorize the owner or operator of any mine engaged in selling its product in interstate or foreign commerce to refuse arbitrarily to sell the same to a responsible purchaser, if any such purchaser, who applies to purchase."

No attempt is made to define what is meant by "unfair competition" but it is declared to exist "when any person, firm, or corporation, who applies to purchase," shall be unjustly discriminated against in the matter of price, or other terms of the sale of goods, wares, or merchandise, or who shall be unjustly discriminated against in the matter of allowing a rebate upon, or payment on the condition, or understanding that the purchaser thereof shall not deal in the goods, wares, or merchandise of a competitor or competitors of the seller.

Deals With Damage Suits.

A judgment against any defendant in a suit brought under the anti-trust law the bill provides shall constitute a prima facie evidence against such defendant conclusive as to the same issues and conclusive as to the same issues in any other or other actions by parties to other proceedings brought under any of the provisions of the law.

For the benefit of those injured by the business or property, by any person or corporation violating the law, or failing the law the statute of limitations applicable in such cases shall be suspended.

Injunctive relief is accorded against threatened loss or damage by a violation of the act, under the same conditions and principles that injunctive relief against threatened conduct which will cause loss or damage is granted by courts of equity.

It is recognized that a proper bond shall be executed against the issuance of an injunction improvidently granted, and it must be shown that no adequate or irreparable loss or damage is imminent.

Bills Interlocking Directorates.

Concerning directorates the bill on that subject, which is known as the "Clayton" bill, provides that after the expiration of two years from date of approval of the act, provides:

"No person engaged as an individual or as a member of a partnership or as a director or other officer of a corporation in the business of selling railroad cars or locomotives, or railroad rails or structural steel, or mining or selling coal, or conducting a bank or trust company, shall act as director or other officer or employe of any railroad or other common carrier or corporation which conducts an interstate business.

"No person shall at the same time be a director or other officer or employe in two or more federal reserve banks, national banks, or banking associations, or other banks or trust companies which are members of any federal reserve bank, and a private banker and a person who is a director in any state bank or trust company not operating under the provisions of the federal reserve law shall not be eligible to serve as a director in any bank or banking association or trust company operating under the provisions of the law."

Violation of these sections is made punishable by a fine of $100 a day, or imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both.

If any two or more corporations have common directors, it is declared the fact shall be conclusive evidence that there exists a real competition between such corporations and the elimination of competition shall be construed as a violation of the law against trade and be treated accordingly.

OLD WORLD AND NEW

The Start and Finish of a Love Story.

By W. B. COLIN.

"He looks as if he were one of the statues, just a part of this wonderful picture of the old Italy and the new rolled into one!" mused Penelope Gardiner. "He is really more than life-size—six feet four if he is an inch."

Her aunt, Mrs. Hammell, swung around sharply.

"Who? Oh, that guard? It is his bodyguard, my dear child, and his high boots! Dante. Wouldn't you think he's be ashamed to wear like that at the head of the grand staircase? Did you ever see so much gilt braid and shoulder on one human being?"

Mrs. Hammell's voice had executed a grand crescendo, and Penelope reached down a protesting hand.

"Don't, aunt, so loud, auntie, dear. He might understand."

But the great square shouldered figure in glittering uniform stood as immovable as the knight in the old Gobelin tapestry before which Mrs. Hammell stood expostulant though she continued to criticise the king's guard.

"That's just the difference between our soldiery and what we see abroad. Every one of our lads looks possible material for a hero, but these foreign dolls are mere puppets."

Penelope replied with conviction:

"I don't agree with you. That man has the fire, the bearing, of one who will some day do things that are worth while. He makes me think of that poetry twinkle—setting out to fight for his true love."

Mrs. Hammell gasped and closed her fan-fender with a snap.

"My dear Penelope, I am amazed! If you behave this way over the first handsome man you see in uniform how will you feel by the time we have attended a few receptions and met the real nobility, rising young diplomats and all that sort of thing?"

"Thoroughly disillusioned, I presume," said Penelope coldly, "and I hope we shall not go to any receptions where they mix with wanton mountebanks and mincing stews will look through my lorgnette to dislodge newly acquired bank account. It is because that man is so big, so strong and looks as if he could meet heroic tasks and earth to achieve for the woman he loved that I was studying him. It is so sickening that I meet a man whom I could look up to," ended Penelope, with a sick flutter for fear clever ladies of grandfathers.

"I was considering him only as an abstract quantity, a hypothetical man, so to speak."

"I should hope so," was her aunt's indignant reply. "Why, these special guards of the king are gathered in the month of Italy solely for their beauty. The gentlemen says, and no doubt he was found grubbing in some stricken farm or vineyard. In New York he would be waiting in the antechamber."

Penelope turned and started to cross the great throne room where through an open window the soft Italian sun flight beckoned to her. The martial figure at the entrance so close to the nonchalant tapestry and not moved the half of an inch, but above the area build on his helmet and down up to the sunbeams, seemed to have undertaken and performed the impossible.

Penelope paused, frozen in her tracks, but the vision of a bright child face crossed to the window, resting her head wearily on her gloved hand. Her glance traveled over the great room, full of the police, while Mrs. Hammell completed her tour of the tapestry hung walls.

"He understood English—every word we said. How tolerable stupid of us! And auntie had he probably grubbed on a farm? No wonder these foreigners think we Americans are rude."

The sunlight waned and Penelope knew that out on the Appian way ten der amethyst shadows were settling. Why could not a man be satisfied with Rome's beautiful outdoor life, instead of trying to make the world and spend days and days in musty churches and hideous certain galleries? She looked back into the room. Lovely shadows softened the gilt frames and furniture, the tapestry deepened into purple, and the uniformed figure right there already. He had dared to watch her as she stood thus at the window! Well, it served her right for talking about human beings as if they were statues or curios.

And much more was in her diary.

"Spent entire afternoon in the royal palace. Tapestries remarkable, but rather boring. Bedrooms reserved for various royal guests reminded me of a New York hotel. Were not permitted to enter royal suite of court, but heard laughter of royal children through folding doors, and a lovely gurgly plaging in what must have been the nursery. Italy is a place of distinctions. The natives are learning English, the better to do you my dear!"

Penelope Gardiner held up the diary and a wave's breath had studied it critically. Her elder said:

"It's lovely, Dan—you ought to charge more for your work. You could get it you know. Rich women love to patronize girls like you!"

"We once sold off their plates, in stead of paintings plate-rails for them! I think I will charge Mrs. Vinch half a dollar more for each of these sales. They were done to match her Italian villa dining room, you know."

"What I do know" pierced Penelope's reverie "is that you are going to see this afternoon. The way you have shut yourself off from all of us, just because your father dropped money in the wrong copper mine, is increasing! Dan—there are so many who loved you in spite of your money and love you now in spite because you haven't any! wouldn't you come?"

"Mr. Anthony himself couldn't refuse you, Kathie," said Penelope, pushing aside her work. "I am going and what is more, I shall wear my best frock, made over from one that last year I might have given to my maid."

Penelope could say such things without a touch of bitterness. She seemed rather to glory in the fact that she was self supporting, able to face the world which had pouted her so much and then withdrawn its hyperceptual smiles.

Through the open door of Hunter's studio came the clicks of teacups and a confused murmur of well bred voices. "Really good to see you!" said Mrs. Hunter, looking up into Penelope's gray blue eyes. Sometimes he had thought that if he could have looked down instead of up she might have said "Yes" instead of "No."

"Isn't it a good crowd, today? You see, I had something special to bring them. You haven't met Leora yet, have you? Hello, there, old chap! I want you to know Miss Gardiner. You wouldn't think he was an Italian, eh, Pen? Hunter rattled on. "So good heard of a six foot Italian, with blond hair! Isn't it?"

"My friend Hunter said that he would not make of me either a lion or a cow, but a bull. Now he takes from some one turned on an electric light and before its flash the soft shadows of the studio disappeared. Penelope gave a little gasp and slowly from Leora's face every vestige of color faded.

Penelope recovered first.

"Ah, there is Dr. Kelly! Kent pouting too. I know it will be worth drinking to. And Leora, dear, entwined the trail of a shimmering clot blue voile skirt across Hunter's priceless rugs to bring him his tea! Hunter's studio sites also stood with her back turned full upon the green around her feet and the guest of honor.

Now was the center of another laughing group when she felt an insistent gaze drawing her away from the chatter. Hunter was speaking to a lady, to whom the tense, nervous girl glided not realize was one of society's lions.

"Leora has been unpacking some of his traps in my further room. He wants to know if you would like to see them. It's an honor, Pen. Even I could not persuade Leora to extend to exhibit at the academy next month. Here's a fine chance. Not his last year in Paris. Actually glad he has taken a slide to you."

Without speaking Penelope passed through the door whose hangings Leora had made for her. He crossed to a corner and tossed back the drapery which hid it.

"I have named it 'The Old World and the New.'" he said simply.

Penelope stood with widening eyes. There was the unpainted walls of the throne room in all its old world splendor, fascinating, unusual, obscure, faded, in places almost obscure, while against it, vital, full of grace and life, was the figure of a girl. American girl clad in navy blue broadcloth, a velvet picture hat on her soft brown hair and a great bouquet of Russian roses in her belt.

"You see, I have done what you said—something worth while—and having finished it I come to show it to you and your people. I wanted you to know it was too bad that it possible—it is not for sale". He drew himself up proudly and she touched not her hand cloudlight.

"And if it was I—I could not buy it. Much has happened to me since the day—in the throne room. We—we have lost everything."

"Ah!" The man drew a long deep breath. "Fate has indeed been kind, otherwise I might not speak. I was a foolish boy, unworthy son of a gifted father, proud of my artistry in the royal court and my toy uniform—fraud, until you came, and the scales in me cried out in shame. You said, I could do it. Have I done it well enough to please you?"

She bowed her head and then raised it to meet his. You, with the blond and the high heels he still towered above her, looked more than her eyes fell before his earnest gaze.

"That day—it was they came—the glance, the tone, you will forgive me, the message of love. In our country love does not wait. Yet for five years I have worked for you. All I am you have made. Today I may be artist to my king. Will you come?"

"To my king—yes."

SYNOPSIS.

Percy Darrow, a young scientist in "Blue" McCarthy's office in New York, receives a mysterious message ordering him to the Atlas Building, where he meets the man who sent the message, Jack Harvey, a fellow student of Darrow's at Harvard. Both are in the employ of the Government, Darrow in the Bureau of Standards and Harvey in the Secret Service, but for reasons which the Chief of Bureau will explain to the former they are unable to locate the man they are seeking. For the same reason, electric connections are reduced to a minimum, and Darrow is told that "the chief will be not him at all." Presently the chief appears, and Darrow, Harvey and McCarthy are ordered to "take a vacation." Darrow, Harvey and McCarthy go to a "club."

"I would tell you exactly what must have happened," said Jack, "if the failure was complete. Never mind that. Was the cause in general, or only local? How far did it extend?"

"It seems to be confined to New York, and only about to Highbridge. 'Long Island', Jersey?"

"Yes, I'm in Jersey."

"What are the theories?"

"I could see that they had any—that I could understand," said Jack Harvey, "from some talk of the influence of a comet."

"Rubbish! Who spoke that?"

"Some one in the club."

"He ought to know better. Any others?"

"I couldn't understand them all. There was talk of interfering the island because of the steel structures; and the—"

"No human agency?"

"What?"

"No acts or men are suspected of bringing this about?"

"Oh, no! They don't think—"

"No, I don't think. I only imagine, and I haven't much basis for imagining. But if my imagination is come out right we'll have plenty to do."

"Where, now?" asked Jack, as the scientist finished dressing and reached for his hat. "Blue-Light?"

"No, I ate there before I dressed. We'll make a call on the Atlas Building."

"All right," agreed Jack cheerfully. "What for?"

"To ask McCarthy if he hasn't a job for you in construction."

Jack came to a dead halt.

"Say!" he cried. "Look here! You don't quite get the humor of that. Why, McCarthy loves the name of Warford about the way a yellow dog loves a tin can to the tail!"

"We'll call on him, just the same," insisted Darrow.

"I'm game," said Jack. "But I can tell you the answer right now. He'll be amused at the Atlas Building."

"I have a notion the Atlas Building is going to be a mighty interesting place," said Darrow.

They delivered on the street. The air was soft and golden; the sun warm with the Indian summer. The clock on the metropolitan tower was striking nine. As the two set out at a slow saunter down the sidewalk of the side street, Darrow explained a little further.

"Jack," said he abruptly, "I'll tell you what I think—or imagine. I believe that this phenomena were controlled, not fortuitous or the result of natural forces. In other words, some man turned off the juice in this city for a certain length of time. How he did it I do not know; but he did it very completely. It was not a question of without a doubt, but of how long he could affected. Now, I can think of only one broad general method by which he could accomplish that result. Just what means he took to apply the principle is beyond my knowledge, but if I am correct in my supposition, there could be no reason why he should not go a step or so farther.

"I don't believe Tokio and Jack constitute—

"What I'm driving at is this," said Darrow; "this is not the end of the circus by any means. We're going to see a lot of funny things; our eyes is anywhere near right."

CHAPTER VI.

The Wrath to Come.

"Did you ever meet McCarthy?" asked Darrow, as the elevator of the Atlas spring upward.

"Never."

"Well, no matter what he says or does, I want you to say nothing—not a—ing."

"Correct," said Jack. "I'll downcharge."

"That's right," Darrow approved. "First of all, wait outside until I call you."

McCarthy was already at his desk, and in evil humor. When Darrow entered, he merely looked up and growled.

"Good morning," Darrow greeted him easily. "Any wireless this morning?"

McCarthy threw back his heavy head.

"That damn operator's been leaking!" he cried.

"Do there are 'wireless,'" observed Darrow. "No, your operator didn't leak. Here's how—"

"If he didn't leak, what did you say that for?"

"I'm a good sponger," replied Darrow enigmatically. "They say anything about a sign being sent, and such talk?"

"You've been getin' the dope yourself! Out of the air," returned McCarthy sullenly.

"Look here, my fat friend," drawled Darrow, his eyes half closing, "I'm getting nothing from anywhere except in my own gray matter. What do your messages have to say?"

"Why should I tell you?"

"Because I'm interested—and because I know you will tell me."

"So do I," snarled McCarthy, to a burst of temper.

"And I'm beginning to suspect he's a man to look out for. And I don't you'll ever find him. Of course, he's responsible for the row last night and well as for the trouble in the Atlas Building the night before."

"I don't know whether he is or not."

"Oh, yes, you do; and I do; and the wireless man does. We're the only three. The rest of them are still figuring on comets."

"Comets!"

"I don't suppose there's any real comet in your mind but that this man can turn the juice off again, if he wants to."

"I don't know as he did it," persisted McCarthy sloudly.

"Now, how long do you suppose you'd last if the public should get on to the fact that this hidden power was going to exert itself again unless you left town?"

A slight moisture bedewed McCarthy's forehead.

"Why, all your police, nor all your power could save you, if the general public once became thoroughly convinced that it was to go through another experience like last night's unless I caused you. Why, a mob of a million men would gather against you in an hour. You see!" drawled Percy Darrow, "why you'd better look after that wireless man of yours—and me."

"And you," repeated McCarthy. "What do you want?"

"I want to see those wireless messages first of all," said Darrow, reaching out his hand.

McCarthy hesitated; then swiftly thrust forth the filmsies. Darrow's slight smile carving his full red lips, held them to the light. They read as follows:

"McCarthy. A sign was promised you at six o'clock. It has been sent. Report to Darrow. Do not interfere. Jack."

"There were four of these, couched in almost identical language. The fifth and last message was shorter:

"McCarthy: Flee from the wrath to come.

"What," said Darrow, "is to prevent the other operators who must have received this message from giving it to the public? What, indeed, is to prevent M. A appealing direct to the public?"

"I don't know," confessed McCarthy miserably. "Do you?"

"Not at this moment. Will you send for the operator who took these?"

McCarthy snatched down the telephone receiver, through which presently he spoke a message.

"What have you got to do with this?" he demanded, after he had hung up the hook.

"I want something," said Percy, "of course.

"Sure," growled McCarthy, once more back on familiar ground, and tired of it. "What is it?"

"I'll tell you when I'm sure whether I can do anything for you in this matter."

"If this fellow didn't leak, how did you know about Harvey?" demanded McCarthy again. "How do you know who's doin' this?"

Darrow smiled.

"The man who can control the juice in this town has in a scientific expert with a full scientific equipment. It is communicated at all, it would be by wireless, as that is the easiest way to cover his trail. I remembered your telephone message from the fantastic about sending a sign. Immediately after the Atlas Building experienced on a small scale what next day the city experienced on a larger scale. It was legitimate inference to connect one with the other. Of course, if our telephone friend was the man who had brought these things about, he had done it to force you to do what he demanded. But he would lose the effect of his lesson unless you understood his connection with the matter. Hence, I concluded that you must have received messages—by wireless—and that they must have repeated the warning as to a sign being sent. It was very simple."

"You're smart, all right," conceded McCarthy.

After a moment the wireless operator came in.

"Simmons," said McCarthy, "answer this man's questions."

"They will be in regard to these messages," said Darrow. "Where are they from?"

"Somewhere in the one-hundred to two-hundred mile circle, depending on the power of the sending instrument," the operator promptly.

"Are you sure?"

"I know my instruments pretty well; and I've had experience enough so I can tell by the manner of the sending whether they are far off they come from."

"And this was from somewhere about one to two hundred miles away, you think?"

"Yes, sir."

"Do you know whether any other instruments caught this?"

"No, only mine." He was very positive.

"How do you know?"

"Mr. McCarthy had me inquire."

"How do you account for it?"

"I don't know, except that maybe my instrument happened to be just tuned to catch it. That's another reason I know it was from far off. The nearer you are to the sending instrument the nearer exactly it has to be tuned to the receiving instrument. If it was nearer, most anybody'd get it."

"Very interesting," added Darrow.

"That's all, I guess. No, hold on! Did any of these come between six and eight last evening?"

For the first time the operator smiled.

"No, sir; my instrument was dead."

"Are west one?"

"Well," growled McCarthy.

"I don't know; but I can see more trouble.

"Let him turn off his juice," hissed the boss. "we'll be ready, next time."

Percy Darrow smiled.

"Will you?" he contented himself by saying. Then, after a moment's pause, he added, "I'll agree to stop this fellow if you'll give me an absolutely free hand. I'll even agree to find and handed it to the dazed and uncertain boss.

"Do You Know Whether Any Other Instrument Caught This?"

"Was right," Darrow had scrawled. "This proves it. It's by no means the last." Darrow had scrawled.

McCarthy's bulging courage had received from its first dazed. He began to see that this visitation was not entirely personal, but extended also to his enemy. Consequently he relieved his mind, for he had suspected some sinister trick against him.

"Did you expect this?" he wrote.

Darrow nodded.

Together the three ghosts left the phantom office, and glided down the passages hath. Other ghosts in various stages of alarm were already making their way down the stairs. Some of them spoke, but no sound came. The women, eyes frightened, reached out fortively to touch her neighbor, apparently to assure herself of his reality. Urged by an uncontrollable impulse, a man thrust his head through the ground glass or an office door. The glass shivered, and crashed to the tile floor. The place broke—silently. It was as though the man had been the figure in a cinematograph illusion. He stared at his cut and bleeding hand. The woman who had touched the man suddenly threw back her head and screamed. They could see her eyes roll back, her face change color, could discern the arising of her throat. No sound came.

At this a panic seized them. They rushed down the stairs, clambering over one another, pushing, scrambling, in a mad rush for the ground, a hundred men fought for precedence. Blows were struck. No faintest murmur of tumult came from their futile beat. It might have been the rut of a war waged in a vacuum.

They fell into the lower hallway, and fought their way to the street, and stood there dazed and startled, a strange, wild-eyed, white-faced, blood crew. The hurrying avenue stopped to pass them curiously, gathering in expect a mob that blocked all traffic. Policemen pushed their way in and demanded to know the question—and to question in real audible words.

But for the space of a full minute these people stood there starting upward, drinking in the pure sound that poured in on them lavishly from the life of the street. Gradually the sense of the unusual grew on them.

Darrow, and with him Jack Warford, had descended more leisurely before leaving the building. Darrow stared the fat of his hands over his ears, and motioned Jack to do the same. Then they missed the first sight effect of recovered from the world of noise all at once; as a man goes to a bright light after a long stay in the dark. Darrow returned several times from the sound to the silence, trying to determine where the line of demarcation was drawn. Jack methodically to make his way through the crowd.

"Let us get out of this," he means an easy task. Rumors of all sorts were afoot. Some held spirits were walking a new sensation by venturing into the corridor of the building. Others held that it was due to what should be done. One or two reporters were already on the scene, eyes frightened, reached out fortively to touch her neighbor, apparently to assure herself of his reality. Urged by an uncontrollable impulse, a man thrust his head through the ground glass or an office door. The glass shivered, and crashed to the tile floor. The place broke—silently. It was as though the man had been the figure in a cinematograph illusion. He stared at his cut and bleeding hand. The woman who had touched the man suddenly threw back her head and screamed. They could see her eyes roll back, her face change color, could discern the arising of her throat. No sound came.

At this a panic seized them. They rushed down the stairs, clambering over one another, pushing, scrambling, in a mad rush for the ground, a hundred men fought for precedence. Blows were struck. No faintest murmur of tumult came from their futile beat. It might have been the rut of a war waged in a vacuum.

They fell into the lower hallway, and fought their way to the street, and stood there dazed and startled, a strange, wild-eyed, white-faced, blood crew. The hurrying avenue stopped to pass them curiously, gathering in expect a mob that blocked all traffic. Policemen pushed their way in and demanded to know the question—and to question in real audible words.

But for the space of a full minute these people stood there starting upward, drinking in the pure sound that poured in on them lavishly from the life of the street. Gradually the sense of the unusual grew on them.

Darrow, and with him Jack Warford, had descended more leisurely before leaving the building. Darrow stared the fat of his hands over his ears, and motioned Jack to do the same. Then they missed the first sight effect of recovered from the world of noise all at once; as a man goes to a bright light after a long stay in the dark. Darrow returned several times from the sound to the silence, trying to determine where the line of demarcation was drawn. Jack methodically to make his way through the crowd.

"Let us get out of this," he means an easy task. Rumors of all sorts were afoot. Some held spirits were walking a new sensation by venturing into the corridor of the building. Others held that it was due to what should be done. One or two reporters were already on the scene, eyes frightened, reached out fortively to touch her neighbor, apparently to assure herself of his reality. Urged by an uncontrollable impulse, a man thrust his head through the ground glass or an office door. The glass shivered, and crashed to the tile floor. The place broke—silently. ROAD BEE ON THE WEST MICHIGAN PIKE.

In consequence of the big road building campaign conducted in western Michigan during 1913, but two miles of concrete road were built. Only here and there are there short stretches that still need improving. The above picture shows a road bee on the Holland end of the road. This bee was the last piece of bad road between Arcadia village and Frankfort City, and on August 15 last the people from adjoining villages and nearby townships gathered in the morning and with a will and succeeded in making a cut which brings the road down to standard grade. A total of 75 men and 17 teams were on hand to help with the work. Business men from Frankfort and Elberta both left their regular duties and joined in the program of road building.

AS TOLD BY AN EXPERT

A WORD ABOUT THE CLIMATE BY THE WEATHER MAN.

Cooler Summers and Warmer Winters Noticeable Difference Between Eastern Michigan and Inland Sections —Has Less Rainfall.

Western Michigan has some peculiarities as regards weather. The weather bureau observer located at Grand Haven, C. H. Ashmun, has studied the statistics for the past 20 years, and has reached conclusions that are of general interest. He has found that the condition bordering the lake do not have as great a rainfall as the counties to the east. The reason for this is what winds are mostly from the west and coming off the water, are greatly modified by the temperature of the land. In the summer time the land is warmer than the lake, and the surplus heat causes the air to expand and reduce the amount of precipitation, whereas in the winter time, the land is colder than the water, at least for the early part of the winter, and air blowing onto the land, is condensed, and there is precipitation in the form of snow. This is the reason why western Michigan is a little sticky rain in the summer and long on snow in the winter.

The weather man, however, says "The deficiency for summer is not great enough to interfere seriously with agriculture. He further says that there is a modification of the temperature extremes, the annual, the daily, and also the irregular, this modification depending mainly upon the location of the shore with respect to the direction of the wind, and varying at different times of the year. The most noticeable difference is cooler summers and warmer winters than prevail at more inland points.

In summing up the climate as a whole, he has spoken as follows:

"Beginning about December 1, one is impressed with the excessive cloudiness. The cold westerly winds come across the comparatively warm lake and are warmed. When they reach the land they become cool and chilled again. Clouds form and snowfall occurs. If the temperature changes sufficiently.

"This tendency continues as long as westerly winds blow, all through December and January, or until the lake has become cold. It is not uncommon to have only two or three clear days in the whole December and January.

"Sometimes snow falls nearly every day in the month. It does not reach a great depth, being light and dowy. West winds almost always brought snow.

"A compensating feature is the mildness of the temperature. Sometimes the temperature on a winter day is 20 degrees higher on the shore than on the opposite shore.

"Another peculiarity is the suddenness of changes in cloudiness. The sky changes from one extreme to another within an hour. In inland points it generally takes half a day. The infrequency of cumulus clouds, the beautiful floods of inland sections, is also noticeable."

New Illustrated Lecture.

"Farm Friends and Foes" is the title of a new illustrated lecture which has been prepared for the Western Michigan development campaign. This lecture is the work of R. H. Brown, who was the first teacher in agriculture in a Western Michigan high school. The illustrations used with the lecture are those of birds and insects which help, or deter, the farmer from securing bountiful crops. This lecture is now being given throughout Western Michigan.

Not a Cotton Patch, but Buckwheat.

Michigan is third among the states of the Union in the growing of buckwheat. The crop states annual at in the last census year were New York, Pennsylvania and Michigan, for that year was over 75,000 bushels, which was an increase of 28.4 per cent. for the preceding decade. The cut above shows a field of the buckwheat field on the Charles West farm to the east of Gaylord in Lake County. The picture was taken August 5, when the buckwheat was in blossom. The yield of this field amounted to 40 bushels to the acre.

Sunshine in Michigan.

A careful examination of the sunshine tables for Indianapolis, Ind., and Traverse City, Western Michigan, reveals the fact that during the month of June Traverse City gets 17.7 hours more sunshine than does Indianapolis. The showing for July is nearly as good in favor of the former. The above is one reason why the Western Michigan crop gets ahead of the Indiana crop in July of each year. The days are longer and the nights are shorter and the corn benefits by more hours of growing weather in Western Michigan than in the country to the south, and it ripens in the latter part of the tip of the earth. It is for the same reason than the north pole gets a six months' day in summer and a six months' night in winter. It is one of the provisions made by the Creator for equalizing the opportunities open to man.

Sheep will eat off many weeds that cattle avoid and in this way they help to clean the pastures.

AVE you ever known fear, the stark fear of a slow, lingering, painful, absolutely inevitable death?" remarked James B. Smith, Fishery Guardian at Lower Shag Harbor, Shelburne County, Nova Scotia. "I have imprisoned in a capsized vessel, and I've felt the terrors of thirst, stepped in a horror of hellfire, racked by a black, blind, bootless rage of resentment against fate, I know fear, the fear that makes the hair bristle, the saliva to the mouth turn salt and bitter, the perspiration come out in clammy beads on the forehead, the heart almost stop beating." Then Mr. Smith told this tale:

On Wednesday, May 9, 1877, the schooner Codseeker, sailed from Halifax to Barrington, was running before an easterly gale. The master was Philip Brown; her crew numbered fourteen hands all told.

A while before dark a cloud of the lookout reported breakers ahead. Capt. Brown knew that the inlets spaces seen were only the reflections of the Cape Sable lighthouse, and he kept her going, though some of the older men criticized him sharply for doing so. I didn't like the look of things, but I was little more than a boy then.

The schooner stormed along, growing wilder in her motions, but as nothing happened I began to think that the gale was over.

I was numb with cold, and awfully weary of before long, in spite of the noises, the fear of slipping off my perch, the horror of it all, I dropped off to sleep. I was in a deep sleep, I dreamed the schooner was hove down, and I was on her side, trying to climb up, I saw my chum Will Kenney washed overboard and drowned before my eyes.

Thirst, Cold and Horror.

Then I woke up to find myself wet through and shivering. I was sick with pitchdark and for a moment or two I had no idea where I was. I felt my head came above the water. I struck something hard, and down I went, I felt the water rush into my lungs full of air. Half stunned I struggled up to the surface, and I came up through a small opening, so small that I had to squeeze my shoulders through. My mouth was just above water. When I tried to struggle through the opening I found it closed upon my shoulders would lift a little and I'm gone to the down, I still could not breathe. I struggled frantically, and the harder I strove to keep my mouth above water the more I seemed to be forced down.

I could not imagine what kind of a trap I had got into, and my imagination was mighty active, but as they say of a drowning man. A mortice picture of my whole life appeared in flash before me. Every deed of a sinful nature I had ever polute out so many advantages resulting from it that it would seem that it was better for us to be good. We have spent a good deal of money, we have lived, too, for crimes that we have full value for. Thinking of my mother, I wished we have gained about military affairs. We were still horror money, he allows, but then he consoles the with the suggestion that our credit is still good. He enumerates our victories—says little or nothing of our defeats and losses—he points to Cuba with all our marches and counter marches we are just about where we began when we set out last spring for the conquest of Canada."

Oil Wells in the Ocean.

Dotted among the oil fields of the world, says the Engineering and Mining Journal, is the Summerland group of wells in California, which extend out into the Pacific ocean. There are 141 producing wells in the group, which is situated about eighteen miles from Santa Barbara. These wells are drilled out in the ocean just off the coast and 100,000 barrels are taken. From the oil sands underlying the ocean bed every year. This interesting spectacle of derricks built out into the sea is visible from the train on the way from Los Angeles to San Francisco.

THE WRECK OF THE COD-SEEKER

By COLIN M'KAY

Not before either of us lost consciousness something snapped—I felt it, was something giving way in my brain. The schooner's head was swiftly, the water rushed up, we found ourselves able to breathe again. Oh, but the air was good! Trembling, dizzy, exhausted, we stretched ourselves along the face board and rested.

What had happened was this: When the schooner was hove on her side the anchor chain, stowed in a box on deck, went overboard, and presently, as she swept along with the tide, she and found the bottom and dragged. Just, the air was good! Trembling, dizzy, exhausted, we stretched ourselves along the face board and rested.

A swift, heavy sea came over the bulwarks and started to pull away. But, after recovering from their fright and astonishment, they grew ashamed of themselves and came back.

Meantime I had got hold of a stick and was raging against the side. Now I heard raps on the outside. I gave three raps and there were three raps in answer. We kept that up for a few minutes. Then we heard a man walking forward on the outside and we heard the Kennys talk.

"In the name of God, are you ghosts, living man or the dead?"

We shouted that we were living and demanded to know how we got, or we would not be living men very long. The voice asked no questions, for a few minutes it did not answer, and then some of them got to work with axes or the deck, while the boat went back to the Ohio for more men and axes.

They worked like Trojans, and cut right through a frame bolt to make a hole big enough for us to crawl through, the eruption of imprisoned air acted like a blast, and some of the water leaped through the hole in a small stream and knocked two men sticks which had been floating in the forecastle, whipped by our side, and crawled out into daylight by an explosion. They told us afterward that the released air gave off a sickening stench.

The schooner settled two or three feet, lurching as if she would turn turtle completely, and the men chopped away with redoubled energy. They soon had a hole about nine inches by twelve.

Rescue at Last.

Atwood, Indian Ohio, was pulled out without trouble, but when I got my head and one shoulder through, I stuck fast. Most men get most of me and pulled, and at last when I thought I would be pulled apart I came through, minus my vest and several strips of skin.

The schooner, which four days before had been taut and trim was now a mass of splinters, with her masts set feet above the water and her weather rail nearly a wash. Her mainmast was broken off, and, for low the surface, I could see a faint gale. Seeing that it was a vessel bottom up he sent a boat to try to find out her name, and see if they could salvage anything.

So presently I thought I heard some unusual noises, and neared myself from my lethargy to listen. In a few minutes I heard a sound like the clang of iron on iron; a man cutting at the lanyards of the forecastle with an ax had hit the iron strap of the deadeye.

"There is somebody outside," I said, shaking Sam.

Just he showed no interest.

"It's only squabbling swatting about the hold," he answered.

"Let's shout, anyway," I said, and yelled as hard as I could:

"Help! Help! Help!"

Over my head there was an answering yell of startled fright, then footsteps pounding aft and a voice cry:

"Who's haunted. Get into the boat, for—sake!"

And that chap so frightened the others that they had into the boat and started to pull away. But, after recovering from their fright and astonishment, they grew ashamed of themselves and came back.

Meantime I had got hold of a stick and was raging against the side. Now I heard raps on the outside. I gave three raps and there were three raps in answer. We kept that up for a few minutes. Then we heard a man walking forward on the outside and we heard the Kennys talk.

SIGN CAME DOWN QUICKLY

Clerk May Have Meant Well Enough But It Was Not Conducive to Trattering to New Proprietors.

The new proprietors of a little candy and soft shop in New York were astonished to notice pedestrians on the opposite side of the street stop, gaze at their window for a moment, and then pass on, faces decorated broad grins.

This happened so often that one of the proprietors determined to investigate. He hastened across to the opposite pavement. What he saw there caused him to scurry back to the shop on the run. Below a large black and white sign than bore the noose—"This shop is under new management"—a careless clerk had hung an equally conspicuous sign reading:

"New crop of nuts now here."

THE RIGHT SOAP FOR BABY'S SKIN

In the care of baby's skin and hair, Cuticura Soap is the mother's faithful friend. Not only is it unsurpassed for purity and refreshing fragrance, but its gentle emollient properties are usually sufficient to allay all irritations, remove redness, roughness and chafing, soothe sensitive conditions, and promote skin and hair health and comfort. Assisted by Cuticura Ointment, it is most valuable in the treatment of eczemas, rashes and itchings, burnings and scaldings. Cuticura Soap wears to a wafer, often outlasting several cakes of ordinary soap and making its use most economical.

HIS FIRST YEAR AT FARMING IN SASKATCHEWAN

Win Premiums and Prizes In Competition With the World.

"There are thousands of young men filling clerkships in stores and offices, and in professional occupations throughout the United States, who in their earlier life, worked on the farm. The allurements of city life were attractive, until they found the stern reality. Three people would have done better had they remained on the farm. Many of them, convinced of this, are now getting "back to the land," and in the experience, no better place offers our better opportunity afforded, than that existing in Western Canada. Many of them have taken advantage of it, and there are to be found today, hundreds of such, farming in the Provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. The conditions that surround farming operations today are so much superior to those in existence during their early career, that they have that in attraction about it. Improved machinery, level and open plains, no rocks to shun, no trees to cut down, but wide stretches with nine-long furrows, etc. Settlers in the prairie provinces can carry it to market, and bring almost in their own door, the things necessary to operate. Splendid grazing areas, excellent opportunities for raising cattle, horses are all to be found there, and what they once were that there is reason to speak of as extraordinary. R. H. Crossman of Kindersley, Saskatchewan, the man who secured the first prizes at the International Dry-Farming Congress held at Tulsa, Oklahoma, last fall, gave his first year's crop during his first year farming. Up to 1913 he was a salesman and the only knowledge he had of farming was that obtained from a book. Other men there are very useful; in fact it was valuable to him. He had not forgotten it, however, and he had profited by what he had can do well by taking up one of the Dominion Government's free farms. Government.—Advertisement.

The New Treatment of Epilepsy.

Owen Dale, a farmer living near a Texas epileptic was accidentally bitten by a rattle snake and instead of the bite proving fatal, he was cured of epilepsy. Medical scientists experimented on the venom and with wholly satisfactory results and the Crotalin venom is being used successfully used by specialists in thousands of epileptic cases. Crotalin is inbred hypodermically. It is prepared in the laboratories of Boericke & Burgun, 1 West 23th street, New York, who issue a very interesting booklet on the Crotalin treatment which they will send free to anyone interested in the cure of epilepsy.—Adv.

PRESIDENT CRITICISED IN 1813

One hundred years ago President Madison sent his annual message to congress. Public feeling was running high and the administration was being severely censured for its conduct of the war. The opposition sentiment was expressed in the following sarcastic editorial printed in the Tompkinsville (Staten Island) Gazette: "We are sorry to secure us the president's message to congress. Considering the case, he has really made out a pretty smooth story for the people. We are at war, he says, and no prospect of peace—but then he points out so many advantages resulting from it that it would seem that it was better for us to fight than not. We have spent a good deal of money, he allows, but then he claims that we have full value for it. We have lost a good many men, but we have gained about military ap-

A bill has passed the senate, which when put into effect, will make the postal money order negotiable anywhere, and will make this form of money transportation much more popular than it has been in the past. The new bill provides for mailing of money orders at any postoffice, regardless of the office named in the order. Heretofore postal money orders could be cashed only at the office indicated in the consignee's address, and this fact often caused more or less inconvenience to persons who, when traveling and having their mail forwarded from place to place, failed to secure the order at the original address.

Details were meager but it is understood that Mr. Zimmerman spent the day fishing and shortly after his return home in the evening dropped dead. He was about 70 years old and though he suffered slightly at times with heart trouble, he enjoyed moderately good health. Mr. Zimmerman was numbered among the early pioneers of Central Lake and was well known throughout that community.

Preparations are being made for a homecoming week for Traverse City and the entire Grand Traverse region. The date has been set for the week of July 12. At this time the business men's chautauqua will be in progress and several other attractions will be offered the visitors. The movement has the backing of the committee of twenty-one. Committees have been appointed to get into immediate communication with former residents of that section. Accommodations will be provided for taking care of several thousand persons who are expected to come back to renew old acquaintances and view the progress that has been made since they left.

Elk Rapids Progress: Ex-postmaster A. K. Dougherty and daughters, Miss Mayme and Mrs. H. S. Answer, will leave for Lansing the last of this week or the first of next to remain until the warm days of summer sends them back to their beautiful home and cool breezes of Elk Rapids.—The business men of Elk Rapids presented a beautiful bracelet to Miss Mayme Dougherty last week as a token of appreciation of her onerous and efficient service as postmistress of this office. She has been a most efficient aid to her father, the postmaster, during his term of 16 years. Her promptness and courteous manner is appreciated by the entire community.

Police Court

Jack Taylor, who has been about the town for some months, jumped a Ferrington House board bill last week. He was caught at Cheboygan, and now he is in the county jail for thirty days.

A stranger, about 45 years old, giving his name as Fred Dunkee, walted into town Tuesday and "lifted" a pair of felt shoes at the R. W. Miller store. Then he went about town trying to sell them. He approached police chief Alcock with the proposition and Alcock gathered him in. He is in justice court as we go to press.

Jack Cunningham, well known here and at St. James, is in the toils. For some time Homer Davis has been missing wood from his back yard. Tuesday morning fresh tracks, accompanied by sleigh tracks, were found at the wood pile. Fred Coon and his blood-hound took the case and the hound led to the home of Cunningham, who was at once arrested. He owned up, and when accused of stealing butter from the creamery he acknowledged that also. It is thought that the many cases of petty thievery about the city and resorts in at Cunningham's door. He is at the county jail.

Education Needed

Practical work in sewing, cooking and other household arts is required in all English schools for girls above the inferior grade.

In Minnesota the need for trained teachers of agriculture and domestic science is so great that the School of Agricultural Technology at the state university has taken for its main work the preparation of teachers for these subjects.

The Ohio State university has introduced an apprentice course in animal husbandry that includes two years study at the university and two years of practical work on a stock farm. The students are paid for their work while on the farm. The plan has attracted a number of the leading stockmen of Ohio and other states, and they are cooperating with the university in carrying it out.

Boyne City Journal: When a large boat owned by the Armour Packing Co. broke away from her moorings during an elevator fire in Chicago, Sunday, she rammed into the steamer Arizona of the White Transportation Co. of this city. The Arizona was sent to the bottom of the Chicago river. The Arizona was in winter quarters near King's machine shop. The telegram informing W. H. White of the loss conveyed no hint as to the cause of the accident. It is not known what reparation can be obtained from the Armour company. Mr. James White, a member of the Transportation Co., who was here on business, left Sunday evening for Chicago to investigate the matter. The Arizona was one of the best lumber boats plying the waters of the great lakes. She was purchased three years ago by the White Transportation Co., by whom extensive repairs have since been made. She had a carrying capacity of a quarter of a million feet of hardwood lumber and three-quarters of a million feet of soft wood. Her value was estimated at $20,000.

The two Boyne City papers have consolidated. The Boyne City Publishing Co. Journal having absorbed the Times.

All Spring 1914 Materials

Northern Michigan

Elk Rapids has been dull the far past year will be started again in the spring. Repairs are now being made.

The late William Atkinson was born in Canada, near Toronto, May 28, 1832, and departed this life at East Jordan, Mich., Feb. 6, 1914, being almost sixty-two years of age. Mr. Atkinson came to East Jordan about twenty-five years ago.

The Northern Michigan Transportation Co. is planning to make extensive improvements and repairs to its Petoskey docks in the near future. Work on the work will be done before the ice goes outhands and the remainder after warm weather arrives.

Boyne City expects to land a plant manufacturing sleigh pieces and runners, now of Long Rapids, at North Tonawanda, N. Y., but seeking a new location. Boyne City must put up $3,000 at once and a lot more in stock to be taken by the people of that city.

While hunting near Saturday north of Petoskey, Henry Laubrick, 17 years of age, of Epsilon, chased one of the animals up a tree. The cow fought back, and in the struggle, Henry's rifle was discharged. He fell to the ground, a bullet through his head, and died an hour later.

Charlevoix Pumson Grange, No. 40, met with Wilson Grange on Feb. 12, with a good attendance, there being about ten Grangers represented. As the crowd was late in getting there on account of the weather, practically nothing was done before dinner. In the afternoon all of the business of the meeting was done so the evening session was to be an open one.

Boyne Journal: Boyne City has just cause to feel right smart proud of her girls' basket ball team when it, not having lost a game this year, can now be said to have undisputed claim to northern Michigan championship. After having defeated Cheboygan here three weeks ago, they went to that city and the Cheboygan girls at Cheboygan, Friday night, with a victory of 14 to 8.

Boyne Journal: Little Bessie Smith, the three-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ed Smith, "last Main street, died Thursday morning a few minutes after having been discovered by her mother eating pills prescribed for rheumatism and containing a large amount of strychnine poisoning. The pills had been placed away in a bureau drawer where it is supposed they were found by the child, mistaking for candy and eaten. More than half a box had been consumed before she was discovered.

Traverse City Record: Tom Laird, who runs the mail boat between Leland and the North Manitou Island made his last trip yesterday, which is the latest that he has ever been known to sail Lake Michigan. As it was, he came through ice for four miles that was hail an inch thick. Mr. Laird stated that when he left Leland he was yesterday that the channel he made would be closed up this morning and the lake frozen over for miles out. He has laid his boat up for the season and the mail in the future will have to be carried by sledge as soon as the ice is thick enough to bear the weight of the mail team and his mail. He had were eight passengers with Mr. Laird and each one froze either hands or face.

The Petoskey News has the following concerning Charles Lancaster, who died suddenly in this city last week: Charles Lancaster, for more than twenty-nine years a resident of Petoskey, passed away Tuesday in Charlevoix, where he had gone a few days ago to construct a cement block machine. He was 63 years old. Despite his activity in business he had been in very poor health for nearly 20 years, having suffered a severe injury years ago in a fall from a horse. He had been a victim of hemorrhages for some time and his death resulted from hemorrhage of the brain. Mr. Lancaster came to this region when a small boy, making the journey from New York state with his parents. He moved to Petoskey from Pine Lake, Mich., nearly 30 years ago and made this city his home until a few months ago when he went to Bay City to spend some time with his daughter. His partner in the building business having gone south for the winter, Mr. Lancaster came back to Petoskey and after visiting his daughter here went to Charlevoix. He was an expert tool maker, lock-smith and wagon maker, and for many years had performed considerable jobbing work. The machine with which Albert Austin's Michigan street home was constructed and for some time conducted a bicycle repair shop on North Howard street. His wife died about four years ago.

Death of Mrs Myrtle Young

After an illness of many months, during which she endured much suffering with cancer of the stomach, Mrs. Myrtle Young passed away at three o'clock Monday afternoon, with her two sons and a brother at her bedside.

Deceased was 43 years of age. She was born at Fenton, Mich., coming to Charlevoix from Manistee in 1900. During her residence here she has been active in business and had a wide and enviable reputation as an expert fire insurance agent, ably assisted by her son Earl.

She leaves two sons—H. E. Bowen of Detroit and Earl A. Young, between whom and herself there was always the most affectionate attachment. A brother, A. J. Batchelder, arrived from Portland, Oregon, just before her death. Mrs. Young had very many sincere friends, not only in Charlevoix, but wherever she was known.

The funeral was Wednesday afternoon from the residence on State street.

FOUR THOUSAND FOR CHARLEVOIX

River and Harbor Bill Gives Michigan All That is Asked For.

When the annual river and harbor appropriation bill was reported to the house of representatives Wednesday it carried items for Michigan improvements aggregating $814,350. This sum will be expended in addition to an appropriation of $211,000 for Marquette harbor, carried in the sundry civil appropriation bill. No new Michigan projects are authorized by the measure, but an item of $350,000 is placed on the bill to continue work on the contractible of the Fourth lock at the Soo.

Other appropriations are principally for harbor maintenance, these items being: Ontonagon harbor, $10,000; Marquette, $70,000; Menominee, $37,000; South Haven, 17,000; Muskegon, $5,000; Ludington, $21,000; Frankfort, $3,000; Charlevoix, $4,000; Clinton river, $2,000. An item for $50,000 for the waterway across Keweenaw point is provided also an item of $50,000 for the improvement of the black river at Port Huron. An appropriation of $362,850 for the harbor of refuge at Harbor Beach is proposed.

According to chairman Sparkman, of Florida, Michigan got all the appropriations which were recommended by the chief of army engineers.

NOT A CANDIDATE

Former Governor Will Not Return to Michigan Until After the Prima ies

Authoritative and positive announcement that former governor Chase S. Osborn now on a world tour with wife, would not return to Michigan in time to participate in next fall's primaries, and hence has effectually eliminated himself from consideration as a possible candidate for the republican nomination for governor, stirred up quite a lot of interest in republican circles throughout the state. Although there seemed to be no apparent basis for the report, many of the G. O. P. followers in Michigan had conserved that the former governor would return and enter the race.

Mr. and Mrs. Osborn are now in India, where they journeyed after the former executive had terminated his hunting trip in the interior of Africa. They are expected to leave soon for Manila, Philippine Islands, and, after spending two weeks there, will go to China to remain for several months.

Baker's Inn Improvements

Your familiarity with Baker's Inn will become a thing of the past when you enter the lobby the first time after the completion of improvements now in progress, and the change embraces about all of the ground floor.

The stairway, which arose from the north center of the office, has been moved to the northeast corner, will landing half way up, from which diverging and left will stairways.

The former dining room is cut up into seven sleeping rooms and three public bath-rooms. The new dining room will be entered from the office in the center of the north side, and will embrace the space formerly occupied by the parlor and tea-room. Easy access is also given to the additional floor for sleeping room section. Minor changes in the office are contemplated, all with the convenience of both the public and the office force.

The hotel will have 27 sleeping rooms, all, seven with private baths, and 15 with hot and cold water.

Price Bros. are doing the work.

Editor Sentinel:

In the article published in the Charlevoix Sentinel of Jan. 5, 1914, taken from a circular issued by the Citizens Realty Co., of Michigan, with offices in Chicago, the editor adds a little. It claims it is all true except the distance, which is 35 miles from Charlevoix to place of 18 miles. Now, I think the editor is mistaken. In the circular it states that Bogus Island is about 18 miles northwest of Charlevoix. Is that not right? I think if the editor would look this up, he would find that about 18 miles is correct.

Our friend Gallagher is honestly right but practically wrong. The distance should be reckoned on the line of travel and communication, which is 35 miles. If you are going to Beaver Island you must go to Beaver Harbor.

MANY SETTLERS

Inquiries Indicate Biggest Influx of Land Buyers the State Has Known

"Western Michigan will see the greatest influx of land buyers this spring and summer she has ever experienced," is the declaration of Secretary John I Gibson of the Western Michigan Development bureau.

"Inquiries have been more numerous than ever before," said Mr. Gibson, "and they are coming from a substantial class of men who have studied land in all sections of the country. Only recently Michigan received high praise from a member of the state forester's staff of Wyoming, who made a study of land available for grazing. He declared that Michigan grasses were even more luscious than the grasses of the west, particularly his own state, and he advised several ranchers to pick out here while it is available. It is very certain that Michigan can raise as fine cattle as any place in the world.

Add to Productivity

"When a great interest shown in the raising of alfalfa, western Michigan is found to raise some excellent beef cattle and it is safe to say that dairying is still in its infancy. The new settlers who are coming will add greatly to the productivity of this section.

Filling Lecture Dates

A number of dates are scheduled ahead for Secretary Gibson and he will attend several meetings where he will deliver lectures in the next few weeks. Tuesday he will be one of the speakers at the Grand Haven board of trade banquet; at Jackson February 18 and 20; at Lansing board of trade meeting February 24; West Michigan Pike association meeting, Muskegon, February 27, and March 2 and 3 at Lansing, where the big farmer's roundup will be held.

The Board of Public Works

A petition is being circulated and very numerously signed to submit to the voters of the city at the spring municipal election the question of abolishing the board of public works.

Without stating any reflections upon an aforesaid board, we cannot lose sight of the fact that its existence only serves to impair responsibility without material financial good final results, —a result as the council itself is the final arbiter.

Then again, without questioning the sincerity of the individual members of the board, we observe a marked diversity of opinion on the board in matters of vital interest to the community, and a consequent delay in much needed action.

We cannot recognize the benefit of the board of public works in a city of the size of Charlevoix, and we are glad the people are to have an opportunity to decide the matter.

Primary Election Officials

The council Monday night provided for the municipal primary election by the appointment of the following:

Commissioners—first ward H. C Cooper; second ward R. F. Sloan; third ward E. B. Antrim.

Inspectors—first ward K. C. Hammet, H. W. Jackson, D. F. Mack; second ward Chas. Emrey, Milo Miller, Harold Bedford, Everez Nordrum; third ward J. E. Dickson, W. J. Weikel, E. B. Ward, R. S. Shapton.

A Complete Surprise

Twenty-five friends of Miss Lonia Walker called at the parsonage Tuesday evening to remind her that she had not reached the age yet where she ceased to have birthdays. To give weight to the inquiry and scores and wishes that were expressed, a set of butter spreaders and some pieces of cut glass were presented. All present claimed they had the time of their lives.

MICHIGAN WOULD GET MILLION

Congressman J. M. C. Smith Figures That It Will Build Trunk Lines Across State

In a speech supporting the Sherkleford good roads bill which contains some of the features of the excellent measures introduced by Congressman Woodruff of Michigan, Congressman J. M. C. Smith figured out just how much his own state is to be benefitted by the $25,000,000 appropriation, provided, Mr. Smith had the figures at hand to show that Michigan has 3,185 miles of post roads and 1,771 miles of star routes, making a total of 52,956 miles of postal routes entitled to a share of the money. The bill will allow a total of $625,740 for improvement of roads in Michigan which would be $17,857 for each mile.

By the provision of the bill the state must spend a similar amount before be organized to the benefits, which would make a total of $1,847,500 to be expended in the state. Mr. Smith believes that $1,000,000 more is a fair estimate for the building of gravel or macadam roads. At this rate Michigan, under the allowance provided, would be able to construct 614 miles of road, which would be enough to construct two highways running north and south or three highways east and west across the entire state.

West Michigan Pike Association

The county and township road commissioners of Western Michigan will be in the big meeting called for Muskegon for Friday afternoon and evening, Feb. 27th. The meeting will be the annual meeting of the West Michigan Pike Association and will be for the purpose of electing officers for the ensuing year, and for the further purpose of outlining plans for stimulating road building and arranging for a second trip over the Pike, which trip will occur some time in July. A banquet will be served in the evening. Hon. Frank P. Rogers, state highway commissioner, will be among the speakers.

Another "good-roads" man who will be on hand and will take an active part in the meeting is President D. H. Day, of the Western Michigan Development Bureau. Every township and every county interested in the Pike passes, should be represented at the meeting by commissioners or more representative citizens, though not obliged to do so, the several sections of Western Michigan may be properly looked after in the plans made for the promotion of the Pike idea.

Historical Society

On January twenty-third, nineteen hundred fourteen, Mr. Brayton Harris will read a paper before the Historical Society upon the subject "Father Charlevoix," and at that meeting presented to the society a spondid enlarged portrait, the distinguished missionary and explorer.

The Historical Society wishes to express to Mr. Saltonstall its appreciation of this valuable gift, supplemented as it is by a paper which represents deep study and extensive historical research.

This portrait has been hung in the public library of the city of Charlevoix and the following resolution, adopted by members of the society, but by the entire community. It is believed that this resolution is the proper and most unique manner of expressing appreciation of courage, conviction and perseverance to the pioneer and community.

Resolved, That at a regular meeting of the Historical Society, February ninth, nineteen hundred fourteen, that this expression of appreciation be spread upon the minutes of the meeting and that a copy of this resolution, signed by the President and Secretary of the Society, be given to Mr. Saltonstall, and to the local press for publication.

DECLINES RUSS POST

ILLINOIS EDITOR REFUSES TO BE AMBASSADOR BECAUSE OF CONTROVERSY.

CRANE MAY BE SELECTED

Letter From the President Pays High Tribute to Peoria Man. Who Feels He Would Be Hampered in Work at St. Petersburg.

Washington, Feb. 4.—Henry M Pindell of Peoria, who was recently nominated and confirmed as ambassador to Russia, has declined the appointment, according to a letter to President Wilson made public at the White House on Monday.

In a letter sent to President Wilson Mr. Pindell states that circumstances have arisen which render it impossible for him to undertake the mission. He asserts he has been put in a false light by certain "gross misrepresentations in the public press."

In a reply to the resignation, the president expressed his unqualified confidence in Mr Pindell's ability, character and entire suitability for the Russian post. Mr. Pindell's letter follows

Dear Mr. President: I deeply appreciate the honor you have done me in nominating me ambassador to Russia and the very great compliment paid me by the senate in confirming the nomination by unanimous vote. I had hoped and confidently expected when you asked me to accept the post that I could do so at once and take up the work at a very early date.

I am therefore the more embarrassed to find that circumstances have arisen which will render it impossible for me to undertake the mission.

I have, as you know, been put in a very false light by certain gross misrepresentations in the public press; and while I do not think these have been cleared away and the nomination secured to me in the face of a thorough and dispassionate investigation, I feel that it would be more delicate for me to decline the appointment than to accept it. No conviction of this kind should surround the appointment of an ambassador to a country which cannot be expected to be familiar with the real circumstances as they are known at home. They should be nothing personal to talk about or explain there as far as the ambassador himself is concerned.

It has, therefore, that trusting to be justified by my own humble integrity of purpose and my confidence in your support thereunder I must decline the appointment.

"With business and distinguished consideration, believe me to be, Mr. President, your obedient servant.

"HENRY M PINDELL."

The president's reply follows:

"Dear Mr. Pindell: Your letter does great credit to your delicate sense of propriety and nervous to decrease, if that were possible, my admiration for you and my confidence in your eminent fitness for the mission which you now decline.

"I can but bend to your judgment in the matter; because it is clear to me that, feeling as you do, whether you are right or wrong in that feeling or not, you would not be comfortable or happy in the post. I therefore can not insist. You will allow me, however, I hope, to express my deep regret.

"Cordially and sincerely yours,

"WOODROW WILSON."

Soon after Pindell's declination reports became current that Charles R. Crane of Chicago will shortly be nominated by President Wilson for the Russian post.

Mr. Crane had luncheon with President Wilson last Friday and at that time a report spread that he would soon be nominated for some important diplomatic post.

REFUSES PLEA OF WOMEN

President Tells Workers' Committee That He Wouldn't Take the Initiative for Suffrage.

Washington, Feb. 4.—President Wilson on Monday again told the suffragists of the United States that he could not help them.

The president, in a conference lasting ten states and more than 50 individual calls, said that the House the president explained to them that he could not put the influence of his administration behind legislation and that women suffrage would have to be supported by the Democratic party before he would express his views upon it.

The working girls marched on the White House like an invading host with colors flying and bands playing.

While their committee of speakers was battling in interview the president the rank-and file remained outside waiting for tidings as to whether they could expect the help of the chief executive of the United States in their battle for the ballot.

CULLOM'S BODY BURIED

FUNERAL SERVICES HELD IN STATEHOUSE AT SPRINGFIELD.

Many Statesmen, From All Sections of United States, Attend Funeral of Aged Ex-Senator.

Springfield, Ill., Feb. 2—Across the grave fell the shadow of Abraham Lincoln's monument as the body of senator Shelby Moore Cullom was buried in Oak Ridge Cemetery, 500 yards from the Lincoln obelisk on Sunday afternoon.

Statesmen from all sections of Illinois and hundreds of persons from Springfield stood about the flower lined grave shortly before dark. It was an impressive close of a simple service at the state capitol.

In the house of representatives, from the same platform where few times Mr Cullom was presented with a federal memorial flags contributed by his friends, Senator Cullom was buried between the graves of the two wives who preceded him many years.

Washington, Jan. 30.—Former Senator Shelby M. Cullom of Illinois died here on Wednesday after an illness of more than a week.

His last words were a wish that he might have lived to see the completion of the national memorial to Abraham Lincoln, who was his personal friend.

The end came as a result of a general breakdown after the aged statesman had fought against death for six weeks. When forced to take to his bed the ex-senator's strength slowly began to ebb. He clung tenaciously to life after he had been given up several times. He was unconscious most of the last days.

ASKS U.S. PHONE LINE

P. O. DEPARTMENT COMMITTEE CITES ULTIMATE NECESSITY OF FEDERAL CONTROL.

WOULD ACT IMMEDIATLY

Report Points Out That Government Monopoly Is Only Solution to Public Needs—Would Cost the Nation $225,000,000.

Washington, Feb. 3.—Postmaster General Burleson submitted to the senate on saturday the recommendations of the departmental committee appointed by him to investigate the practicability of government monopoly of telephone and telegraph lines, wireless communication and whatever system of transmitting messages may later be devised by congress.

Under the proposed real estate field by the telephone companies would not be required, but accommodations for switchboards, etc., leased until room could be found for them in post offices. The report says this policy would reduce the cost of purchase of the phone lines, the capitalization of which, as they now exist, is placed at $600,000,000.

The report declares that "the only way to afford to the people the complete and modern postal facilities that the constitution makes it a duty of the government to provide is by carrying out these suggestions.

"That congress declare a government monopoly over all telegraph, telephone and radio communication and such other means for the transmission of intelligence as may hereafter develop.

"2. That congress acquire by purchase at appraised value the commercial telephone network, except the farmer lines.

"3. That congress authorize the postmaster general to lease, in his discretion and under such regulations as he may prescribe, revocable licenses for the operation, by private individuals, associations, companies and corporations of the telegraph service and such parts of the telephone service as may not be acquired by the government.

Government ownership of the telephone rather than telegraph lines is recommended for the reason that telegraph service can be more readily superimposed on telephone lines than telephone service on telegraph lines.

The cost of acquiring the telegraph facilities is estimated at $125,000,000 as against $200,000,000 for the long distance and toll telephone lines. Yet there are some 2,000 projectors of telephone lines, payments would extend over a period that would allow ample time to market bonds, the report adds. The report continues

"According to the best available data the capitalization of the long distance and toll lines represents approximately $200,000,000 and the capitalization of the entire commercial network approximately $600,000,000.

LIFTS ARMS EMBARGO

PRESIDENT'S PROCLAMATION REVOKES ORDER FORBIDDING MUNITIONS OF WAR.

AMERICANS FLEE MEXICO CITY

Nation's Chief Executive Says That Now There's No Constitutional Authority in Southern Republic.

Washington, Feb. 5.—President Wilson on Tuesday made official the proclamation lifting the embargo on arms for Mexican rebels.

The president's proclamation is as follows:

Whereas, By a proclamation of the president, issued on March 14 1912, under a joint resolution of congress, approved by the president on the same day, it was declared that there existed in Mexico conditions of domestic violence which were promoted by the use of arms or munitions of war procured from the United States; and

Whereas, By the joint resolution above mentioned it thereupon became unlawful to export arms or munitions of war to Mexico except under such limitations and exceptions as the president should prescribe; and

Now, therefore, I, Woodrow Wilson, president of the United States of America, hereby declare and proclaim that, as the conditions have changed, and it is desirable to place the United States with reference to the exportation of arms or munitions of war to Mexico in the same position as other nations, the said proclamation is hereby revoked.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the City of WASHINGTON, this the President:

"WM. J. BRYAN, Secretary of State."

The executive order under which the exportation of arms and munitions into Mexico is forbidden, was a proclamation in accepted practices of neutrality—a deliberate departure from these practices under a well considered joint resolution of congress determined upon in circumstances which have now ceased to exist. It was intended to discourage individuals and to put the regularly constituted authorities of Mexico.

Since that order was issued the circumstances of the case have undergone a radical change. There is now no constitutional government in Mexico, and the existence of the other parties and factions is very doubtful. The government of the United States is now insisting upon, namely, that Mexico shall be left free to settle her own affairs and as soon as possible put them upon a constitutional footing by her own forces and counsel. Perfect impartiality is observed.

Mexico City, Feb. 5.—Many of the Americans resident here, on learning of President Wilson's decision to raise the embargo on the exportation of arms from the United States to Mexico left the capital on Tuesday for the coast on the night train.

EXCLUSION BILLS ARE LOST

Congressmen Put Aside Party and Defeat Measure Aimed at the Japanese.

Washington, Feb. 5.—Led by the patriotic speeches of Representatives Mann, Sabath and Rainey of Illinois and Sherley of Kentucky, the house on Tuesday overwhelmingly defeated all Pacific exclusion amendments to the immigration bill. An amendment proposed by Representative Raker of California to exclude all persons living east of a line drawn through the Red sea and the Ural mountains was beaten on by a vote of 182 to 6, and was followed immediately by the defeat of Hayes amendment, excluding all representatives of the brown, black and yellow races by a vote of 200 to 88. The total vote taken was the first direct expression of the house on Asiatic exclusion since the original exclusion acts were passed. That the issue was not decided on its merits was disclosed by the speeches made just before the vote was taken, in which Representative Mann of Chicago, the Republican leader, took the initiative.

SUFFRAGE IS STATE ISSUE

House Democrats in Caucus Sustain the President by Vote of 127 to 53.

An Interference of Fate

By THEODORE L. BROWN

It seems to me that fate must find an amusement, minus a pause especially adaptable to the working out of its peculiar decrees. At any rate, by intervening for me it changed the whole course of my life. I was paying attention to a young lady and doctor-book, which I should not had I not made a call in one of those gigantic structures where perfume fifty families were housed. Not only was my future changed, but the whole course of several other persons was changed as well.

I went up my card to the ladies of the Swift family, all old friends of mine, and was told to go up. The elevator landed me on the seventh floor, and I was directed to No. 742. I pushed the bell button, was admitted by a maid and left alone in the living room to await the coming of such member of the family as should come in to receive me. The Swifts had moved before I had met even them, so I did not suppose they had taken a furnished apartment, yet all the articles in the room were unfamiliar to me. Possessing a fine appetite and in case one of the distinct specimens of feminine humanity I ever saw. She appeared to be twenty, eighteen and twenty and pretty as a picture. She was a perfect stranger to me and advanced toward me as though I was a stranger to her, casting one inquiring glance at me then dropping her eyes to the floor. A becoming blush suffused her face. It became her, and I thought the more of her because she blushed. When she spoke, she spoke in terror from the point of awaking a ward. She was therefore chilled to begin a conversation.

"Mrs. Morgan wrote me that you had been obliged to sell earlier than you had expected and the money intended to be put off unless I would consent to follow you to your station and be married there."

Good gracious! "Fellow me to my station! And be married there!" What did it all mean? That I was mistaken for another young gentleman evidently, but I was willing that the girl should give me more information before correcting her.

"I'm—er—I'm not going to sell—"

"Not going to sell! Your orders have been changed?"

"There are so many things to explain," I said, "that perhaps we had better begin at the beginning.

I hooked about me for a seat, and my eyes rested on a sofa.

"Perhaps we" said the girl. "Won't you sit down?"

I went upon the sofa, and after some hesitation she sat down beside me.

There are features about this this matter that I do not understand," I said. "Give me your version of it."

"I don't know what part of it you don't understand, but I am glad of an opportunity to set myself right. I am sure you think me a fickle, heartless girl. I did it all. Father's failure and my being obliged to go to work are further sympathy. She said. "You must be married." I refused. Whom shall I marry? You shall marry my uncle." "But perhaps he won't marry me." "Yes, he will. I'll see to that. As soon as he sees you he will be a set of flattering things, adding that you will be her best one she would at once that we should enjoy life and time together. I gave her my picture to show to you, after which she told me that it was all settled, but that you had been endeared to the Philippines and a hasty marriage would be sorry. Then I received a note from her that you had been obliged to start at once for San Francisco in order to sell on a steamer leaving on the 14th. You see that I have had no hand in the matter, which seems to me has been indecorously hurried. Now that you have seen me I trust that you will consider yourself at liberty to withdraw without the loss of any of your inheritance, for I shall not accept a penny of it."

There was a good deal of hating in this brief statement, which was given with downcast eyes and a pouting at the prominent lower lip. When she came to the last sentence, giving me my liberty and refusing to touch my inheritance, I was cut to the quick.

"I refuse to accept my freedom," I said. "It is you who must decide whether or no I am acceptable to you. But there is no reason for hurry. I am not going to the Philippines or any where else. I am not a soldier. I am a citizen, a citizen who has been made a man entirely of the same name as your soldier. My card was sent in by mistake. Consider me and let decide at your leisure. Dwell upon this man whom you have never seen in speaking away to the other side of the earth. Consider me an applicant for his position. At any rate permit me to come again with proper credentials with a view to becoming one of your friends, and the rest may take care of itself."

My proposition was accepted. I formally found a mutual friend to introduce and vouch for me. I continued my calls and the mission to have been made facilitated everything. The only is now my wife, and we are very happy.

This is why I consider an apartment house an excellent place for fate to carry out its schemes. Had not my card gone to the wrong flat I should not now be the husband of my wife.

"But, Janet," protested Anne, "I am not going to fall in a faint in my life. I couldn't do it. I'd hate myself."

"I'm a deep-dyed villain," growled Janet, striking an attitude. "You blessed innocent, don't I know your proclivities? Have your notice handy for a simple and good reason why I sent you a boiled lobsterin, why I expected Aubrey Churchill on the 4.50 train was?"

"Why—"

Anne starred in consternation, but her hatchet against the low ceiling and was reeling backward when strong arms caught her and set her upon her feet. Then a travelling bag was flung upon the balcony, and, emerging from the adjoining bedroom, a man vaulted beside the girls.

"My lady of the slope," he said, smiling whimsically upon Anne, who after one swift look was trying wildly to melt into the shadow. "I have a score to settle with you after I get something to eat. Just look at the substituted brow, will you? It's like a sponge. And these aching arms are tired that long ten miles on an empty stomach."

A terrifying silence followed the click of the window behind Janet's exit. Anne stood on the balcony, balcony with the perfect assurance that precipice either attack or precipitate flight, gazed straight into the steady eyes of the man before her.

Then, turning swiftly, she wrestled with the window fastening for an instant and fled. The man, laughing softly, stepped into the library and called, "The tilt after the banquet, remember," as she escaped the room.

He was a young man who would have his way. Anne discontentedly admitted later. She had been playing fox and geese with him desperately all evening, with the drawing convention that she was the slaughter goose. When she turned her in the dim library as the other guests drifted into the music room she aimed a good surrender.

"Mr. Morgan story Lady," he said throwing his hands into the pockets of his tights and leaning against the library bookcase, with an expression of men's severity on his clean cut face, "why did you do it?"

Anne squirmed preparatory to flight but he blocked across from the door and she settled back, with a laugh that tried to be reflective.

"It was a great story, wasn't it?" she said irrelevantly.

"Don't you know?" he said, dropping down beside her, "that you ought to apologize for causing me to discuss mode our business.

Embarrassment enveloped Anne. She was groping desperately for the door of the ship, her dare-devilry, that had got her into difficulty and refused to extricate her. "Why, didn't you act out?" she stammered, a tear welling her cheeks. "I did not keep you there."

"But the story did." He smiled insistently upon her as he drew the paper from the pocket.

Anne's heart stopped. She had forgotten the scribbling on the margins where she dropped the story in the car.

"It seems we have a stern admirer in Janet," he said gently, "and I, for one, quite approve of her. I was deep in a pamphlet on your course and virtues when the train went through Stop."

Anne groaned. She could not help it, knowing as she did, the extravagance of Janet's imagination.

"She has everything arranged," he continued, sitting idly down at the fireplace grill half facing him. "Bridesmaids, best man and a honeymoon." We didn't either of us know that when we started out this afternoon, did we?"

Anne suddenly buried her face in her hands. He looked at her a moment musingly, then ever so gently, pulled her fingers and made her look at him.

"Janet is a clever girl," he drawled. "She said you would have to be taken in a trick."

Anne blushed. Where was her boasted omniscience? Her eyes sank. She blurted out. "I did it myself. I knew you were a winner."

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Coughs and Colds.

In the season when coughs and colds are prevalent any method of preventing them and checking the first symptoms without drugs may be of inestimable value. Trying the following suggestions are offered in anticipation. When you find you have a cough and be force it grip w. be deep seated go into the air and practice deep breathing. Draw air into the lungs until they are completely distended, raising the arms above the head during inspiration to more fully expand the chest. Hold the air in the lungs for a few seconds; then breathe it out slowly. Repeat the operation a dozen times, or more and after an hour try it again. Persistence in this treatment will often cure a newly contracted cough in a few hours. If the cough is of long standing pain may be felt under the shoulder blades and across the chest during the exercise, but as this is caused by the tearing away of adhesions of the lung tissue it will usually pass away in a day or two. And the fact that it is felt shows that the lungs need thorough inflation.

PENNSYLVANIA STATE GRANGE

A Rousing Convention of Patrons of Husbandry at Reading.

The estimated total membership of the grange in Pennsylvania is about 100,000. During the past year forty-eight new granges have been organized, and the net gain in membership is placed at about 3,500. The cash receipts of the year were $21,000 and the expenses $17,000. Master Lecturer Lyon made several important recommendations in his annual address to the state grange. In regard to transportation he said that the cost of transportation is the real cause of the high cost of living. Adequate storage facilities, an extension of the canals northward and improved railway accommodations are some of the things he believed would help reduce the cost. The consumer has a duty to perform in that he should arrange to get farm produce direct from the farmer so far as possible. He also wanted an investigation as to the price and as to improving the quality of farm machinery. The conservation of state water powers without restriction by the corporations and monopolies was also recommended. Women's suffrage was much in evidence at this session, as it appears to have been in almost every state grange meeting this year. The grange went on record as in favor of it. The grange opposed the removal of quarantine on potatoes, voted to give three scholarships to the state college, indorsed the plan of teaching agriculture in their schools and recommended a "healthy favorable attitude." It was the unanimous sentiment of the grange that the constitution should be so amended as to include an insurance department and sale of industrial insurance policies. Industrial referendum and initiative was also recommended. The initiative, referendum and recall were indorsed. It was recommended that the statutory department be stripped of all entanglements other than the arrangement of specifications. It was also recommended that the grange have a representative in the legislature authorizing the submitting of a $2,000,000 for good roads. The sale of olea as imitation butter was opposed. C. H. Dillon of Columbia was re-elected to the executive committee. W. H. Graham of Tioga was re-elected to the finance committee, and J. P. Gifford of Erie was chosen a member of the board of directors of the Pomona, a association for a term of six years.

THE FARM BUREAU

County Plan of Grange Co-operation Discussed.

If It Is a Good Thing the Grange Ought to Become a Constructive Agent to Develop It—Otherwise It Should Be Opposed.

The cost of agricultural education will never be compared until we seek to reach the very last man on the farm with the best things," said President K. L. Butterfield at Kalamazoo, speaking to 300 people committed to confer with him concerning rural affairs.

For forty-seven years the grange has been concerned with the effort "to reach the last man on the farm with the best things," says Mr. Butterfield, lecturer of Michigan state grange, in the Michigan Farmer. Sometimes it has led, again it has followed other institutions in the quest. There never was a time when it was more the goal, nor a time when it might see so clearly how distant is that goal as today. There is still a wide gulf between "the best man" and "the best things" experimentally, albeit great movements are striving to bring them together. Conspicuous of all these movements is that one which is shaping itself in the minds of the leaders of the minds of whatever name. And for co-operation in theory the grange stands. If it stands for anything. The ability now is to model in applying it practically so as to carry the "best things" into the byways to "the last man." It means working shoulder to shoulder with those we never have expected with both in and outside the grange. It means finding common ground with consumers as well as with those who are farmers, as well as farmers, and co-operating from that common ground for the betterment of all.

One form of possible co-operation which is become at our doors today is that of the county farm bureau. Great Britain of opinion is held by institutions and persons, and exactly opposite positions are being taken by different persons, with some above the need for through investigation and deliberate action on the subject. At best the whole matter is in a hazy state, so new that as yet it has taken no form but mere verbal plausible.

Certain it is that some patriotism on the part of city business men will be required by country business men, for as certain is it that in one can possibly effect in the farmers of a county forming an association among themselves for promoting the rural welfare of that county from any and every standpoint that we see it. But if these plans for farm improvement exist now, together with many others not between, some combines like a "secretary," "manager," "demonstrator," "expert," "specialist" all him what you will. Others do not. Where existing it seems to reason the first man devotes special efforts to self-improvement in some textbook and foreign crops, in some to selling better markets and to standardizing the varieties offered for sale, in some he is active in strengthening and extending organizations among farmers. Various forms of the idea have been suggested, some by the federal government, by agricultural colleges, by banks, by city boards of trade and by farmers alone. On all of these the grange will find material for study and consideration.

Here, then, is a large opportunity for scientific grange business men to do its own bidding, yet one which also carries its membership quality. If the county farm bureau, or any form, is a harmful proposition the grange should be prominent in its study and full examination. If, however it finds in the idea possibility of developing into a plan for "reaching the last man on the farm with the best things" the grange could undoubtedly be stand as a constructive agent in developing it to their end.

FOR THE CHILDREN

Mirror Drawing.

Do you think you know how to draw? Before you decide please make this test. You will need a sheet of paper, a mirror about the width of the paper, a pencil and another sheet of paper or a large card or book.

Lay the paper flat on the table. Then prop up the mirror at one side of the paper so that it is at right angles with the paper and reflects it. Now take the extra sheet of paper in your left hand and hold it so that it is between your eyes and the piece of paper which is lying on the table. You must hold the piece of paper in your left hand so that you cannot see the paper that is lying on the table except in the mirror.

You are now ready to begin drawing. It should be some simple object which can be shown by a few straight lines, such as a kite, an envelope, an open book, a box, etc. You draw with your right hand, holding the paper in your left, so that you cannot see what you are making except in the mirror. Watch the mirror all the time until the drawing is done. You will be surprised at the result.

Warning.

This is an outdoor game for boys. One boy is called the "cock," draws a line on the ground at one end of the field or playground. This line is his boundary, and while he is there no one can meddle with him. He clasps his hands before him, calls out "Warning!" or "Warning once, warning twice, a bushel of wheat and a bushel of rice; when the cock crows, out jump I." Then with his hands clasped he jumps out and runs after the others trying to touch one.

If he touches his hands, or if they are pulled apart he must run into bounds as fast as possible, or any one who catches him must be carried back stack by him into bounds, and both then sally out, clasping hands and try to catch a third in the same way.

Each time one is called a "sting," he caught he as well as those who start from bounds, must be ridden "sting" and if the cock and chicks loose hands after she may be ridden home if caught.

Ship Alphabet.

The players sit in a long row as if in cabins at school. The one who acts as schoolmaster rains sharply, beginning at one end. "The name of the letter?" "A," says the first player. The schoolmaster turns to the next player "The name of the ship?" and begins to count ten, very quickly and sternly. "Antimonde" is perhaps the first out before he reaches that number. "The name of the captain?" "Adam." "What is the cargo?" "Apples." "The port she comes from?" "Amsterdam." "The port she is bound for?" "Amboy." "The next letter?" "B," and so on. If the schoolmaster is very strict and abrupt with his questions and counting he can drive every idea from the mind of the person he points at. If he counts ten before an answer can be passes on to the next and the next until the answer is given. The one who drives it moves up three more who fail. The game should be played very rapidly.

Pigments For Paints.

Mummies are usually preserved in the finest bitumen, and this ancient bitumen has in the course of centuries been used in the manufacture of paints. It is a deep brown in color and comes from a source equally ancient. It is procured from the black, lusty fluid discharged by the cuttlefish to blind and baffle its enemies.

Little John, aged three and one-half, was anxious to sit up one evening and talk with the company, but about 8:30 came mamma said, "Come, John, it is time little men were abed; you have been yawning since 7 o'clock." Indignant at the little fellow replied, "Mamma, didn't you know I was only letting in fresh air?"

A Weak Engine.

The train, a local passenger, was stopping frequently. Finally, at a railroad crossing where it stopped to unhitch a little her about five cows ad remarked, "Gee, I has to stop to unpump."

Semiprecious Metals.

It appears from recent geological reports and mining publications that the "semi-precious" metals are copper, lead and zinc. Where quicksilver and tin go off on the classification we are not informed. Aluminum also sometimes sells higher than the three first mentioned and antimony for more than lead and zinc. These are probably the quasi precious metals. When we were younger the metals were classed as precious and common, we believe. Now probably some one is found in the "common" category. What is the use anyway—if there are no priceless in array what is the joy in being a rare general, and why "semi-precious" if there is going to be only iron bedded—Engineering and Mining Journal.

PERSONAL SIDE of LINCOLN

WHEN Lincoln lived in Springfield, Ill., he practiced law. He worked hard by fits and starts, and gave a considerable portion of his office hours to newspapers, story swapping, poetry, history, geometry—anything but work. His house was near his office, but if it be true that "home is the other person," his home was not a place to turn to with glad rapture the time came for pot on his rickety pipe but and leave the office.

Lincoln generally got to the office in the morning at sevenock, and when it was later, Herndon, his partner, knew there had been trouble at home, for Lincoln then had no cheerful morning greeting, only a grunt as he sat wearily upon the morning's mail. He might have lunched, easily enough, at home, but he preferred crackers and cheese at the office, and often stayed there until after dark.

Sometimes he would "knock off" in the late afternoon and clean out the stable and saw wood, feed the horse and milk the cow. He had a passion for "chores" of his boyhood days on his father's farm in Indiana. He was his own hired man until and was often with the chores in great demand. At midnight a neighbor saw him once chopping wood for his supper, but he was away.

In the evening, having no club, Lincoln would ordinarily go to the grocery store and spellbind the cracker box habitues with some more of his everlasting anecdotes—only two of which, he insisted, were his own inventions. If a minstrel show came to town he was first to be a frantic, first-class patron, and, next to a blackface comedy, he was enamored of "magic lantern" entertainments. He had a passion for relating to the mysteries of anything mechanical, and if he were alive today the automobile would have given him great joy.

When circuit riding in the antebellum days he would utilize the rest of the noon hour after luncheon at some wayside farmhouse in crawling under and prowling over the harvest machinery, as full of questions as a schoolboy, more insatiably curious than any of Eve's daughters. As he rolled the stories of springtime every vehicle on the kitchen clerk pleased him unutterably.

In the house he spent most of his time indulging his children, playing with the cat like Montaigne, or lying sprawled out, like Cellini, on the floor of the hall reading. He didn't like the parlor, because the hardcloth chairs and marble table, the wax flowers under a glass bell, the portrait of him and the family Bible, with their sage glass clasp, represented lines of stiff, uncomfortable and not his own notion of solid comfort. He would be in his shirt sleeves, and if loud knocking at the front door disturbed his element leisure he would go to the door just as he was and pretend to "fool the women folks out of their clothes. Mrs. Lincoln never forgave him for helping himself to butter at the table with his own knife.

Lincoln's favorite outer garb as he sallied forth in winter for his office was an ancient gray shawl, he took particular pains never to have his hat brushed or his shoes blacked; his carpet bag threatened at the seams to disgorge its burthen of legal documents, his green cotton umbrella had no handle to speak of, and inside was the legend, "A. Lincoln," the letters cut out of white muslin and sewed to the faded cloth. Altogether he looked like the advance agent of a Donnan Minstrel show. He was a pair of spectacles, too, him thirty-seven and one-half cents.

The office was in character with the notorious indifference to appearances of the senior partner of the firm. Once a young lady student attempted to blow a trail thereat, the accumulated rubbish, and found that some seeds grown by a cragsman man had taken root and sprouted in the dirt.

The mailbox was Lincoln's old plug hat, as was formerly in case when he was postmaster at New Salem. He also used the hat as a repository for legal papers of importance. Miscellaneous transactions were confided to the safekeeping of a mammoth saddle bags, of which Lincoln has once exclaimed—"When you can't find IT anywhere else look into this."

When Lincoln went into court there was none of the gentle conquering-hero swagger about him. He would drawl, "Well, Judge, I am glad to see you" and if in the course of the argument it was necessary for him to convince a point to the other side he would remark, "I reckon it would be fair to let in that," and when overruled by the court could laugh and say, "Well, I reckon I must be wrong."

When a lawyer asked him if an attachment had the force of a summons his confession of ignorance was cheerfully frank. On a long pulsavering letter requesting his legal service he wrote laconically, "Count me in. A. Lincoln."

The account of the fee for Wallace's brother-in-law's suit that to Herndon. He never disclosed the account book himself with a reckoning. When anybody gave him money for legal services he would divide with Herndon if the latter was in the office, and when Herndon was not there he would wrap the money up in a piece of paper, mark it in pencil, "Case of Smith vs. Jones—Herndon's half," and leave it in a drawer of his partner's desk.

When they made him president and he was just about to start for the fire Washington he hitched to the old office for the last time and found Herndon there.

"Billy," he said, "you and I have been together for more than 20 years, and to all that time we've never had a hard word. Will you let my name stay on the old sign till I get back from Washington?"

The tears came into Herndon's eyes. He took the homy, prehensile hand of the "rail splitter" in his own.

"Abe," he said, "I'll never have another partner."

"Why," he said, "you and I have been together for more than 20 years, and to all that time we've never had a hard word. Will you let my name stay on the old sign till I get back from Washington?"

The tears came into Herndon's eyes. He took the homy, prehensile hand of the "rail splitter" in his own.

"Abe," he said, "I'll never have another partner."

Secretary Chase's ambition to supplant Lincoln in the presidential chair did not worry Lincoln half so much as it did the Job's comforters who surrounded him. To one of these Lincoln said, "You were brought up as a farmer, didn't you? Then you know what a chinfly is. My brother and I were once plowing corn on a farm. I driving the horse and he holding the plow. The horse was lazy, but on one occasion he suddenly became so that I, with my long legs, could scarcely keep pace with him. On reaching the end of the furrow I found an enormous chinfly sunning upon him and knocked him off. My brother asked me what I did that for. I told him I didn't want the old horse bitten in that way. 'Why,' said my brother, 'that's all nonsense. The chinfly bites the horse. Chase has a presidential chinfly biting him. I am not going to knock him off if it will only make the horse move along.'"

Edward Dicey, in the Spectator, gives the impression made by Lincoln outward appearance on the mind of a typical cultivated Englishman. To an Eng. Dicey, Lincoln was a giant, and his figure is grotesque is to convey no adequate impression. Fancy a man 6 feet 4 inch and thin, lank and lean, which, added inches to be always in the way, with large rugged hands which dangled at the end of his long arms, a long, scraggy neck, and a chest too narrow for any human being to breathe for long in the White House. Fancy a head cocoanut-shaped and somewhat too small for such a stature, covered with tough uncombed and uncombable hair, dark hair, that stands out in every direction at once; a face furrowed, furrowed, furrowed, as though it had been scarred by vitriol; a high narrow forehead, with small deep-set eyes, eyelids, eyebrows, lashless, somewhat dreamy eyes, that seemed to pass through you without looking at you, a few irregular blotches of black, bristly hair in the place where beard and whiskers ought to grow; a close set, thin lipped mouth, with two rows of large, white teeth; and a nose and ears which have been taken by mistake from a head of three sizes. Combine this figure, then, in a long, slight, badly fitting suit of black, rusted, creased and puckered up at every salient point of the figure—and every point of this figure is salient—put on large, ill-fitting boots, shoes too long for the long lousy fingers, and a duffy hat, covered to the top with dusty, puffy crape, and you get all this an air of strength, physical as well as moral, and a strange look of dignity coupled with all this grotesqueness, and you will have the impression left upon me by Abraham Lincoln. You would easily say he was a man who, if occasion would still lower as he was not one . . . . . there was in him the spirit of a king, ... and yet jerky incongruous, and of such the president is made. Still there is about him a simplicity lacks of profession, and an evident desire to be courteous to everybody. This is the evidence if not the outward form of high breeding. Lincoln is affectious, too, about his smile, and a sparkle of dry humor about his eye, which relieves the rigour slon of his face and remind one more of the late Dr. Arnold as a schoolboy remembers the face he was, than any other face I can recall to memory.

He is a humorist, not a buffoon. . . . . .

Novel Point of the Law

A unique case involving the old prosecution of "marital coercion" in criminal cases is reported by the London Law Journal in Rex. vs. Mary Ann Owen, in which it appeared that the prisoner and a man named Hughes were jointly indicted for stealing two suits of clothes, from a pawnbroker's shop. The prisoners were undefended, and when the case against them was presented there was no evidence that they were married, but both had been found guilty a detective, who had believed there was some relationship between them, but Hughes objected to this evidence and it was shut out. After there were sentenced it was discovered that they were husband and wife. The female prisoner appealed from conviction, and not only did she fail to raise the point of marital coercion, but she insisted that she didn't know the codefendant in some of the thefts of criminal appeals fell bound to stream her conviction on the ground of the woman's relationship with Hughes, probably for the reason that the woman was undefended and was ignorant of her legal rights.

Just Acting Natural.

We were playing bridge the other night, Mrs. Newlywed and I, and we played a game that was just a little interesting, for I had a good hand and such a thing might be considered to be possible. When he held the position of dummy he whistled softly.

"I'm afraid I made a fool of myself in that hand."

My partner with an evident wish to console me, hastened to assure me.

"Oh, I don't see how you could have done anything else!"

NEARLY 400 LOSE LIVES DURING YEAR

THREE HUNDRED AND SEVENTY-ONE PERSONS KILLED BY ROADS IN MICHIGAN.

STATE COMMISSION REPORT

Steam Roads Were Responsible for the Deaths of 280, and the Electric for 91—Passengers, Employes and Trespassers.

Lansing—According to statistics given out by the Michigan railroad commission 371 persons, including passengers, employes, trespassers and others, were killed by the steam and electric roads in Michigan from June 30, 1911, to June 30, 1912.

The steam roads were responsible for the deaths of 280, and the electric for 91. For the same period 2,838 persons were injured by the steam roads, and 1,761 by the electric.

Those killed on the steam roads are classified as follows: Employes, 74; passengers, 8; trespassers, 152, and other persons, including crossing accidents, etc, 46. The 2,838 injured persons were classified as follows: Employes, 1,183; passengers, 564; trespassers, 130, and other persons, 161.

Of the 91 employes killed on the Pere Marquette 18 credited with 18; M. C., 12; T., 12; L. S. & M. S., 4, and the G. R. & I., 2. Of the 1,183 employes injured on all roads, the Pere Marquette is credited with 293; M. C., 143; G. T., 122; L. S. & M. S., 115, and G. R. & I., 75. The total mileage operated by the steam roads in the state is 9,200. One hundred and eighteen miles of new track was built during the year.

The electric lines killed 91 persons, of which 19 were passengers, 17 employes and 41 other persons including trespassers.

Of the 13 passengers killed on electric lines the D. U. R. is credited with 11 and 224 of the 929 passengers injured. Five of the 17 employes killed were on the D. U. R. and 38 of the 97 employes injured were on the same road.

Place Limit on Campaign Funds.

The student body of the Michigan Agricultural college will hold its annual election of officers February 28, and even the student politicians have caught the spirit of the times and will compel all candidates to limit their campaign expenses to $1.

One lone "bean" is all that will be permitted and the candidates will have to file their expense account of the campaign. Heretofore the campaign for any office has been rather a drain on the candidates owing to the manner of their campaigns having been conducted, cards and other personal capitalization literature being generally the rule.

The annual report of the state board of agriculture has just been printed and copies may be obtained at the M. A. C. bulletin office.

The Michigan Agricultural college students may have a march song of their own as the result of a local musician, has been submitted to the student council for approval.

In the tryouts for the Iowa and the Michigan Agricultural dual debate, eight men were chosen from M. A. C. These are: A. I. Margolis, E. Hart, T. H. Stevens, C. Cutler, E. E. Schweimer, H. M. Van Aukes, R. W. Snyder and L. S. Wells. For the Purdue meet eight additional men will be tried out.

The M. A. C. band, which made a name for itself last fall during the football season, and which is declared by federal officers visiting the college, to be one of the best student musical organizations in the country, has just been equipped with 53 new overcoats at a cost of $645.

D. H. Dry Again Heads Organization.

The annual meeting of the Western Michigan development bureau was held in Traverse City and D. H. Day of Glen Haven was re-elected president.

A. B. White, Grand Rapids, and E. H. Harris, Ellsworth, were elected vice-presidents. B. B. Hendel of Manistee, was re-elected treasurer. It was decided to hold two directors meetings at different points in the county during the coming year.

The following nine new directors were elected: Charles B. Carver, Elk Rapids; C. W. Carman, Grand Rapids; H. W. Davis, Ishpeming; J. M. Dunn, Northport; C. A. Hinsdale, Scottville; O. P. Marvin, Holland; D. R. Hanson, Harbor Springs; Alvin Arbor—retired; E. W. Abbott, Boyne City railroad.

D. of M. Has New Officer.

J. C. Christensen, of Kansas has been appointed assistant secretary in the University of Michigan. He begins his duties.

New Michigan Incorporations.

The Secretary of State of Michigan have filed articles of incorporation with the secretary of the state:

Cadillac Tool company, Detroit, $5,000; John A. Burbank, Albert J. Stockwell, Frank C. Bird.

National Cigar company, Detroit, $20,000; Ralph Hagerty, Leo C. Ford and Jacob Preuss.

J. J. Marshall company, Detroit, $5,000; Anthony J. Marshall, John F. Marshall, Raymond J. Marshall.

Gilbertson Rug-Rug company, Lansing, $10,000.

Harada Telephone company, Harada, Berrien county, $25,000.

Buffalo River Lumber company, Grand Rapids, $50,000.

F. R. Winsley company, increase from $100,000 to $200,000.

Michigan Light company, Bay City, Saginaw, Flint, Pontiac, Jackson, Kalamazoo, Muskegon, $7,000,000; William H. Barthold, New York, 29,997 shares; Frank A. Newton, Carl Wilson and James A. Brown, one share each.

The annual report of the state board of agriculture has just been printed and copies may be obtained at the M. A. C. bulletin office.

The Michigan Agricultural college students may have a march song of their own as the work of a Detroit musician, has been submitted to the student council for approval.

Dr. J. L. Burkhart Takes Office.

Dr. J. L. Burkhart of Grand Rapids took office as secretary of the state board of health, succeeding Dr. Robert L. Doran, who was appointed to the office under the Osborn administration.

Dr. Burkhart, the new secretary, comes from the home town of Governor Ferris, where he first engaged in actual practice of medicine in 1881. He later moved to Grand Rapids and, in 1894, was named city physician by Mayor George Perry. During the Spanish-American war he served as a captain and assistant surgeon in the Michigan National Guard. At the close of the war he was appointed A. A. surgeon and was assigned to the Philippines. There he won promotion to the rank of major, but in 1903 he resigned and again took up his home in Big Rapids.

Dr. Dixon, the retiring secretary, in leaving the position to assume his new duties as superintendent of the new state home for epileptics.

Name Commission for Exhibit.

President R. B. Ferguson of Bay City, head of the Michigan Association of Ad clubs, made on his list of commissioners for the Michigan exhibit at the Panama exhibition to be held at San Francisco, and will submit it to Governor Ferris.

They are H. A. Jones of the Detroit Adcraft club, Gordon Macdward of the Detroit board of commerce, Col. I. Lyon of the Grand Rapids Ad club, Newton M. Hinds of the Grand Rapids board of commerce, W. A. Comstock, Alpena board of commerce; Schuyler C. Collins, Munising board of commerce; A. R. Treanor, Saginaw Ad club and J. H. McCormick, Kalamazoo Ad league.

Mr. Lawrence is ex-officio chairman.

Annual Banking Report Issues.

Public confidence in many Michigan banks seems to be badly shattered, declared Banking Commissioner Dale, if the extent may be known by which individuals, often bank officials and directors, endeavor the commissioner to "save face" with depositors funds.

The banking institution was embodied in the annual report of the banking commissioner to Governor Ferris. He added that the banking would oblige the department to give the public "hell." Bolstered up in managed condition of the body, it was some time before the man was identified, which was done when the watch he carried was shown to his wife.

Day City—John Iverjewa, who is awaiting trial in the March term of court on the charge of murdering his son, attempted suicide by hanging in his cell in the county jail. Iverjewa made a noose of his shirt and, after putting it about his neck, attached it to the top of the cell door. Fellow prisoners called Turnkey Cichoski, who frustrated the attempt.

Grand Rapids—Ard E. Richardson, mayor of Saginaw, will marry Miss Irene Ascenson Incarnate of this city in June. Richardson was elected mayor of Saginaw under the newly instituted commission form of government. He is a graduate of the University of Michigan and a prominent club man. Miss Buckman is a member of a prominent family.

Flint—William, six-year-old son of Christopher Westrum, who submitted to a tracheotomy operation in the hope of saving the boy's life, died unexpectedly at his home. The doctors told the father that a transfusion of blood was the only thing that would save the boy's life and the boy was ebbing rapidly. The father willingly submitted to the operation and his blood was given to the son. But as the doctors had feared, the boy was too weak to rally.

Manistique—Carrie Nelson has an active representative in Manistique. Mrs. Charles Hopping, wife of a prominent hero, Hopping, served with a hammer and went to the saloon of Nelson and administered a $75 raise class window. When asked by the authorities why she did it, she said she had been commanded to by "The Person Above." Her husband is a total abstainer. Her husband said he

How to Detect the Alum Baking Powder

"Which are the alum baking powders; how can I avoid them unless they are named?" asks a housekeeper.

Here is one way: take the can of a low-priced powder in your hand and read the ingredient clause upon the back label. The law requires that if the powder contains alum that fact must be there stated. If you find one of the ingredients named alum, or sulphate of aluminum, you have found an alum baking powder.

There is another and a better way. You don't have to know the names of the alum powders. Use Royal Baking Powder only; that assures you a cream of tartar powder, and the purest and most healthful baking powder beyond question.

In justice court last week, Fred Durkee, convicted of stealing a pair of shoes from the Miller store, got thirty days in the county jail. Jack Cunningham, who appropriated crossmen's butter and a woodpile was given the same dose. Cunningham was charged with a house that he "rented" by breaking in and settling down therein, breaking up the doors and partitions in the upper floor for fuel.

From time immemorial, with those of more southern climes, Northern Michigan has had the reputation of being the coldest place on earth. Gradually this error is being corrected. Last Thursday morning at six o'clock the mercury in Charlevoix registered 20 below zero. An investigation by the Western Union operator revealed the fact that at no point between Charlevoix and Chicago was there a higher register at that hour. At Allegan the temperature stood as exactly 20.

END OF A FAMOUS OLD INN.

Fame and Guests of Washington, It Must Give Way to Progress.

Known as the Washington inn, built 140 years ago George Washington and further including the distinction of being the only structure ever owned by an enlisted soldier of the field president, this time stained pile will soon come down to make way for the new park that is to connect the Union station with the capitol. It stands half a block south of the capitol grounds and years ago was known as the Kennedy Home, and still earlier as the Hillman House. In its present form it is a reconstruction of two houses built by George Washington, and at least the lower portion retains the original walls.

In December, 1799, Washington wrote a letter to William Thornton, an architect, "to proceed in laying in materials for carrying on my buildings in the Federal city." In the same letter, which was written from Mount Vernon, he added: "I saw a building in Philadelphia of about the same front and elevation that one to be given to my two houses, which pleased me. It consisted of two houses united, doors in the centre, a pediment in the roof and dormer windows on each side of it in front, skylights in the rear. It title is not in accordance with rules of architecture, I should be glad to have my two houses assembled in this style."

The architects and builders carried out Washington's request. Washington paid $250 for the two lots on which the houses were built and valued the houses at $15,000.—Argonaut.

THE NEW ARCTIC LAND.

There Is Not Enough Room For it to Be "Four Times as Grassland."

It is scarcely possible that the newly discovered Northern H. Land is "as large as Greenland," for there is no such unknown area on the map. Greenland is about 1,000 miles long and 800 miles wide. The point at which the new land was reached is about sixty miles due north of Cape Cheliuskin and extends as far as surveyed, not more than 200 miles northward. To be as large as Greenland the island would have to stretch east across the pole well over toward Point Barrow.

Nevertheless there is room in the Arctic ocean between the Tolmer peninsula and the Siberian coast for a large island or group of islands, and observations of tidal currents have long indicated that some such land existed. The reported discovery lies almost midway between Franz Joseph Land and the New Siberia Islands. These it can scarcely extend far to the westward, but it may reach eastward and north of coal for some hundreds of miles without entering the region which has been explored by vessels in the sea of Berlin adrift.

The political and economic value of the new land will be nil. Its geographic and oceanographic interest to the scientific world will be great, and it will make to the point map one of the most striking additions this generation has seen.—New York Tribune.

Origin of Life Assists.

Citizen bodies for Russian have been working upon the question of the origin of life. At the meeting of the British association, Dr. Benjamin Moore of Liverpool made the claim that he had proved that strong sunlight or the light from a mercury lamp acting upon certain substances can convert the lifeless into living matter. Sir Oliver Lodge suggested that the bacillus might only succeeding in securing potential living matter, a jugular and chemical vehicle which could be made use of by life. Most of the specialists decline with chemical reactions to delve themselves in just this way, underlying the mysterious of life for life itself.—New York World.

What Smoke Does.

It has been said in defense of soft coal smoke in the city of Pittsburgh that it has less impurities than other cities similarly situated in which there is much less smoke. But the Journal of the American Medical Association points out that this, if true, is offset by the fact that catarrh, pneumonia and other throat and lung diseases are prevalent and that the Pittsburgh cemetery mortality are said to be loaded after a smoky day, presumably by smoke.

It is said that there were more silos erected in the Grand Traverse region last year than in any few years previous. They were built of concrete, cement blocks, various kinds of wood and in different styles, but it was up to C. H. Miller of Miller's Hill, near Maple City, to make an innovation. Instead of building stave ground, he made his like a large well. It is located a few feet from his barn and is 24 feet deep. It is 7½ feet in diameter with an 8-inch wall built right against the sand. Mr Miller put in a 18-inch foundation and the side walls are reinforced. It extends two feet above the ground and a shed was built over it with a block and tackle fastened on a cross beam for raising and lowering the bucket that draws the ensilage. The silo is easier filled and it has never frozen and the material keeps in perfect condition.

DR. A. E. STRIPP

Charlevoix Boy Always Gets to The Front Everywhere

We have received a copy of the Lansing (Mont.) Sentinel announcing the unanimous election of Dr. A. E. Stripp as mayor. Dr. Stripp practiced here for some time, responding to a call from the West. We personally certify that Dr. Stripp is worthy of the distinguished honor. Following is the extract:

"As a leading professional man and public spirited citizen, Dr. Stripp has thoroughly established himself as a part of Laurel and of the adoptive city of his city. He located here six years ago for the practice of medicine, coming from Charlevoix, Michigan, where he had previously practiced. He is a graduate of the medical department of the University of Michigan, has one year's experience as an interne in the university hospital, and was for a year and a half house physician of the Michigan hospital for the insane, at Kalamazoo. Previous to taking graduate medical course he attended the Kalamazoo College, taking an academic course. He thoroughly prepared for his life work and has equipped him fully for every branch of the practice of medicine, and had its full part in the success which has been his position here. As surgeon for the N. P. railway he attends to the company calls in the territory from Billings to Columbus. His office in the Citizens National bank block is extensively provided with special equipment for his work.

"Dr. Stripp's high standing in the community led to his unanimous election last spring to the office of mayor and his election has proven a most wise one. In all things, public spirited and giving liberally of his time and means to the promotion of every enterprise for the advancement of the city, he puts forth his highest efforts in the administration of its affairs, and citizens are assured of continued progress so long as he is at the head of its government. He recently built a fine new home here which is a credit to him and to the city."

Agricultural Education

The machinery by which Western Michigan is being developed is one of the most influential and prosperous sections of the American continent, has been under construction for five years, and is slowly but surely reaching a standard of high efficiency. One of the latest improvements to be added is the invention of the school men at Ludington and Boyne City. It is hard to say which form the best credit belongs, because the improvement has appeared at about the same time in both places. The new piece of machinery is the high school extension idea. For twenty years we have heard of university extension, and the professors connected with the great school of learning are now going to the smaller cities scattered over the country and given university lectures. But this plan is evolved whereby the people in the rural districts are to be reached, are to be given comprehensive and yet understandable information upon the subjects in which they are vitally interested. For several months Supt. Frank E. Miller, of the Ludington Union School, along with his teacher in agriculture, has been visiting the farmers' balls and school houses in the country tributary to Ludington, giving lectures, and conducting general meetings. He has taken with him a Babcock tester and given demonstrations, that the farmers might learn how to determine whether their dairying propositions were profitable or not. These meetings have been successful.

At Boyne City, the idea of helping the people in the rural districts, is being organized on elaborate basis, under the direction of Supt. L. A. Butler, a business is being established for the purpose of furnishing speakers for such grange meetings and other gatherings as may be held in the eastern part of Charlevoix county. According to Supt. Butler's plan, not only will the teacher in agriculture be at the call of the people of the rural sections, but also the teachers of domestic science and manual training, and such others as are conversant with subjects that are of general interest.

One of the big problems that has to be solved in the development of Western Michigan, is that of raising the intellectual standard of the people of the territory. But now that this work has been taken on by the school men, the solving of the problem is a simple affair. Eight of the high schools in Western Michigan today have teachers of agriculture, and without question, as each of these schools, an extension bureau will be established. Furthermore, many of the county school commissioners have caught the spirit of the times, and are the good townsfs which we are hopeful of have using their energies to help along the general program.

CONSIDERABLE ICE

Enormous Ice Harvest—Product of Superior Quality—Ten Days More Work

While it is true that the movement of ice and wood the past two weeks has contributed to the public comfort, it is equally true that the big movement of ice during that period will correspondingly contribute to the comfort of the community next summer when the temperature is hovering around 80 in the shade.

Two thousand cords, or approximately 6,500 tons of ice is what will come out of Pine Lake at Charlevoix when the work is completed. Harry Waldell's crop will be 300 cords. About every other job is done by contract by Stanton & Hammond, and include the Inn, Chicago Club, Booth, O'Neill, Langhever, Baker's Inn, Bostel, Creamery, Cookson, L. S. See and the P. M. R. R. the latter for shipment to Petoskey and Traverse City. The ice source of supply is inexhaustible, but sawdust, an important adjunct, is a problem. The local supply of fresh material is limited and a supply is being hauled in from small country sawmills. L. S. See shipped in three carloads from Dunlap.

The quality of the product is perfect, every cake being twelve or more inches thick and of a beautiful skyblue. Men coming from a field considerable distance from the shore, there is not a disease germ in it. There is practically no sewage emptied into this end of Pine Lake in the winter.

The pay roll on the work last Saturday was approximately $800.

NEW RULING

Of the State Banking Department—Verifying Depositors Balances

During the past year much time has been given to banking and currency legislation. The public in general seems satisfied and business conditions are already reported better.

The State Banking Department has noticed a most praiseworthy wish in for the purpose of safeguarding the funds of all depositors in state banks. Whenever an examination is made by the department of any State Bank the examiners are required by the department to take off a list of names of the depositors, their balances on such date and submit them to the department. Then the department sends a printed form to the depositor asking them to verify the amount of such account.

There is nothing in this that will effect the general or income tax of any depositor. It is for the benefit of the depositor, in being simply in the interest of safe-banking.

In conversation with Cashier Kachow, of the Charlevoix State Savings Bank, he stated that he considered it a very commendable move and that he was heartily in favor of the idea and hope that whenever any inquiries are made by the department of banking concerning this bank that the depositors will answer them promptly.

Chase S Osborn for Governor

We read that there is a concerted movement to make former governor Osborn the republican candidate for governor in the coming fall. Osborn is about now in the Philippines on his way home from the Orient.

We do not know whether or not he realizes the fact, but we believe that he made a mistake when he failed to stand the Roosevelt faction into the political wilderness. For more than a year he has been falling dishes in the deep or lions in the jungle, and Michigan politics has had no place in his participation.

But, provided he behaves himself with reference to the proposition, this paper will support him for governor of Michigan, because we consider him by far the greatest governor Michigan ever had. Intellectually he has no superior in this or any other state, and he knows Michigan from the north shore of Lake Superior to the Indiana line, and from Milwaukee to Saginaw. The gubernatorial record of C. S. Osborn will stand the closest scrutiny. During his term of office there originated more legislation for the benefit of the tax-payers of the state, and a greater impetus given to moral reform than under the administration of any predecessor. He disarmed every opponent who attributed to him selfish political motives by refusing a renomination. His honesty and sincerity cannot be questioned by anyone.

He claims to be a "progressive." The republican party is progressive on every great national issue, and we consider Chase S. Osborn as much a progressive as any other citizen of the commonwealth.

We are for Osborn and we don't care who knows it.

NINE AMERICANS DIE

BRYAN GETS REBEL GUARD

Has Consul Sent Troops Ahead of United States Men Seeking Bodies of Victims—Huerta's Men Stay American Millionaire.

Cumbre, Chihuahua, Feb. 10.—Many charred bones and several metal buttons and buckles from clothing were the only trace discovered of the bodies of the 40 passengers and crew of the train wrecked in the Cumbre tunnel of the Mexico & Northwestern railway Wednesday night.

A rescue party equipped with oxygen helmets so guard them against the effects of the smoke and fumes of the still smoldering wreckage made their way from the south portal of the tunnel, over the wreckage of the burned freight train to the locomotive and forward until the first passenger train on Sunday. Nothing remained of the cars but the metal frames and trucks and it is believed that the bodies of the imprisoned passengers must have been completely destroyed by the intense heat.

The cause of the freight train escaped and placed the blame on Castillo's bandits.

Juarez, Feb. 10.—Nine Americans and 40 or more Mexicans whose fate has been a mystery since the derailment of the Cumbre tunnel by bandits, were officialized. The tragedy is ascribed to Maximo Castillo, bandit leader. A special train carrying 70 American, led by W. J. Fairangi, 50 coffins and a rescue outfit left Juarez for the scene. The rescue train was prepared early in the evening, but was delayed a short time by a telegram from Secretary of State Bryan, who instructed Consul Edwards to see that a soldier guard preceded it so that the Americans aboard might be protected from possible attack by Villa-Carranza bandits who provided 200 rebel troops and these were sent ahead of the rescue party on another train.

The exact number of persons aboard the passenger train is not known. First reports put the number at 25, but a request for 75 coffins was made by a searching party led by Dr. F. C. Harry of Madera.

Railroad men are furious at Castillo's act. Tuesday 22 of his men were captured and executed by rebels. The next day, apparently in revenge, he captured a freight train, put it into the south end of the tunnel about 300 feet and set it on fire. Not one railroad man so warning. The passenger train whose crew was ignorant of danger entered the death trap from the north while the tunnel was burning. When the rescuers reached the scene they too late to save his train or passengers. The mission was headed by J. Pillsbury, superintendent of the railroad were: M. J. Rourke, superintendent of transportation; William H. Harris of Seattle, Wash.; Charles Thacker of Newark, N. J.; Charles Thacker of Belmar, N. J.; Clenden Bishop of Totenville, N. J.; Samuel Werner of New York city; Solomon Plunkit of New York city, and Charles Werner of Kingsmere, N. Y.

Makes No Effort to Give Bail and Declares He Prefers to Go to Jail—Criminal Proceedings Follow Closing of the Bank.

Memphis, Tenn., Feb. 11.—The Mercantile bank closed its doors Monday officers of the institution, acting under supervision of J. L. Hutton, state superintendent of banks and receiver for the bank, are examining the books in an effort to determine the exact amount of the shortage. C. Hunter Raine, president of the bank, admits that the above is responsible for the defalcation.

General indications are, it is said, that the audit will show a deficit in the neighborhood of $100,000.

Mr. Raine has made no effort to give bail, according to attaches of the criminal court. He was arrested on a bench warrant charging embezzlement of $788,804.76 of the bank's funds, and was taken to the county jail.

The bank's books were reported before Judge Palmer by Sheriff Tate and Deputy Sheriff M. W. Palmer. Taking the warrant under which the bankers were arrested and which was executed by Attorney General Rates, the court read the document to Mr. Raine and asked him if he had anything to say.

"I am guilty," replied the banker.

"Mr. Attorney General," continued the court, "what bond do you recommend?"

Before the attorney general could reply the banker interrupted with:

"I prefer to give bond; I want to go to jail."

He was taken to the jail by Deputy Sheriff Palmer.

The bank was officially closed following an order by the board of directors, who subsequently filed a bill in chancery, charging C. Hunter Raine, president of the institution, with having lost, through cotton speculations, $788,804.76 of the bank's funds.

BILL TO TEACH FARMERS

Amendment Permitting Blacks to Spend Own Share of Allotment Beaten.

Washington, Feb. 10.—Without the formality of a roll call the senate passed the Smith-Lever agricultural extension bill on Saturday. The only formal vote taken was on the Jones amendment providing that the appropriation given to a state which has segregate schools for the white and negroes shall be divided in a just and equitable manner between them. The amendment was defeated by a vote of 32 to 28. The bill, which already has passed the house, now will go to the jurisdiction and become law within a couple of weeks. The bill is regarded as of the highest importance not only to the farmers, but to the whole country. It will disseminate among the farmers the information obtained up by the various agricultural colleges and by actual demonstration will teach them how to improve and increase their crops. A fixed appropriation of $10,000 is made for each state.

ANTI-ASIATIC LEGISLATION IS STOPPED BY BRYAN.

Secretary of State Makes Personal Appeal to Raker of California Not to Press Measure.

Washington, Feb. 7.—Secretary of State Bryan prevented all Asiatic exclusion legislation at the present session of congress with a statement to the house immigration committee on Thursday that any agitation of the subject would involve present diplomatic relations between this country and Japan and Mexico.

As an indication that the Japanese and Mexican problems are directly related and extremely acute, the secretary of state pledged members of the committee to secrecy before he started to tell of the Japanese complications and the work of state department to preserve peace. The committee stenographer was excluded from the room.

Mr. Bryan made a personal plea to Representative Raker of California not to press his Japanese exclusion bill at this time because it would embarrass the administration in its efforts to allay anti-American sentiment in Japan.

The committee, through Chairman Burnett, told Mr Bryan action on the anti-Japanese problem certainly would be taken by the present session of congress with a statement to the house immigration committee on Thursday that any agitation of the subject would involve present diplomatic relations between this country and Japan and Mexico.

Perpetual Anecdote.

When Oliver Goldsmith was a youth some young people at a gathering were amusing themselves by trying to see who could make the ugliest face. Many extravagant facial contortions were on display.

At the conclusion, the master of ceremonies stepped up to Goldsmith and said: "Sir, I think you have won the prize."

"Oh!" responded the poet, "I wasn't playing."

This incident also happened to Frederick the Great, Ivan Swift, William the silent, Louis XIV., Mr. Pepys, Ivan the Terrible, Julius Caesar, Socrates and Attila the Hun.—Kansas City Journal.

ITCHING TERRIBLE ON LIMB

R. F. D. No. 3, Clarkfield, Minn.—"My trouble was of long standing. It started with some small red and yellow spots about the size of a pin head on my leg and every morning there was a dry scale on top covering the affected part and when these scales were rolling off the itching was more than I could stand at times. The first year I did not mind it so much as it was only itching very badly at times, but the second year it advanced all around my leg and the itching was terrible. I had to be very careful to keep from scratching the affected part very long. At night time I often happened to scratch the sore in my sleep. Then I had to stand up, get out of bed and wash the blood in the spot was over.

"I bought lots of salves and tried many different kinds of medicine but without any success. I got a cake of Cuticura Soap and a fifty-cent box of Cuticura Ointment and when I had used them one-third of the first bottle of Ointment I felt quite relieved. I bought another cake of the Cuticura Soap for six weeks and the cure was complete." (Signed) Mrs. Anna Gerlich, Nov. 20, 1912.

MONEY MADE IN FRUIT AND STOCK RAISING

Herd of Holsteins in Newaygo County.

By H. J. DANIELS.

More money is being made today in western and southern Michigan from fruit and stock raising than in any other way, is the assertion of many a farmer who spoke from a valuable experience. Go through most of the counties in northwestern Michigan and ascertain what the big holdings of farm lands are done and one will find that they are following fruit growing or stock raising, and in most cases both. There are a score of lumber companies in those counties who are clearing up thousands of their own accord, and invariably they are turning their attention to these lines, and especially to cattle breeding and dairying. Of the various excellent breeds the favorite seem to be Holsteins, Guernseys and Jerseys. In that section there are some famous herds, some very large, but for the most part the herds do not exceed 30 head in size. The territory in question is well watered and the pasturage good, and the climate perfect for raising, except for the housing, is not great, for outdoor lands usually furnish good pasturage.

The owners propose to give enough of their personal time to farming to make it a marvel of perfection and that should be looked upon by the entire north as a model method of copying for years to come. In four years Mosser Michelson and Hansen expect to have a splendidly cultivated estate which will prove an inspiration to others whose faith in the fertility of the soil of Otsego county is not now so strong as it should be.

MICHIGAN'S EGG CROP.

Late census reports show that there are 9,907,039 fowls in this state and about three-fourths of them are egg producers. The annual production is 2,597,361 dozen eggs, with a farm value of $11,734,799. The yearly poultry production is 13,217,357 fowls, valued at $6,191,440. The high price of eggs today has caused an investigation by Peter Radford, lecturer of the National Farmers' union, who says:

"In Michigan we market 60 per cent of our eggs in April, May and June, although the consumption of eggs runs nearly even throughout the whole year. The American farmer today is supplying the middleman the princely sum of $238,500,000 per year for storing and selling his eggs. The average farm price of eggs through the year is 20 cents a dozen, and the average retail price 35 cents. The highest retail quotation at any one time during the year was 75 cents a dozen, and the lowest price 20 cents."

AUTOS IN NORTHERN MICHIGAN.

Automobile dealers in northern Michigan have another bone of contention to contend with, namely, the claim that barring some of the larger cities, where autos are more plentiful, the farmers of Michigan are not buying as many autos as they should. The claim is made that farming communities usually furnish good customers for the automobile.

COUNTY OF MODEL FARMS.

One of the leading counties in the north of Michigan is Missaukee, wherein are to be found some of the best farms in the state, farming is not an experiment there, although the land, as a general thing, is no better than that in most of the other northern counties. That county was for the most part settled by Germans, who are real farmers. They are plodders, but they are conscientious, and the land shows up poor they proceed to make it better. They were able to buy the land at a low price and have constantly been improving it until their farms and farm buildings are the envy of many a farmer who may be engage in general farming and do well with it. Some of them have a specialty or a specialty, a crop that each farmer is clearly of undertaking on light soil. The soil in Missaukee county is not the same as that of the lower

Seam Ripper Attachment For Sewing Machines.

To save valuable time for busy seamstresses a Wichita woman has designed a ripper attachment for sewing machines. Usually when a woman wishes to rip a seam in a garment she searches about for scissors and laboriously cuts the stitches. This attachment consists of an arm that is pivotally fixed to the lower end of the needle bar and has a horizontal cutting blade mounted on it. When not in use this arm can be pushed up and back out of the way. When needed it can be pulled down in a second, and the seamstress can open the seam without having to practically stop work and look for other tools. She can then straightaway sew and rip without any a few inches to go from one mechanism to the other.

Testing the Oven's Heat.

To test the oven have pretty some piece of ordinary white kitchen paper and try the oven by putting in one every eight or ten minutes. If on being put in the paper blackens or even chars up at once the oven is obviously too hot. If on being left in, however, for two minutes or so the paper turns a deep, almost chocolate brown the oven is ready for pastries and small pastries generally. If the paper turns a Havana or other brown, tests, cookies and such like may be put in. If the paper slowly turns a pale yellow brown, the shade of a dead plank, the oven is fit for bread, large meat or game pies, meringues, etc., in short, anything requiring a good round of "roasting" oven, the perfect one for baking. If finally the paper when left in the oven for the prescribed time is barely tinged with a very pale shade of yellow, sponge cakes, meringues and such things need be but little baking and little if any coloring may be safely left in.

Custard dishes or cups may be prevented from cracking when boiling water is poured into them by placing the dish or cup on a damp cloth.

Uses For Worn Towels.

Worn handkerchiefs or Turkish towels can be made into serviceable wash cloths. They can be hemmed by hand or by machine or finished with a row of feather-stitching. Another way to use old towels is to sew two together neatly about the edges and stitch them with strong thread two or three times in the middle and so make the strong towel. Old Turkish towels are those very good floor cloths.

One Crust Cream Apple Pie.

Line a pie tin with rich crust, cover bottom crust with good cooking apples, cover well with sugar, sprinkle cinnamon and bake. Make custard of four. The custard will cover top and spread well with cinnamon when done. The two layers of custard of pure sweet cream, pour over and finish baking till a golden brown. Eat when cold.

A Sewing Hint.

When stitching hems of tucks in children's garments that will likely be lengthened a little later use a finer thread on the holding thread on the spool, also lengthen the stitch a little. Afterwards (in time you) it will be found very easy to rip the hems or other seams where the necessity arises.

Joseph Pulitzer was born in the village of Mako, near Budapest, in Hungary, on April 10, 1847. His father was a Jew, but neither a Christian. At the age of sixteen he emigrated to the United States. He made all without friends, without money, unable to speak a word of English. He enlisted immediately in the First New York (Lincoln) cavalry regiment, a regiment wholly composed of Germans and in which German was the prevailing tongue.

Within a year the war ended, and Pulitzer found himself, in common with hundreds of thousands of others out of employment at a time when employment was most difficult to secure. At this time he was so poor that he was turned away from Delmonico's restaurant in New York, the dark of 50 years with scarcely two nickels. Twenty years later he bought French's hotel, pulled it down and erected in its place the Pulitzer building, at that time one of the largest business buildings in New York where he housed the World.—Allegne Ireland in Metropolitan.

COPYRIGHT 1912, THE BOBBS-MERRILL COMPANY.

SYNOPSIS.

Percy Darrow, a young scientist in search of his father, who left home with Chase McCarthy of New York, an adventurer, is shanghaied aboard the Bucephalus and sent to Alaska to work in a gold mine. He does not take the matter too seriously, however, and, by the exercise of his tact, is position soon ingratiates himself with the Alaska Commercial company. Meanwhile, Chase McCarthy, who escaped from the Bucephalus, is in Seattle, where he is joined by his father, who has been released from the Alaska mine. The next evening McCarthy is warned that unless he leaves at once he will be in grave danger. He and his father, Hallowell, and Jack Warford, a friend, are dining at the Rainier club when a waiter brings him a note from Jack, who is in a cabin on the outskirts of Seattle, and who, it appears, has discovered a plot against McCarthy's life. The note is signed "Ace." Hallowell, who knows the author of the note, is thrown into consternation by the mention of the signature. The dinner party is interrupted by a waiter who announces that a man is waiting to see Hallowell. Hallowell, excusing himself, leaves the dining room. The waiter, who is a Chinaman, leads the way through the kitchen and out into an alley. The Chinaman disappears as he leaves the building. In a minute Hallowell is knocked down by two masked men and robbed. The blow has left him dazed. He does not know what happened to him. He returns to the dining room and tells his companions of the outrage. Under cover of the confusion McCarthy escapes from the CHAPTER X.

The Lifting of the Spell.

The spell lifted. The city broke into a roar. People spoke into each and without motion, as though released from a trance.

"All over!" asked the reporter. He asked it in a loud shout.

"All over," replied Darrow. "You don't need to yell. I'm not deaf."

"I guess that's what everybody else in town is doing," he surmised.

Certainly the excitement was jostled by the sample in the square. Every man was shouting at his neighbor for the understanding limit of his ability. Three echoters, their eyes ablaze, with fanaticism, began to thunder forth dire warnings of the wrath to come—and raised a hearing. We rushed to and fro aimlessly. The gentlemen with the snow-shakers, who looked like the caricatures of the trusts, having at last succeeded in making his imperial wishes known, clambered into a taxicab and sat back, apparently unimpressed. After a moment the driver recovered sufficiently to fall into the habit of obedience, and so drove away.

While the three men watched, a lovely individual with a red face, and hurtling directly at them. If they had not dodged hastily to one side, they would have suffered a collision.

"Is one of the world is at hand?" this man was shouting. "Repent! Repent!"

"That's Larry Mulcahey," remarked the reporter, with a grin. "He keeps bar."

"I'm thirsty," observed Darrow. "Haven't eaten since noon."

"Free lunch," suggested the reporter practically. "You won't be able to get any service anywhere. How about that interview? Got anything to say?"

"Say the busy little bee tonight," said Darrow. "But I'll tell you what I'll do. I'll give you a lead. Be at the Atlas building at not later than nine-tomorrow morning, and stay at least until ten. If you can do it, be on the tenth floor. Hint on the United Wireless man and make him talk. They'll come to me."

"That's afternoon paper stuff—unless it's exclusive," said the reporter hastily.

"If you'll obey my orders the most important part of it will be exclusive," said Darrow.

The reporter eyed him keenly.

"Way?" he asked.

"You're Hallowell, aren't you?" thought I wasn't mistaken. I saw you at work on that Duane Street murder case. Your work was good. Besides, I like the Despatch—and the afternoon papers are too soon for what I want."

Last reason accepted. Colleys received and placed on file.

He entered the door of the hair and advanced on the lunch counter.

CHAPTER XI.

Thirty Seconds More.

At nine o'clock the following morning five men grouped in McCarthy's office, talking earnestly. Darrow and Jack Warford had been the first to arrive. McCarthy did not seem surprised to see them, nor did he greet them with bellicosity.

"Well?" he demanded.

"Call," replied Darrow, sinking gratefully on one corner of the table.

"Simmons gleaned toward McCarthy. "Now about what?" he demanded stolidly.

"Any more messages from our mysterious friend out in the ether to our equally mysterious friend at the Atlas?"

"I don't know what you mean," Darrow surveyed him reflectively.

"This is a pretty big story," he said at last, "and affects a lot of people. If you really haven't leaked—well, he—with a jerk of his head toward McCarthy—must have blown or have a strangle hold on you for fair."

He looked around to see the boss enjoy flood intently on him, smiled pleasantly, and moved to one side. Simmons stepped forward, handed McCarthy a paper, and went out. The boss read the message slowly, and turned a little pale. After a moment or so he surreptitiously drew out his watch. Percy Darrow smiled. He, too, had his watch in his hand.

"Thirty seconds more—about," he remarked pleasantly. The boss looked up startled. "The last thing he saw was the faintly smiling, triumphant face of the young scientist. Then absolute blackness fell on him.

For several seconds astonishment held the inmates of the room chained to their places; and for that space of time no sound broke the deathly stillness. Then Percy Darrow spoke, in his natural voice.

"Sap," Hallowell's voice woke up, a trifle quivering. "I'll stand for anything kind of a dark session, but this particular spook business is getting on my nerves. Are you there, Darrow?"

"Here, I'm here," answered the scientist.

"Well, you can explain that phenomenon later."

"That," drawled Darrow, a slight note of bitter in his voice, "was that extraordinary upheaval of natural forces I told you to tether McCarthy going away from here—hastily."

Jack chuckled.

"Hit me on the way out," remarked that young man. "I'll testify he was a solid spook."

The reporter was methodically striking match after match, but without result. After a moment the acrid smell of burning wooden rods in the air.

"Are you dropping those matches?" asked Darrow.

"Why, they're no good."

"Well, they're good enough to burn holes in McCarthy's rugs. Stamp around a little to put them out; and open."

"What next; and how long?" asked Jack. "What is it? Have we gone blind, or is it a total eclipse, or what?"

"I don't know how long," came back Darrow's voice calm. "Next we will get out of the building. I want to make some observations. Get hold of my hand; we'll have to grope our way out."

"If we could only get a light," muttered Hallowell.

"You can't," stated Darrow.

They felt their way down the ten flights of stairs like blind men. A few inmates of the building they jostled or passed, groped up on the way.

In the lower corridors Darrow halt-ed.

"Here's another thing," said he. "If I'm right, we should run out of this that eleven feet beyond the last elevator cage."

He felt his way along the grill, made four paces forward, and uttered a little cry of satisfaction. The rest was followed him blindly. As though stepping from one room to another they emerged into glaring daylight!

Both involuntarily looked back. The darkness lay there like a curtain, just inside the outer walls of the building. Already a crowd had gathered to observe this new and strange phenomenon of the now celebrated Atlas building. It was a curious and a fascinating crowd, but not a sensitive, as it had been at the first manifestations of this freakish upset of natural forces.

A man observing the flight of an airplane for the first times leaves his office at a stringness inside of a few minutes; and yet flying has been since the days of Icarus considered one of the impossible achievements. So the general public of Manhattan were soon sufficiently accustomed to novelties of form in the affairs of the physical world. The frivolous majority, having discovered nothing to be apprehended from the phenomena save a few hours' helplessness of a sort, and much to be gained through the savor of novelty, were inclined to an amused or be-mitated attitude, depending on the extent to which its occupations were interfered with. The minority—look to religious meetings and interpretations.

Darrow's exit, and that of his companions, were greeted uproariously.

"Keep on the sidewalk, or you'll mange one, at the blinking men.

Several of the crowd, pending the usual arrival of the police to clear the corridor, had ventured through the wide portals, and were experimenting with this strange palpable quality of darkness. One or two popped inside the curtain, but emerged quickly, looking a little scared.

A bright youth made the discovery that if one lighted a match and stopped within the blackness, the match was immediately extinguished, but that upon emerging into daylight the flame came up again. Some one happened along with a plumber's gasoline torch. Immediately this was lighted and the experiment repeated. The bearer of the torch, astonished at the instant extinguishment of the flame, felt with his hand to see what could be the matter. Instantly he dropped a pelp of pain, and fingered outside, displaying a badly burned palm.

"There wasn't no flame! I swear it!" he explained excitedly, "but she burned, just the same!" He rushed away from one to another displaying his injured palm to whoever would look.

Darrow paid little attention to this gathering crowd. First of all, he scanned a paper he held in his hand then plunged back again into the darkness.

"Hell to back," the reporter decided finally, "and he's the man to the ether."

While waiting, he proceeded to pick up what information he could from the bystanders. It seemed that the first intimation of anything wrong was followed very shortly by the emergence of McCarthy, disheveled, hatless, starting, gasping. The boss had stumbled into the air, it hesitated, then started south on a run. Nothing could induce it stop him, he turned a corner and disappeared. The excitement at the Atlas Building had distracted attention from him. Jack Warford, wondered at his gesting rattled and running away. The few tenants remaining in the building had scambled forth, vowing never to return to such a—assorted adjectives—building. That was all there seemed to be to say.

In the meantime the crowd had increased from a few hundred to thousands. Police appeared. The corridors were cleared of all but a few. Mechanics were summoned from all quarters

Northern Michigan

There is now but one newspaper at Ontonagon, the Gulliver has taken over the Inter-Lake. Petoskey, Boyne City and Traverse City have but one newspaper per office each, and the only places with two between Manistee and the Straits are Elk Rapids, Charlevoix, East Jordan and Mancelona.

Boyne City Special: What shall become of the Boyne Home property since the home has been closed may be solved by the local Eagle lodge, who are contemplating the erection of a home here. The home, which was originally built to take care of the resort trade, is an ideal location overlooking Lake Lake and close to the city, easily accessible by boat or 'bus. The growing need of summer resort accommodation will thus be taken care of.

Petoskey News: That Petoskey has excellent chances of landing a base ball team in the Michigan state league was the opinion expressed here today by Ira Bidwell of Kansas City, who has some reputation as a player and manager. Mr. Bidwell expects to purchase one of the six franchises and will manage a team in the league. He has several cities in mind, but declares Petoskey to be his prospect, he has encountered. Local merchants promise financial encouragement, and it appears a sufficient group can be raised. The park is a question, as the old diamond has fallen to disuse. As regards location facilities and population, Petoskey is an ideal city for a team in the league, according to Mr. Bidwell and he is anxious to locate here.

County Fair Directors Hold Annual Meeting

It takes more than thirty-five below zero to quench the ardor of our County Fair directors, which was proved by the fact that every member of the official board was present at the annual meeting held at the Russell House, East Jordan Feb. 12th inst.

In view of the many suggestions offered by the citizens of the county for the improvement of the fair, the energies of the fair officials were vigorously renewed to make our 1914 fair a decided improvement over all previous exhibitions particularly with regard to attractions amusing and instructive. It was thought best not to parade a high priced attraction of short duration, but rather to arrange a varied and continuous program running throughout the fair, to interest and delight its patrons. Every day of the fair will be made to claim an interest peculiar to itself. While public entertainment will be given special attention this season, yet every department of the fair will be given careful attention with the object of securing increased satisfaction to both exhibitor and the general public.

President H. I. Olney was empowered to select a board committee within 30 days from date, which fact will a satisfied convenience and comfort to all interested in the races which will be made for the same liberal purses offered last year.

To increase premiums, one hundred dollars was appropriated for apportionment between divisions, cattle, swine, and sheep, and suitable funds will be placed in the stalls, which will greatly add to the comfort and appearance of the exhibits. Competent judges will be secured and every possible effort will be made to prove the best lack of interest shown in these divisions and the finest exhibitions of live stock ever seen in northern Michigan should result.

The premiums offered in the fancy work departments will be thoroughly revised by its superintendent and submitted to the secretary before May 1st. All interested in this division who have any suggestions to offer should confer with the superintendent at once. A number of valuable special prizes will be offered the best exhibit of certain farm products.

All Granges will be required to have every portion of their exhibits in place on the first day of the fair.

The liberal plan of giving complimentary passes to all school children in the county who are neat winners or tardy during the spring term of school will be continued and the program for "School Day," Thursday, Sept. 10th, will be especially interesting to the great crowds that will attend. The usefulness of the fair as an educational factor through co-operation with the public schools will be encouraged in every way possible. Meritorious school work not listed will be awarded discretionary premiums, and a more systematic method will be employed in the arrangement of the exhibits which will enhance the attractiveness of this important display.

A "Orange Day" not only in name, but in fact, will be conducted under the auspices of Charlevoix County Grange and all patrons of husbandry attend in this section may rest assured that he will be more than repaid for their effort to attend on that day.

The executive committee for the fair association will meet occasionally between now and the dates of our next fair, September 8, 9, 10, 11, 1914, to complete details, and inaugurate new plans for the betterment of the event. All who have suggestions to offer should communicate them to the President, Secretary or some member of that committee, to receive prompt attention.

The following officers were chosen for 1914:

President—Herbert L. Olney, East Jordan.

Vice-President—Horace B. Hipp, East Jordan.

General Superintendent—E. B. Ward, Charlevoix.

Secretary—R. A. Brintnall, East Jordan.

Treasurer—Martin Rohling, East Jordan.

Executive Committee—E. B. Ward, H. B. Hipp, Robert Price.

Finance Committee—Richard Lewis, John A. Newville, Richard Shipton.

Superintendents:

Division A. Nat Burns, Charlevoix.
Division B. Richard Shipton, Charlevoix.
Division C. Martin Staley, East Jordan.
Division D. Martin Staley, East Jordan.
Division E. Robert Price, East Jordan.
Division F. Robert Price, East Jordan.
Division G. Herman Barber, Boyne City.
Division H. John A. Newville, Boyne City.
Division I. Mrs. E. B. Ward, Charlevoix.
Division J. Mrs. Martin Rohling, East Jordan.
Division K. Mrs. E. B. Ward.
Division L. E. B. Ward.
Division M. J. H. Milford, East Jordan.

The finance committee's report accorded with the secretary's financial statement shown a balance on hand of $201.88.

All mail for the North Manitou island is being sent there on a round-about route. It goes to the South Manitou via Glen Haven, there being an open channel between these points and is then dropped to its destination from the south island.

The champion potato grower in Antrim county is Henry DeVries, who lives near Central Lake. He is the winner of the first Spaulding sweepstakes offered by A. Goldfarb. On his one eighth acre Henry, who is but 13 years of age, raised 38.5 bushels, equivalent to 308.4 bushels to the acre.

While Harry Church was cutting feed in Irwin Church's barn northwest of Central Lake, Tuesday afternoon, his gasoline engine exploded, severely injuring him and setting fire to the barn, which was totally destroyed. Mr. Church was burned terribly about the face, and a piece of basket from the exploding engine struck him in the eye. Mr. Lewis was called and removed it, and it is hoped that the sight will be saved.

Boyne Citizen: Our correspondent at Boy Falls writes us that the fishing industry are lately causing much loss to the farmers. The early part of the week large numbers went one better than chicken stealing and killed a fine heifer belonging to Calvin Sherrill. When the timerous skulking foxes become bold enough to attack cattle it might be worthwhile should interested in the trapper and hunter. A bounty is paid on fox and the skin will bring a neat sum besides.

Mrs. C. R. Hollis, at Boyne City, is in a serious condition and may die as a result of being exposed to the cold when her husband carried her from her bed to the home of a neighbor, to save her from fire which destroyed their home. Mrs. Hollis was ill and her husband was about to retire after making her cozy for the night, when he discovered smoke in the bedroom. Investigation showed the house was in the grip of fire and Hollis seized his wife and hurried out into the cold with her. She had nothing on but her night robes.

Petoskey News: The financial difficulties of the Boyne City, Gaylord & Alpena railroad, Michigan Trust Co. of Grand Rapids, receiver, may be so adjusted that it will be possible to proceed with construction work in the spring and join the Alpena and Gaylord end. Contracts could be let from Gaylord, possibly according to H. M. Reeder, general superintendent of the road, who was in the city this morning. Mr. Reeder is making all preparations to have construction work as soon as the weather will permit.

Petoskey News: Early Saturday evening Voight Troupe and Floyd Jackman were spinning a yarn on the same distance out on the bay, when the wind increased and the storm became so blinding the boys lost their way and wandered about until far into the night. Fortunately when they were almost chilled through they came upon a lone shanty which they entered and remained until daylight, when they found their way back to shore and their homes, but it was not until one of the boys had frozen his ear and both the other ears and face. The experience was an alarming one and might easily have resulted fatally.

The annual convention of the Northern Michigan branch of the National Beekeepers association will be held in Petoskey, Tuesday and Wednesday, March 10 and 11. Bee men from all over northern and northwestern Michigan are expected to be present at the meeting. Upon the suggestion of Mrs. Lincoln, however, the highest honor in attendance will be a beautiful song, Mrs. Lincoln playing the accompaniment. Miss Edith Longfellow gave a charming recitation the "Wooing" part of Hiawatha, characteristic of Mr. Lincoln equal to every occasion, little witticisms and fun-ny stories were enjoyed throughout the evening. The famous Mr. Edison spoke briefly of his work, and delighted the audience with a fine operatic selection through his graphophone.

Mr. Lowell also rose to the occasion with a few pleasing words, introducing his daughter who gave a charming vocal selection. Gen. Sherman's presence was an imposing one and his fine reminiscences of the war were greatly appreciated. Susan B. Anthony held the attention of all with her ready conversing talk on "Woman Suffrage." Charles Dickens, in truth, gave a short description of two of his famous characters from "Martin Chuzzlewit" "Sairy Gamp" and "Dickey Prey," who were to speak for him.

A table scene at "Mary Gamp's" was presented with "Mosey Prey" the reliable visitor, called forth much merriment. An evening with such celebrities was a veritable indeed in every way, and the delicious three-course luncheon served by the Eastern Star ladies on small tables with tiny flags as a center decoration, perfected the closing of a delightful evening.

THE PERE MARQUETTE

The Stockholders Will Meet in Detroit to Head Off Cutting Up of System

Energetic steps are being taken, it is said, to save the Pere Marquette railroad from dissolution into its component parts. Not only will the United States court be asked to authorize the issuance of a new series of receivers' certificates in an amount sufficient to care for $12,614,000 of indebtedness, but the holders of the securities on which interest cannot be paid will be asked to withhold foreclosure proceedings that might result in dissolution of the system.

A meeting of the stockholders of the whole system is being called to be held in Detroit on Monday, March 9th. Although the road is in the hands of Receivers Blair, Waters and Fallon, the stockholders will it is predicted, elect a board of directors for the system at the meeting. The board of directors will, it is said, be composed largely of Michigan men. The directors will act in an advisory capacity, it is planned, aiding the receivers in putting the road on a paying basis.

A Manifest Case of Witlessness

There is a congressional committee at Calumet "investigating" the mining strike. In the first place, they have no business there, and were practically informed by the fair-minded people of Michigan. Michigan can attend to its own internal affairs.

But the so-called investigation has gone just far enough to demonstrate the fact that it is a farce. Three members of congress have an eye single to the political interests of themselves in their particular district, and they must take care of the labor vote. Just as all there is of it.

"Evidence" is pouring in upon the congressional solons charging the officers of the Michigan National Guard with assaulting women and children, and every word of it is manufactured as the instance of the Western Federation of Miners. Judge Advocate Major Pepper is there in the interests of the guard, and he was there during the most of the trouble. The writer of this had a desk alongside of Major Pepper at Calumet, and it was a part of Major Pepper's work to take cognizance of breaches military discipline. No case of the labor reported came to him or the general in command.

The labor vote in several congressional districts must be looked after, and the congressional committee is "onto its job." Time far, all through the proceedings there is a manifest disregard of truth or justice.

It is a bid for the labor vote, and in the interest of the Western Federation of Miners, which is alone responsible for the whole trouble, and we know whereof we speak.

BURNED TO DEATH

Father Loses Life in Mistaken Effort to Save Children From Burning Home

At Ellsworth, Sunday evening, Henry Vanderark, aged 35, was burned to death in the destruction of his home. His little children had been put to bed, and the parents went to visit a neighbor. In about an hour he was informed that his home was burning.

When the fire was discovered some of the neighbors went in and rescued the children. Mr. Vanderark, not knowing this, rushed into the house, which was enveloped in flames, and, the roof falling in, he was burned to a crisp, his head, arms and legs being burned to ashes.

Deceased was formerly a barber in Ellsworth, but for some time had been a cobbler and furniture mender. He was well thought of in the community.

Common Counsel

At the Council meeting Monday night it was voted to buy a quantity of sand and maccadam asphalt binder for use on the North Michigan pavement extension.

A petition was presented asking that crippies and street vendors be prohibited from plying their trade on the streets. Referred to license officer.

D. F. Meech was appointed city assessor for the ensuing year, with instructions to revise the tax roll at an expense not to exceed of $15.

J. J. Caskin in the first ward and Capt. Wm. Finnegan in the second were appointed election inspectors to fill vacancies.

Boyne City Journal: Yesterday the two-year old son, Herbert, of Epp Hubbell, 413 Groveland street, secured a quantity of pills which he ate, dying soon afterwards. The pills, which had been prescribed for an adult stomach trouble were left on a stand in the parents' room and the child thinking it candy ate several before being apprehended. He showed no signs of being sick at the time and nothing was thought of the matter until about an hour later he was taken with convulsions. Medical aid was summoned at once but before a physician could reach his bedside, death relieved the little sufferer, coming to him about 5:30. This is the second accident of this same kind in the past few weeks, the South baby of under two years meeting death the same way by strychnine.

DISASTROUS PETOSKEY FIRE

Fochtman's Large Department Store Entirely Destroyed

Fochtman's department store at Petoskey, the largest of its kind in the northern part of the state, was entirely destroyed by fire Monday forenoon. The $100,000 stock was completely burned and the handsome structure is practically a total loss. The fire started shortly after ten o'clock in the furnace room, supposedly from a hot ember and a coal dropped out of the furnace door.

But for a frozen hydrant the fire could have been confined to the basement.

Good Time for Retrenchment

We do not believe any political coalition is given the proposition by reason of the impending city election, but we believe the next municipal administration of whatever political composition it may be, should learn to spell "retrenchment" both forward and backward.

For some years Charlevoix has been retiling at a very rapid pace in the matter of improvements, and it is a manifest fact that some money has been wasted. Of course the other side of the ledger shows much far in advance of other towns of our size in this section. But let us have a holiday in the handicap but in the responsibilities of pioneer life. Women during the Civil War practically carried on the work of the country, north as well as south, in the fields and in the factories. Julia Ward Howe, author of "The Battle Hymn of the Republic," and Harriet Beecher Stowe, who wrote "Uncle Tom's Cabin," helped to free four million slaves, and their writings rank with the world's masterpieces in imaginative literature. Mary Lyon, founder of Mt. Holyoke, the first college for women, proved to the world that girls and minds capable of being educated beyond reading and writing.

Clara Barton's memory deserves greater honor than the name of any general, north or south. She also combined science and heart when she made the Red Cross inclined of bayonets. Wherever war or pestilence, fire or flood brought suffering to the human race Clara Barton and her Red Cross army hastened to the work of relief. Who can estimate the mighty work accomplished by Frances E. Willard?

In years to come when this nation is finally freed from the bondage of the liquor traffic, countless millions will rise up and call her blessed. Women living today are carrying forward the work for the good of humanity that Frances Willard began. Julia C. Lathrop, in charge of the Child's Welfare Bureau, is working to save the 300,000 babies who each year give up the unequal struggle against impure water, dirt and disease. Jane Addams, perhaps the leading woman in America today, large of heart and great of mind, philanthropist and lawgiver, has created in the heart of the slum district of Chicago an oasis of beauty and of law abiding order. And the influence of women for good is ever growing stronger and deeper.

There is not an occupation today in which women are not engaged. As lawyer, doctor, nurse, minister, missionary, teacher, author, police matron, social worker, the controlling motive seems to be the protection of child life and the safe guarding of the home.

Roland A. Nichols

In commencing the lecture of Roland A. Nichols to the citizens of Charlevoix, the natural questions arise,—"Who is this Roland A. Nichols?" "What is he good?" "Will he please the people?" Mr. Nichols was reared on a farm, on the Western Reserve, in Ohio, subject to a higher education and for eleven years worked his way to his coveted college.

For ten years he was minister in Worcester, Mass., and Chicago, in the latter city, serving as pastor of The Jackson Boulevard Christian Church, and of the Union Church at The People's Institute. For six years he has divided his time between the evangelistic field and the lecture platform. He is no theorist. By his contact with humanity and his experience in the business world, he knows men and things. His has been a fruitful ministry—over five thousand converts and many logs and girls inspired to larger, nobler endeavor.

It will readily be seen that Roland A. Nichols is abundantly endowed by nature, training and experience for his work on the lecture platform. While there is a deep, inspirational purpose running through all his lectures, yet he is fully aware that the element of entertainment must be so blended, that while it serves to illumine his subject, the audience is kept alert and expectant. His humor is natural and irresistible—his impersonations, true to life—are narrative and dramatic powers, thrilling—his voice deep and resonant.

In his lecture, "The Man Worth While," he illustrates his theme, he recites several of his original, character poems. He is frequently asked "Is which one of Riley's books can I find that selection?" When desired, he confesses his ignorance by giving a recital of a few of these original poems.

Interesting Paper Read at a Recent Meeting by Normal Principal

At the last meeting of the W. C. T. U. the topic, "The Influence of Women Upon the Destiny of our Country" was discussed by Miss Jessie M. Himes.

She spoke of the fact that girls as well as boys stood on equal footing ability, courage and endurance; that girls also as well as boys had "Day Dreams," and that lecturers and other public speakers often ignored the fact that great things had been accomplished by women in our past history and that their lives and noble deeds could well be held up before the young girls of the present generation as an inspiration and an example. The self-sacrifice of the Pilgrim Forefathers was as great as that of the forefathers of the broad minded mother of Mrs. Anne Hutchinson who helped to lay the foundations of religious toleration in the New World should be commemorated together with the name of Roger Williams, for together they founded Rhode Island.

The mother of Washington was not only a good and devoted mother, but a business woman, a successful farmer, and possessed marked executive ability. Women in the "good old days" did not live lives of sheltered ease in the home; they shared not only the hardships but in the responsibilities of pioneer life. Women during the Civil War practically carried on the work of the country, north as well as south, in the fields and in the factories. Julia Ward Howe, author of "The Battle Hymn of the Republic," and Harriet Beecher Stowe, who wrote "Uncle Tom's Cabin," helped to free four million slaves, and their writings rank with the world's masterpieces in imaginative literature. SYNOPSIS.

Percy Darrow, a young scientist in London, is "called" by Mr. Hallowell, of New York. Mr. Hallowell has discovered a dangerous strange underlying him in the elevator shaft of his house. He offers Darrow a fabulous salary if he will elevator to city for a position with for Alaska. Darrow shaded his eyes with one hand and proceeded as though nothing had happened.

"Here are the exclusive points of your story," he said to Hallowell, handing a sheaf of yellow wireless forms. "I got them in McCarthy's office. I know the operator. He's the known widder of the mysterious power to his enemy, the political boss. There will be plenty who will conclude these messages to be the result of fanaticism, after the fact; that is to say, they will continue some wireless amateur has taken advantage of natural phenomena and, by claiming himself the author of them, has at compelled to use them again his enemy. Of course, the answer to that is that if the Unknown—let's call him Mr. Unknown X—did not cause these strange things, he at least knew enough about them to predict them accurately.

"You just leave that to me," interrupted Hallowell under his breath. "The scientific world will probably be joined by somebody for the evening papers. Now, I'm better engineering Mr. Unknown X's connection with McCarthy.

"Say, my friend," said Hallowell genuinely, "do you think I'm a reporter for the Scientific American or a newspaper?"

"McCarthy, Mr. Hallowell is at an end. All three ross. The operator was busy reading away at his Lodge-Muirhead machine.

"What next?" asked Jack.

"Well, depends on two things."

"Whether or not McCarthy takes the Celtic." Interposed Hallowell quickly.

"And whether Monsieur X will be satisfied with his mere disappearance. If he does not take the Celtic," supposed Darrow, "in any case, we've got to find him. He's unbalanced; he possesses an immense and disconcerting and dangerous power; he is becoming possessed of a mania des grandeurs. You remember the phrasing of his last message: 'I am your lord and master, and my wrath shall be visited on you. Bigoss!' That is the language of exaltation. Exaltation is not far short of irresponsible raving.

"What possible clue—" began Jack Warford, blankly.

"When a man is somewhere out in the other there is no clue," replied Darrow.

"Then how on earth can you hope to find him?"

"By the exercise of pure reason," said Darrow calmly.

CHAPTER XIII.

Darrow's Challenge.

With a final waving to Simmons as to the dissemination of any information without consulting him, Darrow left the room. Hallowell listened to his advice with unmixed satisfaction. The afternoon papers would not be able to get at his source of information. The reporter felt a slight wonder as to how Darrow had managed his ascendency over the operator. As to curiosity as to that met with a shake of the head.

"I may have to ask your help in that later," was his only reply.

At the corner, after pushing through a curious crowd, the men separated. Hallowell started for the wharf, Jack Warford for home—at Darrow's request. The scientist returned to his own apartments were he locked himself in and sat for five hours cross legged on a divan, staring straight ahead of him, doing nothing. At the end of that time he cautiously stretched his legs, shrugged, rose, and looked into the mirror.

"I guess you're hungry," he remarked to the image therein.

It was now near 7 o'clock when Percy Darrow wandered out, ate a leisurely meal at the nearest restaurant, and sauntered up the avenue. He paused at a news stand to buy an afternoon paper, glanced at the head lines and a portion of the text, and smiled sweetly to himself. Then he bought himself by means of a bus to the Warford residence.

Helen was at home and in the library. With her was Professor Eldridge. The men greeted each other formally. After a moment of general conversation Darrow produced the newspaper.

"I see you have your theories in print," he drawled. "Very interesting. I didn't know you'd undertaken grammar-school physics instruction.

"I know I'm going to be grateful for any sort of instruction—from anybody," interposed Helen. "I'm all in the dark."

"Take the Atlas Building," Darrow smiled at her. "Well, here's a very good exposition in words of one syllable. I'll leave you the paper. Professor, what have you concluded as to the cause?"

"They are yet to be determined."

"Pardon me," drawled Darrow, "they have been determined—or at least their controlling power.

"In what way, may I ask?" inquired Professor Eldridge formally.

"Very simply. By the exercise of a little reason. I am going to tell you, because I want you to start fairly with me, and because you'll know all about it in the morning, anyway."

"Your idea—the one you told us yesterday—is to be published?" cried Helen, leaning forward with interest.

"The basis of it will be," replied Darrow. "Now—be forced to Eldridge—listen carefully! I'm not going to indulge in many explanations. Mr. McCarthy, political boss of this city, has made a personal enemy of a self-created or at least unbalanced man, who has in some way gained a limited power over etheric and other vibrations. This power Monsieur X—as I call him—the Unknown—has employed in fantastic manifestations designed solely for the purpose of frightening his enemy into leaving the country.

Eldridge was listening with the servant attention, his cold gray eyes glittering frostily behind their lenses.

"You support your hypothesis by experiment," he demanded calmly.

"Why wireless messages sent from nowhere X to McCarthy, in which he predicts or appoints in advance the exact hour at which these manifestations take place?

"In advance, I understand you to say?"

"Precisely."

"That would be as conclusive for mere prophetic ability as for power over the phenomena."

"In formal logic, not in common sense."

Eldridge reflected a moment further.

"You were positively insulting!" she cried, "and in my house! How could you!"

"Helen," said Darrow, facing her squarely, "I maintained only all the outer forms of politeness. That is as far as I will go anywhere with that Idea. My manhood" to him it quite just; he has no humanity.

"What do you mean? Why are you so bitter?" asked Helen, a little subdued in her anger by the young man's evident earnestness.

"You never knew Doctor Schermerhorn, do you, Helen?" he asked.

"The funny little old German? Indeed, I did! He was a dear!"

"He was one of the greatest scientists living—and he was a dear! When goes far to explain him—a gentle, wise, child-like, old man—with imagination and a Heavenly-sent soul. He picked me up as a boy, and was a father to me. I was his scientific assistant until he was killed, murdered by the twisted hand of pirates. Life passes, and that is long ago."

He fell silent a moment, and the girl looked on this unprompted betrayal of feeling with eyes at once parted in sympathetic

"Doctor Schermerhorn," went on Darrow in his usual faintly ironical, faintly cynical tone, "worked off and on for five years on a certain purely scientific discovery, the nature of which you would not understand. In consequence, he left the essentials in this Eldridge. Doctor Schermerhorn fell sick of a passing illness. When he recovered, the discovery had been completed and given to the scientific world.

"Oh!" cried Helen. "What a trick!"

"Yes, it was a trick. The discovery was purely theoretic and brought no particular fame or money to Eldridge. It was, as he modestly put it, and as the doctor himself looked at it, merely carrying common knowledge to a conclusion. Perhaps it was; but I never engage Eldridge to do anything the old man of the little satisfaction of the final proof. It is indicative of the whole man. He has no humanity, and therefore imagination."

"Still, I wish you wouldn't be quite so bitter when I'm around," pleaded Helen. "Doesn't I love your feeling for dear old Doctor Schermerhorn.

"I wish you could arrange to get out of town for a little while," urged Darrow. "Isn't there some one you can visit?"

"Do you mean there is danger?"

"There is the potentiality of danger," Darrow amended. "I am almost confident. If pure reason can be relied on, that when the time comes I can avert the danger."

"Almost—" said Helen.

"I say have missed one of the elements of the case—though I do not think so. I can be practically certain when I telephone a man I know—or see the morning paper."

"Telephone now, then. But why when the time comes?" Why not now?"

"Darrow arose to go to the telephone in the public booth.

"Let Eldridge do his best. He has always underestimated me. I desire that this house should, if possible, be safe to London. Hudson, the maker of Sir Joshua Reynolds, is said to have lived here, and M. so. Reynolds has been several times to visit him (1749 to 1758).

"The names of Richard Brinsley Sheridan, James Hoole, Kitty Clive and many other famous people are also linked with the house, although there must be a good deal of guesswork connected with some of these.

LITTLE GIRL KILLS A BEAR

Attacked by Beast She Stops Its Charge With Rifle Bullets in Head.

Everett, Wash.—Ivy Thompson, fifteen-year-old Everett girl, resisted a Theodore rifle from a sporting goods store and within a few hours had shot and killed a black bear within the city limits. The animal weighed, dressed, 290 pounds.

The girl was dressed dire the bear was charging her. Miss Thompson planted two bullets in the animal's head and it dropped. Brute to a dead stop at her feet.

Frightened by her father, her uncle and her brother, the girl started out hunting bears. Her search of a wilderd. Ivy, their dog, started out on a hot trail. They thought he was after a bear. Ivy was the girl who trood a black bear. The animal hid in the hollow of a tree, but the pup smoked the bear out. Ivy let fly a bullet behind the animal's ear. She missed and the bear charged her.

The girl did not lose her nerve, but hurriedly worked the rifle. Twice she fired again, this time hitting Brute in the head. Another bullet killed the animal.

Burglars Make Merry.

Ridgewood, N. J.—Burglars who visited W. C. Ansonia home made a fire in the kitchen range, cooked food, ate drank and were merry. They left only silverware and tied the watchdog to the leg of a table when they departed.

Down Youngsters Are at Their Best.

Boston.—Girls and boys are at their best—mentally and physically—at 10 a. m., any day in January or February, according to Dr. Frank Lakey of the English high school. At 4 p. m., they are at their worst, says Lakey.

Court Barred Stage Kissing.

Bayonne, N. J.—No stage kissing here. Kiss too prosaic! said Mayor Mars to Sherman Korn, whom disagreement with his wife had been patched up by the mayor. After the second kiss, the case was dismissed.

Quarrels With Wife, Whipped.

Ashland, Ky.—Because his wife Cavanaugh became quarrelsome with his wife she fled to the Rev. John Lynch, who conceived her appeal for help. As a result Cavanaugh received blackened eyes and four fractured ribs.

Vagrant Rescues the Flag.

Newark, N. J.—James Mahoney arrested on a vagrancy charge, was his freedom when he climbed the lofty flagstaff on the police station and rescued the Stars and Stripes from the storm complicated on the top.

BOSWELL'S HOME IN DANGER

One of Few Examples of Domestic Architecture of Inigo Jones Likely Soon to Be Torn Down.

London.—London is in danger of losing one of the very few examples she has left of the domestic architecture of Inigo Jones, or, at any rate, of his school. This is the beautiful plastered black house now numbered 52 and 53 in Great Queen street and next to the headquarters of the Free Masons. The house, the home of that building, No. 56, is built over the archway leading into Queen's yard, and is the occupation of a firm of pencil manufacturers. The remainder and larger part of the house is made particularly interesting by the fact that, according to the Daily Telegraph, it was in it, into the wall, James Boswell, the biographer of Dr. Johnson, once lived there. Indeed, it is as Boswell's house that most people recognize this beautiful building.

The construction of Great Queen street was begun in 1685, and there were 15 houses erected on the south side before 1695. Thus come Inigo Jones, or his pupil Webbe, to finish this side which was originally intended to form one of the sides of a square. Nos. 55 and 56 are all that remain of this typical work of the Inigo Jones period. They were built between 1683 and 1685.

The street in its day was considered very grand, and must have been very beautiful, too, to judge by these fragments which remain, and which are now, it would seem, threatened with destruction.

In addition to the Boswell and the Inigo Jones connections there are other reasons why it would be desirable that this house should, if possible, be saved to London. Hudson, the maker of Sir Joshua Reynolds, is said to have lived here, and M. so. Reynolds has been several times to visit him (1749 to 1758).

The names of Richard Brinsley Sheridan, James Hoole, Kitty Clive and many other famous people are also linked with the house, although there must be a good deal of guesswork connected with some of these.

WOMAN WOULD NOT GIVE UP

Though Sicked Suffering: At Last Found Help in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Richmond, Va.— "When I started taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I was in dreadfully rundown state of health, had internal troubles, and was so cross and irritable I dreaded that I would be down in my feelings I would have been in bed. As it was I had hardly strength at times to be on my feet and what I did do was by a great effort. I could not sleep well and of course felt very bad in the morning, and had a weak headache.

"It first gave the farmers a large acreage for a paying crop; it furnishes employment for a class of people that otherwise might have nothing to do for many months in the year; and then it is a good thing for the people who own the plant. Several cities are just now making a special effort to locate a canning factory, for it is now known that the soil in any part of Michigan, with very few exceptions, will yield canning crops. Northern and western Michigan, as well as southern Michigan, is a fertile field for the canning industry. The largest canneries in the state are located around Hart, Shelby and Frankfort. Year by year the fruits and vegetables that are considered suitable for canning are being more widely utilized, making larger the field for the canning business. Many a farmer blesses the canning company, for his liberal profits in cucumbers, tomatoes, peas, beans, berries and the various fruits now canned.

It is not all work around some of the Michigan canneries. People working in the plants sometimes come from considerable distances and bring tents (which often are furnished by the companies), and "camp out." During their living expenses low, in addition to having the fun that generally accompanies living in the open.

Good wages have been paid in recent years in the Michigan canneries, and wherever one is located there is sure to be good times for those who find employment.

FREDONIA NO. 1.

Glance Backward Into Realms of Grange History.

The First to Be Instituted Still an Active and Efficient Organization With 650 or More Members—Some of the Commendable Activities of This Grange Noted—The Young People's Organization Also Flourishing.

By J. W. DAREOW.

Forty-five years ago the first subordinate grange of the United States—of all the world, for that matter—was organized at Fredonia, N. Y. About twenty years ago the twenty-fifth anniversary of Fredonia grange was celebrated, O. H. Kelley, the founder, being present. Twenty years ago there were not more than 30,000 or 40,000 members of the National Patrons of Husbandry in New York state. Chautauqua county, in which Fredonia is located, had about 3,000 members and Fredonia grange about 250. Now there are about 105,000 members of the Order in the state, Chautauqua has about 8,000 in thirty-four granges within its border, and old Fredonia has over 650 names on the roll. Fredonia rightly proposes a lasting memorial to the late founder, O. H. Kelley, in resolutions adopted at a meeting in March last, as follows:

Resolved, That in choosing our village as the place for organizing the first grange in history we our village, a great honor and especial honor to Fredonia grange, No. 1.

Resolved, That we favor the erection of a monument commemorating a noble organization that of our honored founder, to consist of a suitable inscription on the grounds of the capitol at Washington, D. C., setting forth the work and life of our honored founder, and the work of each of the granges of the country secured to their membership.

Resolved, That we favor the appointment of a committee at the next meeting of the national grange to decide upon the amount to be expended for such memorial, and apportion it among the granges accordingly.

Sometimes granges do their little work and die. They do as little they just naturally have to die. Not so Fredonia No. 1. In the last twenty years its increase in membership has been 400. How many granges are there in the Empire State with 400 members? Then, again, how many are there with 650? Surely Fredonia is a youthful giant, strong, hearty, aggressive—a woman of wonderful virility and notable efficiency, whose watchgiant as it has been, is not, however, comparable with what it shall be.

We judge the future by the present and the past. Let us see what Fredonia No. 1 is doing now.

First in regard to community service. The best service any grange can render. Fredonia has contributed regularly toward the maintenance of a free bed in Brooklyn Memorial hospital, Dunkirk, N. Y., also toward the support of the Germania Homelands, N. Y. Home for Orphan Children and toward the Old Ladies' Home at Fredonia. Each year a contribution is made to Fredonia grange of Chautauqua county to help defray the expenses of rural teachers at Chautauqua during the session of the summer schools. Many members of Fredonia grange are also members of the Fredonia Mothers' club, the Mothers' Club of Fredonia Normal school and the Home and School club. Thus, too, the Sun Man Street History club and the Cornell Reading club has each its quota of grangers. Many members are also interested in the Y. W. C. A., recently established in Fredonia, and in the W. C. T. U. and various lodges.

In respect to cooperative buying and selling, while Fredonia has no distinctive association for this purpose, many of its members belong to the South Shore fruit association. The county farm bureau, of which Hewley B. Dayton is general manager, is trying to cooperate in every way possible with the granges of the county. The old and well known Chautauqua institution is also working in conjunction with the granges in granting scholarships to young men of the grange in the study of practical agriculture to be carried on this farm on the border of Chautauqua lake.

Of the educational work of the grange Miss Bell Wilkins says that the officers manage the ritual and take special pains to render their various lectures with expression and effective tones. A degree team has been organized—officers of the regular grange officers, the choir, a young men's drill team, a young ladies' tableau staff and a gifted orchestra.

Young People's society of Fredonia grange No. 1 numbers nearly eighty members and meets every other Friday. It has its own constitution and bylaws and is subordinate to grange No. 1. Only members of grange No. 1 can be admitted. Its purpose is social and intellectual advancement. During summer drill is given and a varied program of music, reading and recitations fill the regular grange business. Then follows an hour of dancing. Every fifth Saturday, in those months having five Saturdays, is devoted to a special program of plays and music for the entertainment of grange. Last year this society contributed over $100 toward the new grange hall fund. It also has made three successful exhibits at the agricultural fair and has taken first premium each time.

THE GRANGE FIELD.

Facts About the Work of the Order In Different States.

Massachusetts has now 30,819 members of the grange in 281 local organizations. Twenty-six new granges were organized last year, with a constitutional charter list of 2,665. Edward E. Chapman was elected master at the recent annual session of the state grange. The education fund for the loan of money to grange young people at low interest to enable them to get an education amounts to over $5,000, of which the state grange contributed $1,500. The grange has offer of its prize to grangers showing the best record this year in community improvements. It also offers prizes of $100 to the grangers holding the best grange fairs. The state grange is very active in state governmental affairs and very efficient in the farmers' interests.

Pennsylvania.

Pennsylvania has about 80,000 members, the net gain last year being about 3,700. The cash receipts were $21,000 and expenses $19,000. The state grange offers three scholarships in the state college. It approves the appropriation of $7,000,000 annually for good roads rather than bond the state for that purpose. The state grange is in favor of woman's suffrage and wants a constitutional amendment prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors. It indorses the initiative, referendum and recall and favors the highway department of the state straight out of all power over the last of state highway specifications. It approves teaching agriculture in the high schools.

Michigan.

Michigan now has 319 subordinate granges, with 49,000 members. It has about $20,000 in its treasury. Last year there were of the 100 members of the house and ten of the thirty-two members of the senate were members of the grange. It indorses woman's suffrage and favors municipal ownership of telephone companies and the incorporation of cooperative telephone companies. The salary of the state master was raised from $400 to $1,200, and he is required to give his entire time to the work of the grange.

Delaware.

Delaware is a small state geographically, but has 2,200 grangers in its fourteen granges. Its grange insurance company carries $1,000,000 in fire insurance on grange property. The state grange is active in the governmental affairs of the state. The national grange will meet at Wilming ton next fall.

New Jersey.

New Jersey has 10,000 members in 120 subordinate granges. State Master Gaunt is also state senator and was elected lecturer of the national grange at its recent meeting. The state grange is active in matters of education in New Jersey and looks carefully after the interest of farmers in its legislature. It favors the establishment of demonstration farms.

Ohio.

Ohio numbers about 44,000 members of the grange in 462 subordinate organizations. Twenty-eight new granges were organized last year. There are twenty-five juvenile granges in the state, with 700 members. Ohio granges invested in grange halls in the state. The grange favors county boards of education, making consolidated in school supervision. Attempts to outlaw the initiative and referendum were condemned at the last annual meeting. The grange also believes that any rural credit plan should be under government control to prevent private speculation.

New Hampshire.

New Hampshire is the best organized state in the grange union. It has letter than a grange to each township, and in its 274 granges there are 26,435 members. It has twenty Pomona granges, with 3,000 members. The receipts of the secretary's office last year were $11,846.63. The total attendance at all grange meetings in the state last year was 105,626. The grange in Maine stands for an equitable division of school taxes, taxing corporations and trusts, better schools and better highways, for repeal of inefficient officials, vocational training in all secondary schools and rigid enforcement of the state prohibitory law.

A Good Thing.

In one small county in Massachusetts four granges have contributed over $200 to the state grange, standard fund. This fund is for the purpose of helping young people of grange families to get an education. Thousands of dollars are raised in this way for the purpose of helping young people to help themselves.

CONSTRUCTIVE WORK.

Massachusetts State Grange Has Outlined Commendable Activities.

By J. W. DARROW.

The lecturer of the Massachusetts state grange, Mrs. George S. Ladd, is planning some constructive work for the subordinate granges of the state for the present year. So important does this work seem to be that I would like to have grangers in all states consider the plans of work outlined out by Mrs. Ladd and of their own accord adopt such of her suggestions as may be of local applicable.

First is the improvement of the farmers' homes. The lecturer states that improvement in the home enhances our respect for it and for owners, and its attractiveness will have something to do with retaining the boys and girls. The state grange offers a week's trip to Washington to the farmer's wife who will show in a written report to the executive committee of the state grange the most helpful way at home for the home-maker to comfort, convenience, economy and pleasure, with a statement as to the way the results were obtained.

Second, increasing the attendance and interest of the church. This is a near subject to most grange workers, but is an important consideration, nevertheless. The church and the grange can and should work together. Mrs. Ladd's committee will set apart one Sunday as Church Rally day, with a view to increasing the attendance of grange members at church, and for the purpose also of the latter, per cent of church attendance according to membership during the year certain valuable prizes are to be awarded.

Third—There will be an effort to increase the efficiency of the rural schools. A bill will be introduced in the legislature this winter for state aid for the teaching of the practical arts in the public schools in the small towns of Massachusetts, generally. There are 75 such towns in Massachusetts. The grangers of this state will be asked to support the bill.

Fourth—The local development of agriculture. One or two meetings will be held early in the spring, which will be devoted to the discussion of the agriculture of the locality, as to best crops to raise, best soil, fertilizer, natural cultivation and the marketing of the crops. To stimulate an interest in the work among the young people the subgrange offers to the young man and the young woman under eighteen years of age who will go on such a week's trip to Washington the young man to be chosen by ballot in a written report what can be done in taking into consideration location, cultivated and uncultivated crops, from and more of land. The work and management of operations must be done by the competitor, and he must keep an itemized account of all expenses and state results attained. The young woman must "tie blueberries" with poultry, fruit, flowers, or any other line of farm work she may select.

The fifth endeavor must be to increase attendance at grange meetings for which two valuable prizes are offered, one to the man and one to the woman of the state's possibilities and reporting with "Massachusetts quality" as the motto and the standard by which every grange endeavor is to be measured.

Here is an outline of some constructive work which, if solid efforts should bring results. The inactive grange is likely soon to be in the dormant class. The grange that serves its community best serves itself best and proves that it has a reason for being.—Rural New Yorker.

Prosperous County Grange.

Jefferson county is a small grange state in itself—reports a total membership of 7,800 in the thirty-three granges in the county, with a good showing. This membership entitled the county to five delegates to attend the session of the state grange at Schenectady last fall. Jefferson county also membership with the state grange. At the annual meeting the work of State Master Vary, who was from Watertown, was highly commended, and his success in the interest of the national grange was looked upon with pride. The grange commended the work of the county farm bureau, of which F. E. Robertson is the capable manager, and recommended the appointment of a committee to cooperate with the county agent in securing for a town show for next year. C. M. Fairchild, master of the state grange, was appointed a committee to "devise a plan of providing some uniformity in dates for the rotation for school purposes, and to report to the next quarterly meeting of the grange."

Real Grange Enterprise.

The Sandisfield Grange appeared in a local newspaper in one of the small towns of Massachusetts. The third grange formula arrived in town Saturday and was put in place at the end of the flagpole. It is composed of a handsome design and will add to the beauty of the village. The cost of the formula is about $150 and will be paid for out of the grange treasury. There then is of interest for two or three reasons, and one is that it shows one effort of the local grange enterprise. It also shows community spirit, and it shows that one of the most praiseworthy activities of any grange. It shows that the people believe in kindness to dumb animals.

AID FOR FARMERS

Can the Grange Help Solve Agriculturists' Problems?

Some Pertinent Questions Asked and Some Suggestions Made—Vocational Education of the Most Liberal Kind Demanded—Cooperation Necessary.

There is a movement in the northeast that is attracting attention, and it is a movement that is worthy of the attention of the grange. It may be well to inquire why the farmers as a class do not welcome this innovation, why they think that it will not solve their problems. Why select agriculture as the one and only great industry in the nation requiring this special education at the private expense of those indirectly interested? What of fact will it have on the industry and those engaged in it? Have they not kept pace with other industries in improved methods of work?

Our competitors in the world's market have had the advantage of state owned and operated railroads for transportation at cost, and in some instances state owned elevators, and yet we have met them, paying all the traffic would bear over our privately owned railroads and through our privately owned elevators. What other industry has or could have done so well?

In all these external efforts to aid the farmer, from Presidents Taft and Wilson, the main object, as stated, is to increase production so as to reduce the high cost of living, indirectly placing the whole blame for the high cost of living on the farmer, which is not true and is not fair.

If increased production means lower prices, and it does, how will it help the farmer to produce more and get less for it? Food products have not increased in price as rapidly as other products. Under our present system of uncontrolled marketing the farmer does not receive as much for the land or crop as for the medium or average crop. How does the price of farm products compare with twenty years ago? Can the farmer produce as cheap as he could twenty years ago? Can the farmer exchange the products of his farm for as much of the things he needs as he could twenty years ago? That is the true look.

In discussing this question I wish it distinctly understood that I am doing so from a special or national standpoint and any apparent criticisms are not intended to apply to the many generous men who are locally trying to assist the farmers. I believe in better farming, in scientific farming, in bringing practical education as close to the farm as possible. It is absolutely necessary so long as our competitors are doing so. Indeed, our competitors are spending much more money in this direction than we do. The development of agriculture must be one. When wish to eliminate is that it is to better education the farmer needs it should be at public expense. Increase our public educational facilities, not only for the farmer, but the mechanic, the manufacturer, the banker, the railroad manager and the commercial men and women. Treat all alike. Let it be vocational education of the most liberal kind, that the best interest that state and nation can make.

We want to increase the power we need the most to shape the lines of cooperative transportation, distribution and marketing. Every other great industry pays as much, if not more, attention to transportation as any one line to production, many of them fixing the price the customer must pay before the product leaves the factory. The farmer alone, on the advice of other interests, fixes his efforts to production and permits other other interests to take the bulk of the more important functions of distribution and sale. There is where the profits go. There is where the big money is. Instead of the farmer receive and the consumer pay. The organized farmers have their eyes on that margin.—H. L. Ferris.

Missouri Grange Educational Fund.

The Missouri state grange has started a movement to raise by voluntary subscription a fund from which young men and women can borrow on personal and unindorsed notes to assist them in obtaining an education. It proposes to make the loans "debts of honor."

Graduates who fulfill their obligations will be getting a good start. It is expected that the movement will be supported by the state and local funds and through our privately owned elevators. What other industry has or could have done so well?

SENATOR IN DENIAL

GORE TESTIFIES THAT WOMAN'S CHARGE IS PLOT TO DE-STROY HIM.

TELLS OF MEETING IN HOTEL

Oklahoma Lawmaker Declares Mrs. Minnie E. Bond's $50,000 Damage Suit is Planned by Her Part of Several Disappointed Officeseekers.

Oklahoma City, Okla., Feb. 18.—Thomas P. Gore, United States senator from Oklahoma, said in Monday that political opposition was responsible for the damage suit for $50,000 filed against him by Mrs. Minnie E. Bond, who alleges that Senator Gore attempted her in a hotel at Washington.

Senator Gore took the witness stand in his own behalf. He denied making an attack on Mrs. Bond and said he believed the charge to have been made to induce him to his campaign for renomination as the democratic candidate for the senate.

Senator Gore was asked about his acquaintance with Mrs. Bond, the plaintiff, and replied that he recognized her when she at a reception here, and that her husband's candidacy for internal revenue collector was mentioned at the time. He said he had only gave her any encouragement about her husband's candidacy.

Regarding the alleged assault in Washington, the senator, in reply to questions, told of meeting Mrs. Bond at her hotel after she had telephoned him making the appointment. He never knew that James R. Jacobs, T. E. Robertson and others were at the hotel at the time.

"I had never been in there before," he said, "and when I reached the door Mrs. Bond approached me in the lobby. I supposed we were to go to the hotel parlor, but she took me to another room."

"Where did you sit?" Senator Gore was asked.

"I sat in a rocking chair," replied he. "We talked about the appointment of her husband. I told her again there was no chance for him. She seemed to feel that he had lost."

Senator Gore denied that he took any liquor, smoking, that "I never, smoking, that I never, at any time, drank any."

He said he was sure he did not make any improper advances to Mrs. Bond. He said he had nothing to say about the incident.

"I told him," he said, "that if anyone said I did anything improper I was an infamous lie."

Senator Gore denied that he told Earp to try to get Mrs. Bond out of the city.

WILL ASK VOTE MAY 2

WOMEN OF AMERICA TO HOLD MASS MEETINGS.

In Every City and Hamlet Appeal Will Be Made to Wash-ington.

Chicago, Feb. 16.—On May 2, it is planned, women in every hamlet, town and city in the United States will be assembled in mass meeting to ask congress to pass a "federal suffrage amendment."

Announcement of this plan of the National American Woman Suffrage association for the celebration of a national suffrage day was made by Mrs. Medill McCormick, chairman of the national congressional committee.

Mrs. Mccormick also declared that differences between the National association and the congressional union would be overlooked during the celebration and both would work together to further that common end.

Washington, Feb. 16.—Friday was filled with interest for the congressional Union for Woman Suffrage. The members obtained the promise of a hearing on the national amendment enfranchising women from Representative Clayton, chairman of the judiciary committee, and they got permission to use the steps of the capitol for the demonstration in May. The members who went to New York to discuss the national board brought back the information that the national board would not insist on the national board will not insist on the first day of the celebration, said Mrs. Medill McCormick, chairman of the congressional committee, but would bring here the leading suffrage orators from all parts of the country.

OFFICIAL KILLS SELF

NEW YORK STATE OFFICIAL, SUPOENAED IN GRAFT CASE, ENDS LIFE.

COMMITS ACT AFTER CHURCH

Accounts Under Investigation, But Nothing Wrong Found, Though He Borrowed From Banks—District Attorney Whitman Is Mystified.

Buffalo, N. Y., Feb. 17.—John J. Kennedy committed suicide in the Markeen hotel here on Sunday by cutting his throat with a razor. His body was found by his son, who a few hours before had accompanied his father and mother to the Chapel of the Blessed Sacrament to attend morning service.

There was no note found, nor was there anything known that would explain why he should have decided to end his life. Kennedy was to have testified on Monday in the graft case in New York that is being conducted by District Attorney Whitman. A subpoena was served upon him Saturday. A copy of the subpoena and a slover for reservation on the night train to New York were found in his pocket. He had previously refused to waive immunity and testify when asked to do so by Mr. Whitman. According to a report here, Mr. Whitman, in possession of Mr. Kennedy's bank accounts, showing that the state treasurer had borrowed money from several banks that were depositories of state funds.

New York, Feb. 17.—District Attorney Whitman is unable to account for the action of State Treasurer Kennedy because of any evidence that he misused his office. It is true that Kennedy has borrowed money from several banks, but in each case the state funds had been deposited, but this could hardly seem to be sufficient motive for suicide.

SENOR BACON DEAD

Statesman From Georgia Succumbs to Heart Trouble—President Mourns His Death.

Washington, Feb. 17.—Augustus Octavius Bacon, United States senator from Georgia, died early in the morning of a long list of foreign relations committee since the secondary of the Democratic party, died in a hospital here on Saturday after an illness of two days. He was the first United States senator elected by direct vote of the people under the seventeenth constitutional amendment. The immediate cause of death was diagnosed as a blood clot in the heart.

Mr. Bacon's death was a shock to his colleagues. A public funeral was held in the senate chamber on Tuesday afternoon, and was attended by the senate and house of representatives, the president and his cabinet, members of the diplomatic corps, the admiral of the navy and chief of staff of the army.

In the death of Senator Bacon President Wilson lose one of his chief advisers on foreign affairs. Mr. Wilson, on learning the news, said:

"My association with Mr. Bacon has been of the most cordial and, to me, helpful sort. I particularly profited by his experience in foreign affairs."

Minneapolis Factory Foreman Shot.

Minneapolis Minn., Feb. 17.—Joseph Bayerle, foreman of a factory at which a strike had been in progress for several days, was shot and possibly fatally injured by an unidentified assailant as he was about to board a street car.

Arrested as Museum Frauds.

St. Louis, Feb. 17.—Dr. David Dubsch and Dr. Charles Adams, who have been conducting a museum of anatomy, were arrested on federal warrants. They were charged with devising a scheme to defraud patients.

Two Die in Mine Strike Riot.

Gallipolis, W. Va., Feb. 18.—Deputy Sheriff Harry Lucas and Jamie Smith, a striking miner, were killed in a riot at the mines of the Pittsburgh Coal company, where a strike has been in progress since September.

Exclusion Bill Killed in South Carolina.

Columbia, S. C., Feb. 16.—The alien land bill, intended against ownership of land by aliens, was killed in the senate at the request of its author, following the failure of a similar bill in the house.

BRITISH LAND MARINES

TROOPS ORDERED TO GUARD LEGATION AT MEXICO CITY.

Arms and Ammunition Are for Defense in Case of Uprising—Prepare for Capital Riots.

Vera Cruz, Feb. 16.—British marines were landed here on Friday with two machine guns and ammunition following orders dispatched from the British foreign office. The purpose of the landing is said to be for the protection of the British legation headquarters.

The blackjackets landed from the British flagship Suffolk late at night and placed the guns on a car on the Mexican railway, combined to the British legation in Mexico City. With the guns was sent a great quantity of ammunition. It is assumed here that the guns and ammunition are intended for the defense of the British legation in case of an uprising in the federal capital.

Mexico City, Feb. 16.—Reports were circulated in banking circles here on Friday that leading Japanese financial institutions will lend the Mexican government $20,000,000. It is said that arrangements for the loan were made during the recent visit of Francisco de la Barra to Tokio. The reports caused considerable excitement in the financial world.

Vera Cruz, Mex., Feb. 15.—Gen. Joaquin Maas, commander of the Vera Cruz garrison, received orders from the war ministry in Mexico City that he should arrest the chief of police, the person who tried to assassinate Arthur B. Cobb, Red Lieutenant to Rear Admiral Dave of the United States battleship Connecticut. The order was said to have come direct from President Huerta himself. Cobb was the victim of the wounding of Lieutenant Cook, ex-Provisional President Carbajal, the life of John Lind, special envoy of President Wilson. The Mexican guard about the American consulate was doubled and Mr. Lind is accompanied by an escort of Rurales whenever he ventures out. Lieutenant Cook, who is under care of the surgeon on board the Connecticut, is not expected to live. The bullet passed through the fleshy part of the thigh.

TELEGRAPHIC NOTES

U. S. HOLDS CASTILLO

MEXICAN BANDIT AND SIX FOLLOWERS CAPTURED BY THE NINTH CAVALRY.

TAKEN ON THE AMERICAN SIDE

Washington May Order Outlaw Be Turned Over to Gen. Villa for Execution—Bandit Responsible for Cumbre Tunnel Disaster.

El Paso, Tex., Feb. 19.—Maximo Castillo, the Mexican bandit, has been captured by United States cavalry.

This fact was confirmed by a message received by Gen. Hugh L. Scott, commander of the Second cavalry brigade, on Tuesday. The message came from Captain White, in command of the United States troops at Hachita, N. M.

The message declares that Castillo and six of his followers were taken by a troop of the Ninth cavalry when they surrendered on the United States side of the international boundary line. The bandit and his men are being taken to Hachita.

General Scott said that the bandits would probably be brought to El Paso and locked up in the federal prison at Camp Fort Bliss. Here they will be held until final disposition is made of them by the authorities at Washington.

If Castillo is turned over to General Villa for punishment for the Cumbre tunnel outrage it will be an violation of the United States government.

Castillo crossed the International boundary at Dog Springs, N. M., some time Monday night. General Scott said that he had been told by Captain White that the bandits were on the side of the border and had informed attempt to cross into United States territory. Orders were immediately issued to send cavalry troops to Dog Springs for the purpose of arresting the bandits if they should attempt to flee to cross the boundary. This order was given Tuesday and three troops resulted in the capture of Castillo.

BANKS TAKE AVERY FIRM

Estimated Earnings of $800,000 in 1913 Shown to $138,166 When Books Are Audited.

Chicago, Feb. 18.—Estimated net profits for 1913 of $800,000, which on examination shown to reality to only $138,166, enabled the Avery company, manufacturers of farm implements at Peoria, to pay 10 per cent of their bonds of dollars from Chicago banks before the real condition of the concern became known. As a result of disclosures made by a firm of accountants, the banks on Tuesday, acting through an interest committee, took charge of the Avery company's business. The banks, it is understood, when they found how the profits of the company were so greatly exaggerated in the financial statements on which the verdict extended by the banks based, a stiffer attitude was assumed by the bankers' committee, in which it was stated that the affairs of accounting used by the Avery company were so loose that the officials themselves did not know what the profits really were.

On the basis of exaggerated estimates the Avery company during 1913 increased its bills and accounts payable from $872,411 to $2,139,946 on December 31 last. The committee has granted an extension of the indebtedness until December 31, 1914, and three officers of the company have individually guaranteed payment of new notes or extensions of those issued in exchange for the old indebtedness.

MANY AFFECTED BY RULING

Notices Are Being Mailed All Over the State Warning That All Violations of the Law Will Be Investigated.

Lansing—After March 1 non-resident insurance agents will not have the right to do business in Michigan, State Insurance Commissioner John T. Winship has handed down this ruling, which affects about 20,000 local agents or resident agents now employed in this work. At the same time the decision means distress to about 2,000 outside agents who have been doing business in the state.

The ruling overrules a former ruling made by C. A. Palmer, when commissioner, that it is handed down by the attorney general. The action is the result of long continued efforts to make reciprocal laws between states in all propositions of this kind there seemed more or less interested with the total cutting off of privileges secured after a consultation with the attorney general, to be the wiser plan.

Notices are being mailed out by the city of Michigan. The plan is to make the school self-supporting at the outset, instead of the following year after an appropriation will be asked for the legislature.

The teachers trained in the school will be employed in the defective schools of various cities. It is stated that the end, according to Assistant Commissioner of Insurance Wm. Ireland, who were particularly fitted for handling defective children.

THE GRANGE

Conducted by
J. W. DATROW, Chatham, N. Y.
Editor of the New York State Grange Review

CONNECTICUT GRANGE.

Sixty Master J. A. Sherwood Re-elected—Business Transacted.

The twenty-ninth annual session of the Connecticut state grange was held in Hartford from Jan. 13 to 15, with large attendance. State Master J. A. Sherwood reported some progress in grange work, although but two new groups have been organized the past year. There had been creditable additions to the grange strength organized. He said in his opening address that the grange should have a distinct mission in every community and should exert such an influence that it would be recognized as a necessity. The cash receipts for the year, including balance on hand Jan. 14, 1913, were $1,653.12. The expenses were $1,577.95. Invested funds amount to $2,000.00.

Resolutions of various kinds were presented, considered, and the most important of those adopted may be summarized as follows: Favoring the teaching of agriculture in the public schools, and to that end a committee was recommended to prepare an outline course in agriculture. The grange also urged that the foundations of bookkeeping be taught in the common and the high schools and that such instruction be made compulsory. It also favored the compulsory teaching of certain essential principles of morality to those schools. Another resolution established a sort of educational fund for the use of needy young members of the Order in securing an education at the State Agricultural college. Each grange is to set apart a sum equal to a cents for each member each year for this fund. The grange voted unanimously against the free seed distribution of congress. The admirable action of Postmaster General Burleson was indorsed with special reference to the parcel post law.

The new officers were correspondingly come in for severe scoring, himself as it effects the farmer as an employer. It was explained by an expert that the farmer could not afford to let worthy certain papers, but the grange went on record as in opposition to it and suggested that it be radically amended. It was said to be the intention to exclude from the provisions of the act all who did not employ five or more. As a result of the agitation over the compensation law the following resolution relative to farmers' institutes was adopted: "That the minimum rate of $1,000 to the small farmer is an unfair discrimination and that the executive committee be instructed to confer with the composite action, liability insurance and endeavor to secure a fair rate for the small farmer."

Addresses were given during the session by J. H. Hale, Past Master Grange, R. Lodge of Massachusetts and by Mrs. Laidd, lecturer of the Massachusetts state grange. Rev. F. A. Bissell of Milford, George B. Chandler of Rocky Hill and others. The officers of the grange were generally re-elected.

The matter of selecting a place for the annual meeting was referred to the executive committee after considerable discussion. It will go either to Waterbury or New Haven.

Some Grange Notes.

New Jersey granges are beginning early to arrange for their annual strawberry festivals. The first of the season will cover three days, Aug. 12 to 14. State Master Grout heads the committee of arrangements, with whom are associated several others. It is said that the exhibits of farm machinery and of poultry will be large, increased this year.

Pennsylvania state grange is to take a referendum vote next June on the question of woman suffrage in order to overtake the exact sentiment, particularly of the women of the grange. The women's vote and the men's will be kept separate. The legislative committee of the Pennsylvania state grange has asked for the appointment of a committee to inquire into state expenditures. It also demands greater powers for municipalities of the second class in the construction and maintenance of roads. The committee went on record as opposing an annual state appropriation of $25,000 for good roads. It further demands that property be assessed at its actual value for purposes of taxation.

Several granges and schools in Jefferson county, N. Y., have arranged with the College of Forestry for a series of lectures by Professor John W. Bricker, of Syracuse, on behalf of the forestry question. It is stated that the lectures will be illustrated with the relationship of the state, particularly in our forests and on the lands they will be more active in caring for what forests they now have on their farms and will endeavor to turn deserted tracts into profitable areas. New York spends out of the state every year over $20,000,000 for wood to be used in its many industries.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Q.—If a grange owns its own hall and subsequently its charter is given up for any reason to whom does the property of the grange, as minute, regalia, etc., belong? D. H. T.

A.—The personal property of a grange whose charter has been surrendered such as minute, regalia, clothing, etc., are held in trust by the subordinate grange until such time as the charter is received. The real estate of a grange such as hall, large, etc., is the property of the grange and if the grange disbands the property is sold at auction, and the proceeds are equally divided among those who were members of the grange in good standing when the grange closed its doors. The state grange has no right to the property of the subordinate grange and further than to see that the provisions of grange law are complied with.

Q.—Are any of the members of the Ark of Patrons of Husbandry now living, and if so, what are their names and residences?—P. W. G.

A.—None of the original founders is now living. O. H. Kelley the last of the seven founders, having died in Washington about a year ago. Miss Carolline Hall, who was always considered by Mr. Kelley as being entitled to be called one of the founders of the order, is still living in Minnesota, we believe. It was Miss Hall who suggested the idea of admitting women to membership in the grange.

Q.—Are there any granges in Cuba?—B. G. T.

A.—There are a few. The Dominion grange corresponds to our state grange and is officered as follows: Master, Henry Gross, Jaffrey, Ont.; secretary, J. Morrison, Arthur; lecturer, James Pattie, New-Bridge, Ont.

Q.—Is the grange in favor of the parcel post? Some contend that this has been tried long enough to show that it has been useless for some time or to the end of the year ending about July 1 the same objects?—P. B.

A.—The national grange at its session in Spokane, Wash., indorsed the Page-Wilson vocational education bill, and, of course, the national grange is on record as favoring the parcel post.

One of the neatest and handiest hotel dining rooms in northern Michigan is the new one dedicated last Sunday at Baker's Inn. The decorations, lighting fixtures and furniture are artistic, and every feature of the room all that could be desired.

Postmasters of all classes have been notified by the first assistant postmaster general to boost for good roads. The department's attention has been attracted to proclamations issued from time to time by the governors of states designating certain days as good roads days and postmasters as representatives in their communities of the national government are expected to manifest an active an interest in this movement as is consistent with proper performance of their official duties."

Death of William Black

William Black died at his farm home in Marion township Tuesday afternoon, aged sixty-nine years. Besides a wife, Mrs. Lillie Black, he leaves one son and two daughters.

The funeral may be classed as one of the earliest pioneers of this section. Father Pierron officiated. Mr. Black, Jr., came home following the Mormon exodus, and for several years followed the fishing business, assisted by his son, the deceased.

The young man's experience in the strenuous pioneering days of the forties and thirty-five years ago he was the master of a large log. Waste in this line of daily life sufficed to make him permanently deprived him of the use of one of his arms.

Since this misfortune he has rarely left his home, continuing himself to sight, mere about the house and garden. Quite recently he suffered a stroke of paralysis, which was the direct cause of his death.

"The Man Worth While."

At the Charlevoix Theatre Friday evening, March 5th, at 8 o'clock.

It is an intellectual treat to this lecture, the last and best of the season's course. Don't let your friends miss it by reason of not passing the word along. If they are skeptical, tell them that the lecture committee will be glad to refund their money if they are not satisfied.

NEW POSTMASTER GEORGE FINUGAN

The Young Chap Lands It, and the Young Man Element of the Local Democracy is Recognized as Worth While

Republicans have nothing to say in this matter of the postoffice in the phase of politics. And the republican who sticks his nose into it gets snubbed, as he should. It is none of our business, and we will take what comes.

The name of Thomas G. Finugan (that is, as George.) went to the senate Saturday as postmaster at Charlevoix. Of course every citizen of Charlevoix has an interest in good local postal service, and will be interested in the qualifications and personality of the man who will have supervision over this important service.

The new postmaster is nearly 27 years of age. He has lived in Charlevoix nearly all his life. He was graduated from the Charlevoix high school in the class of 1906, following which he took a one year course in pharmacy in the Michigan University, the following year continuing that study for one year at the Ferris Institute. He has been a registered pharmacist for two years, and is at the time in the employ of the Doyle drug store.

Positively the worst thing that can be said against George is that he is a democrat. It was born in him, because Capt. Billy, his father, has been a Democrat all his life. And he is a level-headed, sensible, and altogether reliable chap. He is happily married to the oldest daughter of Capt. and Mrs. George Weaver, and is, therefore, indirectly related to the S. S. S. He only bad habit is that he votes the democratic ticket regularly and indiscriminately. He is an alleged, well equipped and reputable boy, and, as a recognition of the younger element of our citizens, they could not have made a better selection.

We know nothing of the inside workings of the democrat machine, and do not know how it came about; we only know that George had as a competitor Dr. Jack Auld, and he defeated a good democrat, and one who has the respect of the community. All good democrats and good fellows cannot be postmasters; there are not enough to go around. Mr. Finugan has declared his intention to retain the present force. This act alone commends Mr. Finugan to the favorable consideration of the public. He shows his good sense.

He has our sincere congratulations.

HATTIE HAMLIN

The editors for the week are Willard Howe and Edna Sigley. The housekeeper was Ethyl Jacobs and Marjorie Weaver.

The manual training class have finished their work in paper and each member made one picture for herself and one picture was left for the room.

Miss Mae Sullivan and Ethyl Jacobs called at the Normal room Thursday forenoon. She spoke of the work that has taken place in the Junior high school since we were there last year.

Ethyl Jacobs attended the Epworth League district conference at Bellaire Friday and Saturday of last week. She was a report of the proceedings.

Velma La Count and Esther Walker spent Saturday and Sunday at their homes.

Miss Whiting received a very interesting letter from Ruth Clarke, a former pupil of the training class, who is now living in Petoskey. She has not started school yet as she is just recovering from the measles.

Eden Sigley will have three weeks of practice teaching with the third class. Esther Walker the fourth grade language and Ethyl Jacobs and Hattie Hamlin the fifth grade geography.

Marjorie Weaver was absent Tuesday afternoon. She is suffering with a very severe cold and has not fully recovered yet.

"Do You Remember?"

Yes, we remember when the Fox wood scows were towed down through the winter months to Petoskey to connect with Chicago City boat business and practical navigation.

We remember the 1911 "Pine Lakes" that cleared up and scraped the lake through where the upper river flows unwatched to Round Lake; when Lou Lounsberry, with the nine tug-compadres, had kicked the boss for the cook to follow.

We remember when the four Mormon Queens came up from Beaver to take the steamer Idlewild and was passed across the boat lost by a steamer-pilot between Desoto's Noble and Round Rapids.

We remember when Capt. Billy Finucan was mate of the steamer Isabella, and when he made his first trip in his own name.

We remember when Harbor Springs was "Little Traverse," and when Pinkney was "Bear Creek."

We remember when the small-boat fishermen throw big fat whitefish at the tourists who have come sailing up the harbor.

We remember when the ox-teams were compelled to drive around the camp on Bridge street.

We remember when the Indian vote in Charlevoix township was a majority, and when a banquet of crackers and pickles served to whom it may concern.

We remember when the writer of this was a female teacher Horace Greeley made means and ways for the young lady to remain in jail until the next term of circuit court.

Traverse City Record: Frank Hamlin has resigned from the annual meeting of the Western Michigan Pike Association, held in Muskegon. From the reports that were made it was shown that more good work had been accomplished this last year than at any time in the past. The second annual tour will probably be during the week of July 14. The publication of a booklet describing the pike was advocated and the bigger boosting of the pike was considered a good thing to do. In his speech, Horatio Earle of Detroit said: "The Lincoln highway is a good thing, I am sure, but, by gum, we people of Michigan must look after Michigan first and spend our money improving roads in this state." The representative of each county gave a detailed report of the work done and the condition of the roads at present.

Plans to organize Northern Michigan high schools into a permanent interscholastic athletic association have been proposed by local high school athletic authorities and will be announced within a few weeks. The proposal for the creation of such an organization finds a response in this city, but already most of the northern schools have been founded upon some inter-cooperation. It is understood that the new organization, if formed will be called the Northern Michigan Interscholastic Athletic Association and will include cities directly Northern Michigan in spirit and geography. The proposed cities are Charlevoix, Traverse City, Petoskey, Alpena, Cheboygan, East Jordan and Boyne City. Mackinac and Cadillac have not yet promised to join, and as the schools included are those in the central organization their membership will not be pressed.

Petoskey News: Petoskey police added to their laurels Monday evening when a runaway team stopped. C. Hyland, Hetmer, who was wanted at Boyne City for his part in a cutting affair Sunday night. Sheriff Robbins passed to the Petoskey police Monday evening to secure the booked. For Ryan and Chief Crawford received the message while at the council session. He Policeman Kurtz located two suitcases which they suspected belonged to Ryan, and Kurtz quietly kept his eye on them. Along about 7 o'clock Ryan appeared at the G. R. & I. station and was the last claim to the suitcases Policeman Kurtz quietly informed him that he was wanted. Sheriff Robbins came on the Tuesday morning and took back to Boyne Falls. Petoskey's police force has been unusually successful of late in rounding up suspects and and men not only for themselves but for outside officers.

Northern Michigan

Capt. Robertson of the car ferry Chief Wawatam has purchased the Lakeside hotel in Mackinaw City and will remodel and enlarge it for summer purposes.

With his ice boat traveling nearly a mile a minute Albert Talbert of Harbor Springs narrowly escaped death when the craft was destroyed on the breakwater at Petoskey. The boat traveled the distance of 4½ miles in a little more than five minutes.

Farmers' and Merchants' Bank, Boyne Falls, an institution organized in January, is now among the people of that village that has existed since failure of the old Boyne Falls Bank of W. C. Welch on the ten day of last November, has been organized with good financial backing.

Petoskey News: A Kentuckian known as "Hoosier," gave Boyne City officials a merry chase Tuesday when he escaped from a second story window while the officers were waiting for him to change his clothes before being taken to jail. Hamilton is charged with a shot affair in a saloon in Boyne City young lady and fooled the officers and escaped in his stocking feet. He is supposed to have taken to Charlevoix to remain in jail until the next term of circuit court.

The Primary Election

The primary election Wednesday was merely a mere form. It passed off peacably, but, of course, expensively.

There are three tickets in the field, the vote on Mayor being a fair test of party strength. There were 108 republican votes cast, 71 Democratic votes, 7 Prohibition votes, and 1 Socialist vote; on the ticket Republican votes: On Mayor, T. E. S Stacke 3, and W. J. Rachow 1; Dr. Auld received the entire 52 democratic votes.

For Clerk the contest will be between C. J. Hiller and Harry McHugh, with a very close contest.

John Cook for Treasurer was an even ticket, and has no opposition.

The ward results are as follows:

First Ward:—Alderman, rep., G. W. Dyke; prog., R. H. Gaskins; dem., Joe Howard. Supervisor, rep., F. Meech; prog., Harvey Campbell; dem., R. J. Faulkner.

Second Ward:—Alderman, rep., W. H. Barney; prog., W. J. Rachow; dem., F. M. Harris. Supervisor, rep., Chas. Zoulter; prog., G. E. Dutton.

Third Ward:—Alderman, rep., Chas. Howe; prog., R. H. Armstrong; dem., Geo. Anderson. Supervisor, rep., Wm. Graham; prog., L. P. Adams; dem., W. H. Miller.

Northern Michigan Python League

The annual meeting of the Northern Michigan Python League was held at Petoskey last Friday night, the following delegation of Charlevoix Pythians went to Manistee Monday: High deputy, F. E. Dyke; Wm. Scroggie Jr., R. W. Peddock, E. J. Hiller, W. R. Barney, W. E. Hampton, J. W. Price, F. M. Glansford, Lee Smith, O. D. Hammond, Graf Nordrum, E. A. Bowman, W. C. Schmeer, R. L. Lewis, Richard Lewis, R. N. Washburn, Jay Adams, W. S. Kibbs.

LATER.

Just as we close these columns comes the news from the K. P. outfit at Manistee that the Charlevoix delegation won both caps.

Manistee held these honors the past two years, but Charlevoix made them cough them up.

Nine Farm Schools Held This Winter

Nine agricultural extension schools have been held in Western Michigan the present winter. These were Hart, Manistee, Caledonia, Boyne City, Traverse City, Fremont, Beulah, Northport and Suttons Bay. These schools are a new idea for agricultural education, the educational outlines being designed for those who stayed a week in a place and held regular sessions morning and afternoon, with from one to two night sessions considering these subjects in a comprehensive manner. The attendance at these schools has been from fair to large, but the results have been surprising. They have been more of an educational outlook than inspirational and it is safe to presume that always in strong, the extension school will take the place of the farmers' institute that has been held in the past. Fred R. J. Baldwin, of East Lansing, was in charge of the extension work has said: "We have found that farmers are like other students and like to follow subject long enough to really accomplish a thorough understanding of the material presented. Single lectures are good, but they do not produce real results like a whole week's study and discussion. We are planning on developing this work more extensively next year."

Eighteen Epworth Leagues went to Bellaire Saturday and attended the Northern Michigan convention of that society.

Why Don't Parents Visit the Schools?

Oh dear, what can the matter be?
Dear me, what can the matter be,
Dear, dear, what can the matter be,
Parents don't visit the school.

They let the drill go on and on and on,
They visit the stores, they visit their neighbors,
They visit their friends and the sewing which lady is,
Now why don't they visit the school?

They care for their horses, they care for their dollars,
They care for their babies, they fancy fine
collars,
But Hallie, we think do they care for their children?

Because they don't visit the school.

We know we from honor and evil are protected,
In knowledge and virtue our minds are developed,
But still we think we are sadly neglected
Because they don't visit the school.

VISITING DAY.

Thursday, March 24, 1914, has been designated as "Visiting Day" for our public schools. Every person interested in the welfare of our school children is requested to visit the different departments some time during that day.

The regular school work will be carried on. Specimens of work done previously will be on display.

The Historical Society

The Charlevoix Historical Society will meet Friday evening, March 13th, with Mr. and Mrs. Harsha.

TRAIN IS BLOWN UP

FIFTY-FIVE KILLED WHEN REBELS SET OFF DYNAMITE, SHATTERING THREE CARS.

ENGLISH ENVOY ASKS PROBE

Sir Edward Grey Tells House of Commons of Case Due to Vera Cruz Execution—Calls Situation as Extremely Serious.

Vera Cruz, Feb. 25.—A federal troop train carrying a company of infantry from Mexico City, destined for Jalapa, was blown up by rebels near the Alma station of the Interoceanic railway, 149 miles from Vera Cruz. The entire train was demolished. All on board, including 55 officers and men, and the English engineer, were killed. A passenger train, which was following in the wake of the troop train, was fired on by the rebels, but escaped by having left the troop train behind.

London, England, Feb. 25.—The history of the Benton affair as contained in the information furnished to Sir Cecil Spring-Rice, British ambassador to the United States by the state department at Washington, was communicated in official form to the house of commons by Sir Edward Grey.

When the British foreign secretary said that Sir Cecil Spring-Rice had told secretary of State Bryan that the public opinion of Europe was likely to be seriously affected by Villa's attitude, an encouraging cheer rolled through the house.

A full house listened with intense interest to the explanation given by Sir Edward Grey and by Prince Duke Arenal, parliamentary undersecretary for foreign affairs. Then both spoke of the British government's attitude and discussed their communications with Washington.

Sir Edward Grey explained that Great Britain did not hold the United States responsible for Villa's acts, but he said the British government was powerless to take any measures in the disorder of Mexico.

Juarez, Feb. 24.—William S. Benton's resistance to General Villa's backing his from Mexico brought on the execution of the British subject and owner of a 100,000-acre ranch in the Chihuahua, according to the record of the court-martial that condemned Benton to death. It was charged that he had "ordered the rebels to murder Villa while resisting the government's forces."

The official record was revealed on Saturday. It opens with the statement that an extraordinary council of war was convened at 4:30 o'clock last Tuesday by Col. Pablo Ruiz. The council convened a court-martial, of which Maj. Ignacio Rodriguez was president. There were four other judges.

Villa, after considering the report, "stated that because Benton was a foreigner his property has not been confiscated. But he must remain out of the country because he was an element detrimental to the peace and prosperity of the country."

The accused answered in harsh and violent terms and asserted that no human power could keep him out of Mexico or compel him to leave his property to further depredations.

Then he said he was as good a man as Villa and at the same moment he drew a pistol from his hip pocket. But the general was ready and waiting for him and struck at the same time the presidente present, leaped on him that he might not make an attempt on the life of General Villa."

The record also contains testimony indirectly as follows:

"He said he came at 10 or 11 o'clock in the morning to see General Villa and inform him that revolutionists at times parties of bandits had done much damage to his ranch, destroying property of a thousand cattle. He had come to tell Villa of these things, but upon arrival he learned him of being friendly to the federals, and suggested that the rebels buy the ranch, as the authorities were afraid of Villa."

The witness told General Villa that he was upset and received other things that annoyed the general, but witness had no intention of harming the general or anyone else. He said he had spoken to Villa with threats of the red flagers and was indifferent to the politics of the country. This was all he had to say.

TO QUIZ GRAIN "TRUST"

HOUSE RESOLUTION PROVIDES FOR TRADE BOARD INQUIRY.

Representative Manahan Says Bulk of Wheat Crop is Controlled in Chicago—Italian Situation Is Serious.

Washington, Feb. 24.—A sensational attack was made in congress on the doings of the American "wheat pit" by Representative Manahan of Minnesota when he introduced in the house on Thursday a resolution providing for the appointment of a special committee to investigate charges of manipulation of the price of wheat by unfair practices by the Chicago and Duluth boards of trade and the Minneapolis chamber of commerce.

The resolution demands that the committee inquire whether these three bodies "exercise any unlawful interest or control over the buying or selling of grain according to said terminal markets from Iowa, Nebraska, the Dakotas or any other states, or over the prices thereof." It requires information also on the use of public warehouses, terminals (elevators) and blending elevators, and grain inspection facilities, and all other means of influencing the price of wheat.

The committee shall also specifically inquire, says the resolution, "into the ownership and control of the stock or separate memberships of the above organizations, the Chicago board of trade, the Minneapolis chamber of commerce and the Duluth board of trade, with a view of revealing the practices of members of the organizations of selling grains contrary to their established interest or to dumping."

Facts discovered at any time during the investigation which in the judgment of the committee show a violation of criminal prosecution are to be immediately turned over to the attorney general for such action as he may deem proper.

FREE TOLLS ARE OPPOSED

Gosthals Asserts All Ships Should Assist in Paying Back $400,000,000 in Cost to Construct Big Ditch.

Washington, Feb. 25.—Col. George W. Goethals, engineer of the Panama canal, some, explained to the house appropriations committee on Monday his estimate of $22,700,000 for next year's work on the canal and for the maintenance of the zone government. He again voiced his opposition to exempting ships of American coastwise shipping again when he told Chairman Adamson of the house intercoastal commerce committee that the canal tolls should be used to balance losses with favors to nobody. "We have spent $400,000,000," said Colonel Goethals, "in constructing the canal and now we could to have an opportunity to make the canal pay back this cost. American vessels as well as foreign ships should bear the burden."

MOTHER AND BABIES DIE

Bodies of Three Are Found on Bed in Gas-Filled Room in Chicago.

Chicago, Feb. 23.—Three persons—mother, daughter and son—were found dead in a flat in a dwelling at 1611 West Ohio street. The dead:

Mrs. Sophie Arendt, thirty-two years old, mother; Genevieve Arendt, four years old, daughter; William Arendt, three months old, a son.

Bodies of the victims were on a bed in the same room with the gas jets open. The fumes are believed to have been escaping for hours, as all of the windows were fitted. It is not known whether the gas escaped accidentally or purposely. William Arendt, the husband and father, returned home from work early in the evening and he is tested. He collapsed when he learned that his family had been wiped out by the gas.

The witness told General Villa that he was upset and received other things that annoyed the general, but witness had no intention of harming the general or anyone else. He said he had spoken to Villa with threats of the red flagers and was indifferent to the politics of the country. This was all he had to say.

FOUR DEAD IN STORM

CHICAGO AND THE MIDDLE WESTERN STATES CRIPPLED BY BLIZZARD

NO TRAFFIC ON SOME ROADS

Railways, Interurban and Street Car Service Demoralized Throughout Indiana—Kansas City Is Center of Disturbance.

Chicago, Feb. 25.—Four persons are dead and many others injured in Illinois, plate glass windows in the big downtown retail stores were broken, all railroad trains were from one to seven hours behind schedule time, as a result of the worst storm of the winter, which swept Chicago and surrounding country on Monday.

Two persons died of exposure, their bodies being found in a room where there had been no fire for many hours and where nearly all windows had been broken. An unidentified man was struck by a train, another was blown to the curbing of a street and fatally injured. So many persons were injured by the force of the wind in the streets lined by skyscrapers that the police on several long thoroughfares were doubled.

Peoria, Ill., Feb. 25.—Railroad service was abandoned temporarily here on Monday, only one railroad out of seven lines attempted to send trains from the city. One Illinois Central passenger got to Pekin but came back.

Indianapolis, Feb. 25.—A blinding blizzard swept central Indiana throughout the night and day, demoralizing all railroad, interurban, street car service. With the mercury rapidly crouching toward the zero mark, the heavy snow driven by a fierce wind, rendered traffic almost impossible. Hundreds of men and all train services into and out of the city was from three to seven hours late.

Kansas City, Mo., Feb. 25.—Kansas City's big metropolitan district of a wide area of country which suffered from a blizzard of the winter, on Monday. The fiercest fury of the storm has been spent although snow was still falling here and only the work of restoring communication with the outside world was progressing slowly.

Many railroad trains due in Kansas City during the night have not been heard from. Telephone and telegraph wires are down in all directions from the city, and the damage to the property of companies operating them will run several hundred thousand dollars.

Notices were sent out from the Rock Island and Santa Fe railroad offices that all service on their lines was suspended until further notice. No attempts to operate trains in any direction from Kansas city were made. Reports filtering in through the at crossroad regions told of similar conditions in all parts of Missouri, Kansas and Oklahoma.

Pittsburgh, Pa., Feb. 25.—With a blinding snowstorm falling, and with a rapidly lowering thermometer, Pittsburgh is in the grip of the worst blizzard of the winter season.

MURPHY FORCED OUT

TENER AND TAFT PUT CUBS' OWNER OUT OF BASEBALL.

Discord in League Stirred Up by Chicagoan is Suddenly Ended by His Resignation.

Chicago, Feb. 24.—Charles Webb Murphy has sold his stock in the Chicago National league club (the Cubs) and has resigned as president and director of that organization. His holdings in the Chicago club have been purchased by Charles P. Taft.

An announcement carrying the news that Mr. Murphy has sold out and quit the game was made in Cincinnati late yesterday following a meeting between Gov. John K. Tener of Pennsylvania, president of the National league, Mr. Taft, Harry Arkenland of Pittsburgh, a stockholder in the Chicago club, and John Conway Toole, a director of the Boston National league club and legal adviser to the National league.

There have been various reports as to the amount of money that would be required to buy out Murphy's control of the club. Some have set the figure at $500,000; others at $750,000. Frank Chance's ten per cent of the stock in the Cubs was bought by Ackermar when Chance quit for $10,000.

The crisis which forced Mr. Murphy out of the control of the Cubs developed a day or two ago. Monday and early dropped John Evers as manager of the club and named in his place Hank O'Day, the National league umpire.

GIVES BECKER TRIAL

GOTHAM POLICE LIEUTENANT UNDER DEATH SENTENCE GIVEN ANOTHER CHANCE.

FOUR GUNMEN ARE TO DIE

Appeal of Men Who Were Convicted of Actually Shooting Herman Rosenthal Were Denied and Must Die in Electric Chair.

Albany, N. Y., Feb. 26.—Charles Becker, the ex-lieutenant of police, now in the death house at Sing Sing, holder sentence to be electrocuted for the murder of Gambler Herman Rosenthal was granted a new trial on Tuesday. The decision was handed down by the state court of appeals on a plea made by counsel for Becker in December, 1913, and reversed the conviction.

Judge Werner dissented from the decision of his colleagues reversing the conviction which was reached before Justice Hisc.

There were 35 legal points made in the appeal for Becker last December. It was the contention of Attorney Palmer before the court that Samuel Schepps was an accomplice. The evidence that he had interviewed Becker at the latter's home subsequent to his arrest was a fabrication, he maintained.

Mr. Palmer also contended that Schepps' testimony was not corroborated within the meaning of the law. He also declared there had been a violation of the constitution in Becker's case in that his client had not had a fair and impartial trial.

Referring to the opening address of the prosecuting attorney was also taken.

The appeals of the four young gunmen, who were convicted of actually shooting Herman Rosenthal to death were denied and they must die in the electric chair.

The gunmen who must go to the chair are: Harry Horowitz, alias "Gyp the Blood," Louis Rosenberg, alias Lefty Louie," Frank Cirofici, alias "Dago Frank," and Frank Muller, alias "Whitey Lewis."

These men were convicted of shooting Herman Rosenthal to death in front of the Hotel Metropole, near Forty-second street and Broadway, in New York city, on the night of July 16, 1912.

STATE BANKS MAY ENTER

Organization Body of Reserve System Finds Institutions Entitled to Same Privileges Extended Nationals.

Washington, Feb. 26.—In order to enlarge the scope of the federal reserve system the organization committee issued rulings and regulations on the application of state banks under which state banks and trust companies may come into the system and become entitled to the same privileges as those extended to national banks. Not an attempt to send examination is required. The committee decided a state bank or trust company may make application for right to subscribe for stock in the federal reserve bank organized or to be organized in its locality. Provision is also made for the application for state banks and trust companies to become members of the federal reserve system by first being converted into national banks. Where such conversion is completed before the expiration of 60 days after the passage of the national bank act, these banks will be given until February 23, 1914, to accept the provisions of the act.

WHITE SLAVE LAW IS UPHELD

Supreme Court Favors Narrow Construction of Federal Statute—Act Not Unconstitutional.

Washington, Feb. 26.—Although standing firm for the constitutionality of the federal white slave law, the supreme court of the United states decided on Tuesday in favor of a narrow construction of the act in sustaining the demurrer of Charles Wilson, Fred Drew and Zoe Willard, to an indictment charging them in the federal court at Chicago accusing them of transporting two women for immoral purposes from Milwaukee Wis., to Evanston, Ill. The court held that the fact that the women were transported on a railroad not subject to the interstate commerce commission acted as a bar to prosecution. Ohio's excise law imposes a tax of four per cent on interstate gross earnings of all railroads in the state and special taxes on other corporations. Judge Sullivan was declared valid in a decision of the Supreme court.

SAVING LIFE by AEROPLANE

AN AEROPLANE SCOUT

HYDRO-AEROPLANE CAPABLE OF CARRYING EIGHT PASSENGERS

SAVED FROM DROWNING BY A HYDRO-AEROPLANE

THE aeroplane's career as a savior of lives in large numbers began as early as 1911, in the very war in which it first demonstrated its potentiality as an instrument of war, and the result shows that its potentiality was greater as an instrument of peace—a life saver.

Those who followed the development of the Italian-Turkish war will remember how at the very start of the campaign, before the first engagement took place, the newly landed Italians were saved from an unpleasant surprise by the aerial scouts who observed three advancing columns of Turks and Arabs of about 5,000 men. The Italians, after receiving this information, could successfully calculate distances and arrange for their defense.

On the following day, October 24, the battle of Sciara-Sciat took place, resulting in the loss to the Turkish army of 3,000 men. During the battle the aeroplanes saved a further loss. In the flight took place above the line of fire, so as to be able to direct the firing of the big guns from the battleship Carlo Alberto and also of the mountain artillery. The aeroplanes were sent out by the guns of the enemy, but with no results. The finding of the enemy was an informal event. The attempt of the Turks to cut off the retreat of the Italians would have met with a defeat which might have affected the whole campaign. Thus two men and two old, half worn aeroplanes saved a defeat which would have involved the loss of thousands of lives—as was the case in the Eritrea campaign—at a cost of possibly only a few dollars, the cost of a company current carried them apart. Shouts along the beach called out the rescuer, who was then was exhausted in the chilly water. Mr. Charles Wald, learning of the occurrence while at the hangar presently came in a motor boat with his machine and flew to the man in the water, and dropped life buoys to the drowning.

Alighting in the hydro-aeroplane on the water Strothman was able to make a life preserver to the young man, who was scarcely able to keep afloat, then, bringing the machine alongside the drowning man, helped to drag him out of the plane and brought him safely to the flight station.

Boats leaving the shore did not reach the rescue of the Italian boy, but the aeroplane was well on its way to shore with the rescued.

Mr. Glenn H. Curtiss, the dean of water flyers and creator of the hydro-aeroplane and flying boat, was the hero of a life-saving act last June, rescuing a drowning man. The man was found but with the big four-passenger flying boat of Mr. Harold F. McCormick, Mr. Curtiss and Mr. C. C. Witmer were flying over Lake Keuka in the boat to test it and were running for home shoal of a storm from Bluff shower, when, a mile from shore they noticed a motor boat in which two men were waving wildly.

Curtiss brought the flying boat to the water and stopped near the motor boat. The man their motor was broken and they wanted some one sent out to row them ashore. Mr. Witmer crawled out on the tail of the flying boat and took a rope from the motor boat, which he held while Curtiss drove the flying boat a mile ashore.

The airboat and hydro-aeroplane may be said to be the logical adjunct of life-saving stations, and, therefore, absolutely necessary. As an essential purpose they would be used in the life-saving crews and have people from drowning. Aviators are now being trained for such work. The aeroplane—the water kind—is revolutionary in this respect. It is, therefore, gratifying to find that the water aeroplane, the hydro-aeroplane and the flying boat seem destined to save life.

The hydro-aeroplane began its career as a life-saver in 1911, while still in the experimental period. It was during the famous Chicago meet when an aviator lost control while flying over Lake Michigan and fell into the water. Three quarters of a mile away there was a hydro-aeroplane, the early Curtis model—the prototype of the flying boat—circling around and occasionally settling on the surface of the water like a big seagull. The pilot of this craft, seeing the aviator's fall, went to the rescue. Flying at a mile a minute speed, he reached the spot, landed on the water by the submerged aeroplane and offered to take the aviator back with him. The aviator was saved.

Some months later, on March 6, 1912, two aviators fell in San Diego bay while flying and their machines capsized. An aviator on the shore saw the accident, jumped on his hydro with his mechanic and flew to the rescue, reaching the place later by the "shipwrecked" two.

The first documented case of actually rescuing a person not connected with aviation was given on October 16, 1912, by Charles Wald, instructor in the Wright school of wave flying at the Glenwood Country club. A man named Walter Strothman had fallen into the water, and in which he was seeking diversion with a friend. The rowboat was in the middle of the shore at Sea Cliff and fully a mile from the Glenwood Country club, when, miscalculating his position, Mr. Strothman attempted to swim to the shore and was in the water with the result that he fell overboard. Although his friend tried to swim to the companion, a strong current carried them apart. Shouts along the shore called out the rescuer, who was then was exhausted in the chilly water. Mr. Charles Wald, learning of the occurrence while at the hangar presently came in a motor boat with his machine and flew to the man in the water, and dropped life buoys to the drowning.

drop life belts, ropes, food, medicine or stimulants—according to the urgency of the needs.

With all the navies working to develop means for launching aeroplanes from battleships and receiving them back, it is safe to say that the problems connected therewith will be solved very soon. Then the navies will be equipped with life-carrying dirigibles and for general plot duties.

Just as the water aeroplane is a wonderful auxiliary of the navy, it is a wonderful auxiliary for ocean liners, promising to be the ideal passenger-carrying ships services of the highest kind.

The water aeroplane is wonderfully adapted for life-saving purposes. Its kind which was conceived at the steamship Titanic, and, in case such disasters take place, diminishes the loss of life. A flying boat on a steamer can rise to investigate unseen dangers ahead. It can do so at night as well as by using the ship's searchlights as the aeroplane's searchlights. In case of the vessel becoming disabled and unmanageable, it can be used for distributing the wireless apparatus, with which every flying boat is equipped, to the crafts that are close, to notify the other steamships of the need or of danger.

The most appalling thing in the Titanic disaster was the fact that a number of steamships within call distance were unable to help, as they were away—which the wireless telegram did not reach in sufficient time, and the steamships were too slow to keep afloat, then, bringing the machine alongside the drowning man, helped to drag him out of the plane and brought him safely to the flight station.

Boats leaving the shore did not reach the rescue of the Italian boy, but the aeroplane was well on its way to shore with the rescued.

HOW PAIN AFFECTS ANIMALS

Low Intelligence Makes Suffering Minor Matter—Less Terrible Than in Man.

It is a platitude that "pain is as one feels it." But that statement falls a considerable way short of the truth. The pain of a dog undoubtedly depends in part on his intelligence, in part on his conservative memory as vision sensation. In other words, the fraternized with the most highly developed imagination enjoys and suffers most vividly. Pain and pleasure are to most vividly. Pain and pleasure are in proportion as one is capable of taking to experience.

To children they are not terrible in this sense, because children have small experiences, and even smaller powers of imagin

DON'T TRIFLE WITH COUGHS OR COLDS.

Many Have Filled Consumptive Graves Because They Neglected a Cough or Cold.

You never know how soon a cold will become a serious malady. It may be in the head to-day; in the lungs tomorrow and the next day you may be fighting deadly pneumonia for your life. It's much the same with a cough. Inflamed and coughworn throat and lungs offer the best chance to consumption germs to begin their murderous work. There's only one way to prevent these deadly diseases getting a hold on you. As soon as a cough or cold attacks you, take Dr. King's New Discovery until you are entirely cured. Sometimes a dose or two will do the business, saving you suffering and a doctor's bill. Thousands of cures like these below prove its wonderful power to cure coughs and colds.

"I feel some of a duty to humanity," writes Mrs. Ellie Morton, Columbia, Mo., "for I believe I would have consumption today, if I had not used this great remedy."

"I take great pleasure in recommending your Dr. King's New Discovery for the benefit of suffering humanity. It's a thoroughly reliable remedy for all coughs, colds and lung troubles. We have used it in our family for fourteen years with the best results. It saved my mother when two doctors gave her up. She had a very severe case of pneumonia and was in bed seven weeks and part of the time 'out of her mind' so that she did not know me. I told father to get me two 50c bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery, which he did, and on taking it she soon began to improve, and four bottles cured her entirely. You may publish this if you wish and I will answer all inquiries, with postage enclosed for reply.

"Yours respectfully,
"Wm. Coggar."

Latest Foreign Affairs.

Mexico is one mass of alleged revolution. Great is the joy of carping at the present administration. It is the same everywhere. It means in Chicago that some one will soon be Postmaster. Perhaps in Washington people do begin to believe what they read about Mexico. Bullets often furnish news when most needed and at hours of leisure approved of by responsible editors.

Madero one time was called a brave and bold man. But she is now mostly referred to as a coward. Huerta is known as a bad man, and has run the whole from crooked to crazy.

Like most other absolute back numbers, Huerta is now kept in cold storage and common rods and cars. Handmade music is gradually being succeeded by the Victor voice artistic.

At one time music, singular as it may seem, was used to make money. Now it is used to make a noise.—Life.

Worth Listening At.

A man who was complaining of a cold ordered a dinner for himself and his party which, from the menu, should have been very palatable, but apparently it was not so. Course followed course, and toward the end of the meal the host could restrain himself no longer. He called to the waiter and expostulated. "I ordered a good dinner, and we have waited patiently for some substantial dish. The soup was a failure, the fish was a disappointment, the entree unmatchable, and I am sorry to tell you that during the whole dinner there has been nothing worth looking at." The waiter looked troubled for an instant, and then, enlightening, said, "If you will a moment, sir, I will bring you the bill."—Chicago News.

Servants in Bagnets.

The domestic problem is solved to a minimum in Bagnets. Good domestics are plentiful and cheap. Five to ten dollars a month is their pay. In the homes of the well to do the servants are well housed and lead happy lives. They have ample quarters of their own, contention round their own patio, and sociability in the kitchen and regime sufficient to make them really a part of the family.—"Columbia."

Enoch, the Egg King.

He Only Made One Condition Before Signing His Contract.

A tall, gaunt young man entered the office of the Globe museum and Family theater and asked for the manager. "What can I do for you?" inquired a pudgy man in a checked suit.

"I want an engagement as a freak in the curio hall."

"Who are you?"

"I am Enoch, the egg king."

"What is your specialty?"

"I eat three dozen raw eggs, two dozen duck eggs and one dozen goose eggs at a single sitting."

"I suppose you know our policy."

"What's that?"

"We give four shows every day."

"I understand that."

"And do you think you can do it?"

"I know I can."

"On Saturdays we often give as many as six shows."

"All right."

"And on some holidays we give a performance every hour."

The young man hesitated.

"In that case," he finally said, "I must have one thing understood before I sign a contract."

"What's that?" asked the manager.

"No matter how rushing business is at the museum," the egg king replied, "you gotta gimme time enough to eat my regular meals at the hotel."—Lippincott's.

Urgent Business.

A man called at the postoffice in a certain small town the other day and asked for the postmaster. He was told by the clerk that the postmaster was not in.

"When will he be in?" was asked.

"The postmaster will be in within half an hour. Is there anything I can do for you?" the clerk asked.

"No; I want to see the postmaster."

After awhile the man came back and asked again for the postmaster.

"He's not back yet," the clerk told him. "Is there anything I can do for you, or can I tell him something when he comes?"

"No, there isn't nothin' you can do, and I wishi the postmaster was here. I want to see if there's any mail for me, and I'm gettin' in a hurry."—Kansas City Star.

Blown Out.

Dump, thump! Crash! Bang! Bump! Down a long flight of stairs leading to the front door rolled some Scotch yelling with a lusty lungs at the bottom. The front door slammed nearly on a terse, bobbtailed, irate man who was rolling down his sleeves.

Inside a dainty girl came tripping across the hall.

"Oh, my—my, whatever have you been doing?" she asked in agonized tones.

The old man wiped away a bead of perspiration.

"Only outlines out the light of your life," he replied.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Not in Her Class.

"You know, it is stated that a man's heart beats 86,400 times a day," said young thing.

"Yes, every day."

"Well, if a young man's heart didn't beat more than that one day he would be prosecuted to use I'd consider him a prudent young conservative."—Yonkers Statesman.

Companionable.

That Is Evident.

"I've tried to propose to Mabel a dozen times, and bungled it. I can do it. I've almost every time."

"And she let you slump?"

"Yes."

He—No; he only thinks I ever knew of his going out with her was one when the gas exploded.—Pick Me Up.

Surprised.

THE BLAZED TRAIL, THE CONJUROR'S HOUSE, ETC. ETC.

ILLUSTRATED BY EDGAR BERT SMITH.

SYNOPSIS

Perry Darrow, young scientist in Philo McCarthy's laboratory in Boston, has just been dismissed on a telephone message ordering him to the Atlas Building to see Mr. McCarthy. He goes to the address given by the messenger to find a position with Mr. McCarthy, only to find the operating room in the Atlas building gone out of business. Darrow returns to his lodgings and finds a telegram from McCarthy, electric connections are ordered installed in his room and he is instructed to leave at eleven for Stamford. Darrow arrives at Stamford and finds that he has the entire floor of a house in one part of town. Perry learns that McCarthy is a "mediumistic" man. They visit McCarthy and offer to divulge the cause of his mysterious trouble. McCarthy has just received another attempt on his life, and he has been doing nothing out of season. Darrow is advised not to leave the building, as he is unfamiliar because he believes he is safe. He is told that if he leaves the house he will disappear as did Mr. Fox, which leaves Darrow in darkness and puzzled. Darrow escapes from his room and finds himself in a strange house. Perry finds himself in the house of Mr. Fox, becomes interested in the séance, and is recognized by the medium as the person who "brought the spirits." Darrow is recovered from a faint in the house of Mr. Fox and finds McCarthy has disappeared. Darrow returns to his room and finds a telegram from McCarthy, dated at Albany, N. Y., ordering Darrow to go home. The same remark applies to the woman who looks on a dinner properly selected and carefully served with the same accompaniment of glittering glass and polished silver as merely a pandering to the brutal appetite of man.

"This was told by an expert who has studied the question.

"If mothers could only teach their daughters," he added, "to enjoy their food and make it a joy for the husband, there would be fewer disastrous marriages."

"The majority of women cry with black lead and do not understand the enjoyment that a large meal will give.

What has become of the old fashioned year with four well defined seasons?

New York has added 500 policemen to the rolls. Three New Yorkers are needed for punishment.

Late Current Events.

In the Mexican trouble a crisis seems to be rapidly developing, and intervention is more than likely to take place. Both houses of congress have awakened to the seriousness of the situation, and it does not seem likely that the president can much longer hold down "the lid."

There is little doubt that congress will soon act favorably on the president's request that the discriminating clause of the canal tolls regulation, and repeal it. The president seems to have inside information that there are very delicate questions in the matter of foreign relations that demand such action.

Common Council

At the council meeting Monday night the street commissioner, harbor master and city engineer were instructed to establish a dock line on the south side of Round Lake.

A resolution was passed submitting to the voters at the coming election the question of abolishing the board of public works.

Not It's Place to Laugh.

"Pa, what is the columbine written of, and to tell an amusing story of a theatrical manager who once shved his box at a provincial pantomime. When the principal comedian entered and did his best the manager, with a scowl on his brow, leaned over to Mr. Wood and remarked: 'I want to engage that man for next Christmas to do my production.'

"Do you think he is funny?" Mr. Wood asked.

"Screamingly funny," returned the manager.

"Then why don't you laugh?" asked Mr. Wood.

"Because when he's got his eyes on me!" replied the manager. "And every time I laugh he'll ask another fiver a week."—London Telegraph.

Not Guilty as Alleged.

The man had been accused of committing an assignation by flashing a mirror in the eyes of passersby.

"You are quite mistaken," he said to the big policeman. "I haven't any mirror. What these people saw was the reflection of my shining nose. I'm a married man, and the cost is four years old."

And, turning hastily, he threw the dazzling reflection from his back and shivers into the policeman's startled eyes. And by the time the officer recovered he was well on his way.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Chas. R. Bolinger left yesterday for Muskegon to visit his daughter, Mrs. Walter Dennis.

John Wagley and wife of Cross Village, were in the city a few days the week visiting relatives.

The Hotel Elston reopened its doors to the public last Thursday under the management of Mrs. Noble.

B. L. Herman, who has been in Chicago and southern Michigan for a month, returned home Thursday.

J. I. Crane leaves this week for Chicago, a two weeks' stay, for the purpose of selecting his spring goods. Mrs. Crane will accompany him.

Chas. Gordon left Monday morning for South Manitou Island to join the steamtugs Crouse as engineer. The Crouse is fishing out of that port.

Frank M. Glassford is entertaining his brother, James Glassford, of Flint. Mr. Glassford is accompanied by his wife and they are here for a two weeks' stay.

A marriage license was issued last week to Francis W. Matchett, aged 24, of Marion township, Charlevoix county, and Gertrude Spidle, aged 20, of Hudsontownship, Antrim county.

The SENTINEL job office is doing some mighty fine work these days. Call in and see some of it. The SENTINEL job equipment and machinery is second to none in the county.

To the General Public!

The annual report of the financial condition of the Bank, made, in accordance with the law, in October 1913, and was published in the Charlevoix Courier, copies of the report can be examined at the City Clerk's office.

In next week's issue will appear the trial balance showing the condition of the various city funds on the first day of March 1914.

On March 1, 1913 the General Funds showed a cash balance of ... $4,717.07
And the Special Improvement Funds of ... $7,197.46
On March 1, 1914 the General Funds showed a cash balance of ... $10,378.13
And the Special Improvement Funds of ... $[illegible]

The special improvement funds are these funds out of which the funds for building sewers and the paving of the streets are paid and can be used for no other purpose.

The cash in the General Funds is derived chiefly from the taxes of last year, which are the only taxes levied by the city, and the money received for water and electric current.

All obligations of the city maturing between March 1, 1913 and March 1, 1914 held by investors have been paid. All general bonds and all improvement bonds have been paid as they became due. Notes have been refunded.

In 1912 the city issued four Tax Orders, drawn on the General Funds, these are not general or improvement bonds.

One due August 20, 1913 at 6 per cent for ... $3,000.00
One due August 20, 1914 at 6 per cent for ... $1,003.00
One due August 20, 1915 at 6 per cent for ... $1,000.00
One due August 20, 1916 at 6 per cent for ... $1,000.00

These orders were issued, but the city treasurer was instructed to use $6,000.00 of the special improvement money, to pay the interest, and the city's sinking funds was used to pay a portion of the city's share for paving Main avenue.

This year the city paid out of its general funds into the proper special sinking funds the sum of $4,500.00 yet to be paid on the above time orders.

When the annual budget was adopted the city decided it was better to pay the amount of these time orders as they are needed to pay the outstanding bonds against the Michigan and Dixon avenues paving fund, out of which the money was taken, the last bond of which falls due October 17, 1916. The budget as reported to the council provided for $1,500 to be paid each year, which with the money said due on the special assessment will pay the bonds as they come due.

Another reason for this change was due to the fact that no more bonds were issued by the city in 1912, the tax payers were paying into the general funds taxes at the rate of $18.00 for every one thousand dollars of assessed valuation, and the city in 1912, no doubt anticipated the same rate would be levied, but instead the "Home rules" city tax rate was reduced to $10.00 for every one thousand dollars of assessed valuation.

This explanation is given so that the public might know the exact condition of the city finances. It is evident from the large cash balance in the general funds that the entire issue of $6,000.00 in Time Orders could have been paid this year and still left the city in a better financial condition than on March 1, 1913, and it is also evident that the tax rate can be lowered still further, which the present administration agrees to do if continued in office.

Respectfully yours,
HARRY NICHOLLS, Mayor.
L. S. See, Chairman of Finance Committee.

Address, Box 1, Charlevoix, Mich.

"Do You Remember?"

Yes, we remember when, in 1882, L. D. Bartholomew came here from Spring Lake and built the house on Park avenue, which was demolished last fall.

And we remember a few years later when he built another house, (and which was removed years ago) on the vacant lot directly opposite the S. M. See & Sons store.

We remember when Mr. Bartholomew and Morris Steekman bought the steamer Clara Bells from Hannah Lay & Co., and brought her here for the upper lake trade. Ed. Kemp was the engineer, and we remember that Ed. was in this city only last week relating yarns and talking over old times with the writer.

We remember when, in 1869, the writer arriving at "Pine River," found Nelson Ainslie and family living in a house just south of the present Sentinel building. And we remember that it was the first frame house built in what is now Charlevoix. (1855.) And we remember that the house was built by Mrs. Daniel Williams, then Mrs. Van Riper, whose husband was drowned in the "Sun."

We remember when Alden Chamberlain and wife lived in the little house among the poplars over where the new Chicago Club boat house now stands.

We remember big "pigeon year," 1872, when millions of pigeons nested along the entire north shore of Pine Lake, and when pigeon hunters came from far and near to net them. We remember that Newton A. Hatch, now living in this city, came from New England with the crowds, and that he has been known to the old settlers as "Pidge" ever since.

We remember that George Hughes, now nearly a hundred years old, nested thousands of the birds. And we remember how, when the sky was darkened with the flying myriads, we stood on bluffs now flanking Park avenue and knocked scores of the birds to earth with clubs.

And, going back to Ed. Kemp, the lessons learned, (and to above, we remember that in the days of his prime, he is now 70) although always a good citizen, was physically a bad man to tackle. We remember hearing them say, when he was a young man, (and to Macatawa to clean up on Ed. Kemp struck him but one, and that was enough. But a few days after a friend came to Ed. and advised him that a bunch of them was in town to avenge the fate of their chum. "O pshaw," said Ed., "I licked them as fast as they came over."

We remember when, in '68, there were but two stores on either arm of Pine Lake—Sol Isaacs on the South Arm side of the lead, and William Rowe at the mouth of Moores Creek. We remember that where East Jordan now stands there was not one solitary house.

We remember when, in 1868, before we came to "Pine River," we went across country from Bellaire with a party on a hunting and fishing expedition. We remember camping in the woods on the spot where now stands the East Jordan Lumber Co. store. We remember augmenting our dinner with rutabagas taken from Lake Kellar's hole in the bank, half a mile distant.

Oh, we remember a lot of things.

The County Jail Full

For the first time in years the Charlevoix county jail has a number of boarders. Besides those heretofore mentioned, Joseph Bennett, "horse man," who registered Thursday for a 90 days stay, four more have been added to the list the past week.

Ed Smith, of Boyne City, is in on a charge of wife desertion and injury. On the first named charge he was in court in the January term, but was let out on probation under bond, on his promise to support his family. He jumped his bond and again abandoned his family. He was found at Port Huron married to another woman; to whom he had represented himself as a widower.

Jack Taylor, who but a short time ago served thirty days for jumping a Ferguson House board bill, was brought back from St. Ignace last week, on a charge of carrying concealed weapons.

Frank Foreman, of Boyne City, is charged with forging his father's name to a check and cashing it at a Boyne City bank. The bank caused his arrest.

On Monday Judge Mayne gave Taylor a ticket for one to two years at Ionia, and Smith got one to three years, with the recommendation of three.

CHANGE OF SYSTEM

Beaver Island Cable to Pass into Direct Connection With East Telephone Lines

Three years ago last fall negotiations were pending for some time between the U. S. Weather Bureau at Washington and the Bell Telephone Co., centre Michigan office at Grand Rapids, on the proposition to connect the Island cable and the local and long distance lines of the telephone company at Charlevoix. There was a lengthy correspondence between the two headquarters, (a copy of which is before us.)

At that time Willis L. Moore, ex-chief of the weather bureau, and J. H. Robinson was chief of the telephone division of the bureau. Mr. Moore has since left the service, and Mr. Robinson died two years ago. By order of the chief tests were made with long distance lines, and the limit of successful conversation was conceded by the telephone people to be 150 miles, and this only under good weather conditions. Meantime the telephone company negotiated terms that Mr. Moore could not accept, and under date of Jan. 14, 1911, Mr. Moore wrote the telephone people as follows:

"In reply to your letter of the 10th inst., as you have failed to agree with our proposition of December 19, 1910, it has been decided that no change will be made in the present plan of working the Beaver Island cable."

Under the same date Mr. Robinson wrote the local manager as follows:

On January 27th of that year (1911) Mr. Moore advised the local manager as follows:

"I believe that satisfactory service is now being rendered, and there is no reason why we should give a monopoly to anybody."

The present winter negotiations were resumed, and as we understand, whereby the telephone company takes over all the business of the cable, beginning April first. The deal was made through the Chicago office of the weather bureau.

A telephone official informs us that an effort will be made to estimate farmer and party lines on the Island in connection with the service.

Going Into Business

Last week C. L. Gonser has leased the Wire store building, next door to the Sentinel office, and will open up a "New Variety Store," embracing five ten cent counters, to which will be added several new features in lines that cannot fail to appeal to the public.

The firm will be "C. L. & S. M. Gonser," which means that Mrs. Gonser will be associated actively with her husband in the business. Everybody knows "Charlie," whose health compelled him to "quit" the railroad business after a most enviable record, as the ability and popularity of Mrs. Gonser will be valuable assets in the new venture.

The building will be put in shape at once, and the goods will begin to arrive by the time navigation is open.

The Pere Marquette

At a meeting of Pere Marquette stockholders Monday afternoon directors were chosen, of whom eleven are men living on the lines of the Pere Marquette. They are as follows: Frank H. Merriam, of Detroit; William L. Clements, of Bay City; James B. Potter, of Saginaw; William E. Roach, of Hart; B. F. Davis, of Lansing; Albert J. Sweger, of Bad Axe; William A. Gordon, of Chicago, and Frank H. Blair, Dudley E. Waters and Samuel Felton, the survivors of the fired. The four additional directors, not living on the line of the road are F. H. Prince and E. V. R. Thayer of Boston.—F. W. Stevens and Wm. H. Porter of New York.

A fact that is well worth remembering is that property valuation in Canada never have never taken a "slump."

Increase in real estate values may have been slow, but nevertheless there has been, in the four decades, an increase and there has been no decline at any time.

What Charlevoix has gained it has held. We have never had a boom, and we have never had a "slump."

There was a lengthy correspondence between the two headquarters, (a copy of which is before us.)

Northern Michigan

Petoskey News: Clarence Purchin, known as the Pellston "wild man" has been captured by Marshal Tussue of Pellston. He was brought to the county jail here for safe keeping until the arrival of Sheriff Rasmussen of Stanton, who wants him for alleged grand larceny. Purchin has been living in a hook on the outskirts of Pellston and has kept everybody away with his threats to be captured alive. Marshal Tussue, accompanied by a friend, went to the vicinity of woods where Purchin roved and spent most of the day hunting rabbits. They were dressed as lumberjacks and Purchin was taken off his guard. While talking with him, Tussue slipped his revolver and placed him under arrest.

Petoskey News: George C. Keech, of St. Ignace, who last winter attracted much attention through his feat of carrying the mail and passengers from that ferry when it was fast in the ice on the Straits of Mackinaw, passed through Petoskey a few days ago on his famous dog team. Mr. Keech left St. Ignace at noon Monday and spent the night at Alanson, leaving there at 7 o'clock Tuesday morning and arriving at Petoskey at noon of that day. He says the ice is unusually rough on the straits and in crossing, one of his dogs injured the foot of his left shoulder, lame and making him less willing in the harness. The dog team was the first seen in Petoskey in a long time and proved quite a curiosity.

Boyne City Journal: One of the vilest crimes ever perpetrated upon the general public was attempted in this city a short time ago when a farmer by the name of Pitkosky living near Petoskey, had infected meat to a local meat dealer. He brought five hogs to the city which had died from cholera and the meat in stages of decay. They were purchased at about a dollar apiece and were not detected until the next morning, by this time the meat had reached consumers in the village and was noticed before sold to a customer. The carcasses were taken out of the market immediately and the state food and dairy department notified. In answer to the complaint of J. Hibbard, inspector of food and drugs, Mabie, arrived in our city yesterday. He investigated and swore out a complaint for Calinsky which was served today.

The Sleeping Bear, which is one of most interesting points along the shore of Lake Michigan, is beginning to attract the attention that it deserves. This Bear is a big one, even for a bear. It is a sand bluff that rises miles long and one mile wide and the highest point is 450 feet above the level of Lake Michigan. The Bear gets its name from a small forest that grows on its back. From one direction it looks far out in Lake Michigan, this forest has the appearance of a bear. The bluff is one of the landmarks along the shore of the lake and references to it are found in the journals of the early explorers. A point is now on foot to attract visitors to the place. Invitations are being extended to various parties of prominence to visit this point among the places that they stop for sight-seeing.

Petoskey Chronicle: The men in the Bear Lake bluff a few rods from the West Michigan Pike, it is safe to presume that many of the tourists travelling over the Pike, will stop long enough to scale the sand hill and gaze at the nature of Lake Michigan and adjacent the Manitou Islands to be seen to the north.

H. H. White, of the White Co., now interested in the building and operating of a railroad between Gaylord and Alpena, says that is now in the hands of receiver, says that he is unable to say whether his company will take up the work of completing the road, or the unfinished part of the road west of Alpena, but in any event work will depend upon the attitude of the people of Alpena toward the company. The White people demand a franchise through the city of Alpena without any restrictions and the Alpena city government has thus far declined to give a franchise without compliance with its other restrictions. It has leaked out that the people of the Alpena council refusing the exclusive franchise to White is due to the strong prospect of securing for Alpena the certain territories of the Manistee & Northeastern railroad which is now extended east of Gaylord, and is not much more to build than the Bear River route. The Manistee railroad is now extended east of Gaylord and has the great furnaces of the Steel Trust at Gary, Ind.

GALE STOPS TRAFFIC

TRAINS ARE LOST IN SNOW STORM, LINERS CANNOT ENTER OR LEAVE PORT.

15 PERSONS LOSE LIVES

Eastern Blizzard Worst in Quarter of Century—Scores of People Injured —Milk Famine Threatens—New York Isolated.

New York, March 4.—More than fifteen persons are dead, scores have been injured and hundreds are in peril on land and sea in a blizzard which has been sweeping the Atlantic seaboard for 24 hours.

Business in this city was paralyzed on Monday. Fourteen inches of snow has fallen. Rail traffic is at a standstill and wire communication is badly crippled.

Down found this city isolated. Telegraph and telephone service was badly crippled, many wires going down in the wind and snow.

Scores of trains bearing commuters into the city were blockaded. Street car and elevated traffic was seriously impaired. Hundreds of miles of city streets were absolutely impassable.

Six vessels were reported to have been wrecked in the gale off the New England coast.

Train service was tied up entirely. The Congressional limited, one of the crack trains on the Pennsylvania, bound from Washington to this city, stuck in a snow drift outside of Trenton.

The New York Central, the Erie, the Central railroad of New Jersey, the Delaware & Hudson and the Lackawanna all experienced similar difficulties.

Four New York Central trains were reported lost between this city and England coast.

The monetary loss from the storm will be enormous.

With 19 steamers, nine of them big ocean liners, held as well as by wind gale since that of 1887, fears are felt for the safety of the vessels may most with disaster.

The stoppage of railroad traffic threatens a milk famine, as trains bearing the city's milk supply were unable to enter.

Thirty-two men are hopelessly facing death on eight steel beams anchored in a fifty-mile gale off Fire Island. On shore life savers are watching the imperiled vessels, but unable to launch a rescuing boat in the mountainous seas, as the wind is blowing directly toward the dangerous coast.

Philadelphia, March 4.—Five persons lost their lives in the terrific blizzard which swept this city early Sunday. Snow was still falling at noon, being piled into high drifts by a high wind. Steam and electric traffic was at a standstill and city communication was badly crippled. Trains arriving here from the west on the Pennsylvania railroad were from six hours late, the snowfall being exceptionally heavy in the Allegheny mountains.

Wreckage on the tracks of the Reading held up traffic on that line. The thermometer was 16 degrees above zero.

New Brunswick, N. J. March 4.—Vice-President Marshall was a passenger on a Pennsylvania railroad train which was snowbound in the snow near the local station about midnight on Sunday and was still there early in the afternoon. The train was bound from New York to Philadelphia. The westbound track of the Pennsylvania here is blocked by fallen wires and poles.

Cleveland, O., March 4.—Cleveland was staggered by another blizzard by which traffic was greatly delayed.

DISASTER ON STORM-SWEPT ATLANTIC COAST

The Italian bark Castagne, driven ashore and wrecked at Wellfleet, Mass., during the fierce storm that swept the Atlantic coast. The captain and four of the crew lashed themselves to the rigging and were frozen to death. The bodies of the captain and four of the crew lashed themselves to the rigging and were frozen to death. The bodies of the captain being taken from the train at Boston, and that on the right one of the eight survivors being assisted from the care.

TAFT ADMONISHES WILSON

SAYS INTERVENTION MEANS USELESS LOSS OF LIFE.

Former President Expresses His Views on Mexico Problem in Address at Capital.

Washington, March 2.—Former President Taft took a hand in the Mexican problem Friday. In a speech before the National Geographic society he warned the administration against intervention. The cost in money and lives he said, would be enormous and the results of doubtful benefit.

The situation is in such a condition, Mr. Taft said, that it would be impossible for me to comment on it, except to say this: That those who habitually look forward to intervention as the end to which they directly tend are either utterly regardless of the loss of life and the expenditure of the treasure involved, or else they don't understand what armed intervention on the part of this government in Mexico would involve.

Those of us who have had experience in the peacemaking of a foreign country with a people not very different from the Mexicans, who are naturally to guerilla warfare and would rather fade and run than engage in open battle, know that it would have to meet to accomplish the only purpose for which we are talking of—the bringing about of law and order.

It would involve the garrisoning with a sufficient force of every town, it would involve the occupation of columns to chase the guerillas into their mountain fastnesses and scour the lonesome desert plains and the adjoining forests of Mexico.

"I don't know when we would get through, I don't know how many lives would be lost, I don't know how much it would cost, but I do know it would be a long, long, long time, when we for the thing done the future would still be a bone of contention between us and our neighbor and our treasury."

Information Given to State Department at Washington Shows That Benton Was Murdered in Villa's Office—Investigators Halted.

Washington, March 4.—In an attempt to ascertain what foundation there may be for charges that the United States Steel corporation has received, during the last six years, illegal rebates from the railroads on freight charges, Commissioner Harlan of the Interstate commerce commission examined David Lamar of New York and William H. Green of Nebraska Monday, upon whose allegations the senate based a resolution requesting the commission to inquire into the matter.

Lamar testified that during the last six years the steel corporation had received not less that $750,000 in rebates from railroads direct evidence of which could be obtained by examination of the books of the corporation and subsidiary transportation companies.

ASKS HIGHER DUTY

LOUISIANA SEEKS SUPREME COURT AID TO GET A 50 PER CENT. DUTY ON SUGAR.

SUIT AIMED AT TARIFF ACT

Action by House Committee on Rules Assures Investigation of Grain "Trust" at Chicago, Minneapolis and Duluth

Washington, March 5.—The state of Louisiana on Tuesday asked leave of the Supreme court of the United States to file a suit for injunction against Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo and Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Hamlin to prevent them from assessing a duty of only 40 per cent of the Dingley tariff rate on sugar imported from Cuba and ordering them to collect a duty of 80 per cent, of such duty on Cuban sugar.

This suit is aimed at the validity of the free sugar section of the Underwood tariff law. The court took the request under advisement. Former Senator Joseph W. Bailey of Texas is counsel for the state, which is acting in the interest of the sugar cane growers.

Under the Cuban reciprocity treaty, Cuban sugar received a 20 per cent preferential under the Dingley rates. Under the Underwood tariff law, a reduction of 20 per cent in the duty was assessed upon all sugar was made. Louisiana claims that the law making the Cuban reciprocity treaty effective never has been repealed and that the McAdoo calculations are unlawful. The treasury now is collecting upon Cuban sugar at a duty of 40 cents per pound, whereas Louisiana claims the tariff duty should be 1.25 cents per pounds.

The case confirmed the testimony of Oliver C. Harper of California to be register of the land office at Independence, Cal., before the senate committee.

An Investigation of the grain "trust" at Chicago, Minneapolis and Duluth was assured by the house committee on rules on Tuesday. During the hearing on the resolution introduced by Representative Manahan of Minnesota for an investigation of charges revealed to committee Chairman Henry suggested that the rules committee itself hold extensive hearings and go into every phase of the situation, and then refer its findings to the house, with recommendations for legislation. Ordinarily the committee would hold only preliminary hearings, and then report to the house whether a more extensive inquiry should be appointed to proceed with the investigation.

Milwaukee Police Seek Identity of Mexican Held at Hospital.

Milwaukee, March 5.—In Ralph Lopez, Mexican bandit who shot four citizens and deputy sheriffs at Bingham, Utah, and for whom a reward has been offered from the Utah-Apex mine, a nationwide search has been conducted, a patient in the Milwaukee County hospital. The police have information furnished by County Physician A. F. Young, are conducting an investigation here and have suspected it was an Italian refugee, was visited by Detective Smith and convinced of the misidentity. He raised one dollar bills to ten dollars. Three other men were questioned in the case. Mennerich was sentenced to Chester penitentiary and released last year. In 1910 he married Dona Nolen, daughter of Edward Nolen of Windsor, Ill. They separated in December, and on January 16 she died out of divorce. Mrs. Mennerich was arrested in Springfield, but was released.

WOMAN GUILTY OF MURDER

Mrs. Cynthia Buffum of Little Valley, N. Y., Convicted of Killing Husband and Babe.

Little Valley, N. Y., March 2.—Mrs. Cynthia Buffum was found guilty of the murder in the first degree of her husband and daughter on Friday. The verdict not only stunned the woman and her counsel, but caused a demonstration of astonishment in the little court room. The jury was out five hours and twenty minutes.

SEEN AND HEARD IN MICHIGAN

Manistique.—Elmer Russell, a colored waiter on the Soo line diner, fell under his train near here. He died shortly after.

Gladstone.—Gladstone claims the first year in which only eight teeth were extracted. It is a boy. The parents are Mr. and Mrs. Edward Hogenschutz, of this south side fully developed.

Manistee.—St. James hotel burned with a loss of $15,000. This is the third fire in the building during the last week. Police arrested one suspect, but he escaped by squirming out of his sweater.

Ironwood.—The grocery store and residence of John Peterson burned while the family were at church. Its origin is unknown. It spread throughout the entire building. The loss is $16,000.

Menominee.—The explosion of a steam gauge in a logging locomotive fatally burned Fireman John Hoban, twenty years old, single, of Powers. Hoban remained until his hands and face were cooked.

Escanaba.—Arrest in Chicago of Pete Marquette, telegraph operator here Wednesday, was the result sifted by barking freight cars and a crossing watchman after delivering dispatches to the engineer of a second freight.

Grand Rapids.—Governor Ferris led the grand march at the M. S. N. A. ball given in his honor by Mr. McKnight. The arrangement was rather odd, as the wife of the new Knight are known to be political enemies.

St. Johns.—Mr. and Mrs. John Kelly, prominent farmers living two miles west of this city, celebrated their golden wedding anniversary March 1 with a mass of thanksgiving for the parents of ten children, nearly all of whom will be home on the farm.

Holland.—Friends of Rev. S. Van Goor, who was injured by the death in Paterson, N. J., where he was pastor of the Second Christian Reformed church. Rev. Dr. Van Goor came to America 22 years ago and on his arrival was pastor of the Old Van Raalte church in Holland.

Ishpeming.—In an effort to save his team from being crushed by a train on the Wabash railroad Will Hall, bode narrowly escaped death when he was struck by the car and hurled 40 feet. He was stunned for a moment and walked a mile to a doctor's office. He will lose two broken ribs. The team escaped.

Battle Creek.—Albert I. Webb, pastor of the First Baptist church, Haverhill, Mass., and one of the leading English pastors of the Bay state, has accepted the call to the pulpit of the First Baptist church here. He will succeed Rev. B. Frank Battle.

Saginaw.—Plans are being made for the initiation of a class of 75 by the local council, Knights of Columbus, Feb. 11. It expected that seven hundred knights from neighboring cities will be present. Special degrees will be given, the first by a team from Saginaw, second by Bay City, and the third by the team from Flint. Mayor John Kelley of Ann Arbor will be the principal speaker.

Vassar.—Mrs. Matthew Carpenter, aged 75, died at her home, and one-half miles southeast of here, at Cobb's Crossing, in Vassar township, while driving a horse and buggy in company with her fifteen-year-old grandson, Arthur D. Cobb, a Pere Marquette telegraph operator, was killed. Mrs. Carpenter's husband was also killed. Her husband was killed by lightning two and one-half years ago.

Jackson.—A freight train and engine ties of the Michigan central in Jackson prison an hour. The tracks, two Jackson prisoners and their prison yards through large iron gates. After the switch engine had backed into the yard the gates had closed but when a guard was endeavoring to open the gates he broke the key in the lock. Efforts to remove the broken key were unavailing, and it was necessary to secure the services of an immate before the gates were opened.

Ionia.—The jury in the case of Elizabeth Taylor vs. James Deming, for a $15,000 suit for alleged seducing of Lowell, and their business, the Michigan Bondsmen's Surety company, gave a verdict in favor of Mrs. Taylor for $1,000 damages. Attorney Dwyer, counsel of the plaintiff, died in a Lowell jail, April 1. It was charged he got liquor in the Lowell saloons. Two other cases brought by the mother and daughter of Taylor may be settled.

Pontiac.—Hubert Moore, arrested by Sheriff Oliver at Lake Orion, charged with obtaining money under false pretenses, confessed to the theft of $2,000 from Mrs. Ella S. Irish then R. Bylock of this city. The cash was sold by the Irish woman when Moore, a resident. He denies being a relative of Bylock. He was arrested in Detroit as an auto bandit.

Pontiac.—Charles H. Scully of Lansing, who was sentenced last April at a session of the farmers' institute, signed the confession of weeds and giving the farmers advice on how to combat this great farm evil.

Jackson.—Caption Scyrock, serenty-five years, of Brooklyn, two miles south of Jackson, was found dead in his bed at his home, and according to a report received at the sheriff's office it is believed that he was murdered. It is said that her throat was cut. Mr. Scyrock, who had been a resident of Jackson county all his life, had lived alone on the farm where he was found.

Lansing.—Amos Rolff of Milnds township, Lapeer, instantly killed in a mill accident. One arm was torn off and he was caught in a moving belt.

WHAT AN OHIOAN

HAS TO SAY ABOUT CONDITIONS IN WESTERN CANADA.

W. E. Lewis formerly lived near Dayton, Ohio. He went to Saskatchewan seven years ago with $1,200 in money, a carload of household effects and farm implements, including four horses and three cows. Of course, the first year he only got feed from the crops, but the second year had 300 acres in wheat which made over 7,000 bushels. He has not had a failure in crop, and at present has 22 head of horses, 15 head of cattle and 35 hogs, and owns 1,120 acres of land, all under cultivation. He has been offered $25 an acre for his land, and should be care to dispose of his holdings he could pay all his debts and have $20,000 to the good, but, as he says, "Where could I go to invest my money and get as good returns." He continues in his letter to the immigration department, August, 1912:

"We have equally as good if not better prospects for crops this year as we had three years ago, when our wheat ranged from 30 to 40 bushels per acre. I never believed such crops could be raised until I saw them myself. I had 15 acres that year that made 40 bushels to the acre. Our harvest will be ready by the 15th. We have the season in crop 600 acres of wheat, 135 of oats, 60 of flax and run three binders with four men to do the stooking. We certainly like this country and the winters, although the winters are cold at times, but we do not suffer as one would think. We have accomplished here can be duplicated in any part of the new districts."—Advertisement.

Emotions Expressed in Dancing.

In the Netherlands, in some of which date back 6,000 years before Christ, there is steady reference to dancing as an expression of religious worship, and even the deepest grief. It is the custom, in the Netherlands of the Persians. Dancing with symbols and expressions of joy, is allied to their ankles and wrists or around the entrances in the temples must understand.

ERUPTION ON ANKLE BURNED

Niagaville, Mo.—"My trouble began about twenty years ago. Sometimes at the time there were running sores scattered on my ankles, sometimes it would be two years at a time before they were healed. There were many nights I did not sleep because of the great suffering. The sores were deep ruptures and so sore that I could not bear for anything to touch them. They would burn all the time and sting like a lot of bees were confined around my ankles. I could not bear to touch it, it was always so sensitive to the touch. I could not let my mother do it, the pain was very red. I made what I called a cap out of white felt, blotting paper and soft

GRAND TRAVERSE REGION HAS YIELDED GREAT CROPS OF APPLES FOR YEARS

Scene on Jolliffe Farm in Banks Township, Antrim County.

By H. J. DANIELS.

In 1862-63 the territory now called the Grand Traverse region was extensively advertised for settlement and many people left various parts of the country and journeyed thither. In that early day it was recognized that the Traverse country would eventually be a great fruit country and that of the earliest settlers at once set out apple trees. Thus it is that today in that part of Michigan there are many orchards that have been yielding large crops for half a century.

Among the early settlers those who have known the glories of that region for half a century is John J. Jolliff, of Antrim county, just east of Grand Traverse county, who was attracted there by the wonderful stories he had heard about the promised land in northern Michigan. The railroads were then just penetrating the north, and the Chicago line of boats had not yet started. Mr. Jolliffe left Wisconsin with a party of land seekers crossing Lake Michigan from Milwaukee to Ferrysburg, and thence north in two boats from the picking. That cannot be done in most diseases in Michigan this season of the year.

One of the delightful drives out from Traverse City is the new road, running north alongside Grand Traverse bay, a road that is a delight to the automobilist and one that reveals the fruit country the whole length of the peninsula, where no one travels who does not get envious of the fruit growers who are literally living in cherry time.

East Bay Road, Grand Traverse County.

by ox teams. They sized up all the land along Lake Michigan until they came to Antrim county. Here Mr. Banks township they located and ever since have lived, Jolliffe and his friends all became prosperous. He had been a rich grower of a large farm in Wisconsin, and coming to Michigan he continued apple growing as one of his special farming products. He has been eminently successful and is counted one of the leading fruit growers in the north on that subject. The appearance of the trees in the accompanying picture is the best evidence that he erected a valuable piece of property.

If the Grand Traverse region is accounted the best all-round fruit country in Michigan, it must be admitted that the land in that section is due in great part to the fine roads. There is some sand, it is true, but for the most part the roads are better than in any other part of the state for the same amount of tillable acreage. Good hard roads run from Traverse City for up into the peninsula, where a fruit farm of any considerable size means comfort and independence. If the owner is "onto his job" as a fruit grower. With an automobile transformed into a truck, or with a good team, the fruit man, any day in summer or in the fall, can hustle a load of fruit to Traverse City from any point in that country in not more than two hours and if he has a small horsepower auto he can deliver the choicest fruit the boat in the early evening before the boat starts, within northern Michigan was taken up by the newspaper man of the northwestern part of the state with Cadillac as a center, with the result that 13 newspaper men started the project and each succeeding year have put on a fine fair, probably second only to the state fairs in Detroit and Grand Rapids. Traverse City has received its old Grand Traverse region fair, Saginaw has fallen into line, and all over the state there has been a resumption of the old-time fairs, with some additions in towns where it was never customary to hold fairs. Owosso, in the center of a fine agricultural territory, seeks with a fair and the improvement association, similar to a board of trade, has taken the matter up last. It fell by the wayside. There are indications that next September will see a typical county fair there. Not for over 30 years has there been a fair in that city.

PLANS MODEL ORCHARD.

W. E. Wickert, an Escanaba business man, like many another Michigan business and professional man, is forming the hope that in the years to come, and preferably in the not too distant future, he will have a fruit farm brought up to the way it should be to produce him a comfortable income and a line of activity that will be a joy. In preparation for that happy time he will during the coming spring set out 15 acres to 3,000 cherry trees, 100 apple trees, 1,000 blackberry bushes, 1,000 red raspberry bushes and 1,000 currant bushes. Upper Michigan apples and small fruits are famous the winters are cold at times, but we claire the region cannot be beaten for location and climatic conditions for cherry growing. The Wickert fruit farm has been named "Cherry Crest."

BUY GRAZING LAND.

The Turtle Lake club, extensive game preserve in the northwestern portion of the lower peninsula, has just purchased 2,150 acres of grazing lands in Cheboygan county, whereon sheep and cattle will range. The land is considered ideal for that purpose. The Turtle Lake club now possesses 37,360 acres of land in Alpena, Montmorency and Oscoda counties, a tract eight miles square. The club proposes to keep the best grades of stock on this immense ranch. The new purchase will be fenced in, the same as the other pieces.

EXPECT MANY SETTLERS.

A large number of new settlers is looked for the coming spring near Tenney, Limestone township, Alger county. The new farmers will find that among other crops oats do fine there. Some years ago a 10 acre lot located there on a new piece of land. Last season he sowed eight acres to oats, using the Swedish regenerated variety. The crop weighed 40 pounds to the bushel and yielded 1,200 bushels to the acre, which is a good crop at almost any place under the sun.

FLOCKING TO CLOVERLAND.

About 250 people from "Cloverland," is not the slowest part of the state, arrived in Detroit last Tuesday. One real estate dealer at Ewen, writes to his friends that he expects to ship in a carload, the smallest one being 40 acres and a few of 80 and 160 acres. Nine of the people have already erected buildings and 12 others have put in considerable clearing preparatory to building in the early spring.

Filling the Cow's Capacity.

There is no rule for feeding dairy cows that can be laid down, that will apply to all cows alike and still the success of the herd will depend largely upon procuring the best production at the least cost, from each cow.

Cows should be fed to their capacity to obtain the most results. But many feeders do not seem to realize what we mean when we speak of a dairy cow's capacity.

Winter Dairying is Increasing.

The farmers of the southwest are coming more and more to the conclusion that a fresh in the fall or early winter is a much more profitable one than in the summer, while winter is a time of comparative leisure. The time is also more favorable for raising, and the absence of flies helps to make up for the inconvenience of barns.

Excellent for Hogs.

Hogs greatly enjoy a mixture of wood ashes, charcoal and salt. All these have some as preventives of diseases and promoters of health. When mixed the proportion usually are: Wood ashes four parts, charcoal four parts, salt one part and lime one part.

Silver Lined Clouds.

Not every cloud has a silver lining, but some have a silver lining that unexpected ones by keeping our mental vision clear.

Good Examples.

If there is no practical good methods of farm management are examples for farm attributes to follow.

Demand for Good Hogs.

There is almost always a demand for good hogs weighing from 200 to 250 pounds, the quality of it is that they can be grown to this size in this country, and have been made to scale on at very little cost, and it only requires a few weeks to finish them.

Caring for Horses.

Every horse is more or less warm when he comes from a drive. Never stir off the harness or saddle and let the horse rush into a feed of oats or a trough of water.

Save Hen Manure.

Save the hen manure carefully for your garden. If your soil is heavy and wet, mix it with the hen manure, but if the soil is light and sandy use roof mold or peat bog.

Dust Hens Before Setting.

Dust your hens well with insect powder before putting eggs for hatch in the nest.

Retaining Large Limbs.

It would be best if as larger limbs were kept to be cut as the tree grows.

Use Plenty of Bedding.

Cattle will do much more to use plenty of bedding in the winter than to use much more feed to make up for the lack of bedding.

Use Good Sires.

Good sires are the most valuable asset in the herd. Without them the best herd would be a failure.

Feeding Young Lambs.

Young lambs should be fed with one-half cup of milk at a time.

Feed Sows Well.

Sows should be well fed and kept in good condition while nursing their young.

Bull of Importance.

The selection of the bull to head the herd is a matter of great importance.

He is half of the herd from the breeding standpoint, as his influence will be felt generally and make it better or poorer than its dam.

Care in Pruning.

When pruning the orchard, be careful not to leave a "hook" stub in the branch left to push the bark away from the wood on large cuts.

Sure Vermifuge.

Fewer worms will infest hogs that have access to salt and ashes. This is a good time to put this sanitary vermifuge.

Care for Tools.

Cut down the implement bills by building a shed where the tools may be kept.

Adds to Comfort.

Good ventilation in the house and barn will add much to the comfort of both people and stock.

TEACH AGRICULTURE IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS

Today eight Western Michigan high schools have regular courses in agriculture, with competent men as instructors. These schools are located at Hopes City, Evart, Fremont, Hartington, Manistee, Muskegon and Traverse City. As the Traverse City school was the first in the western part of the state to introduce the subject of agricultural instruction as a regular study, a brief sketch of the beginnings of this new line of work and its rapid development is of special interest at the present time.

Some Pioneer Teaching.

The first bit of high school work in teaching agriculture in Western Michigan came during the school year of 1910-11 at the Traverse City high school, under the leadership of Prof. Henry M. Hornbeck. It was a humble beginning, there being little in the way of new equipment, but nevertheless it was a great step forward in horticulture and soils without any expensive apparatus, as the new course was carried on.

This work was continued the following year, when Professor Hornbeck's E. H. Brown, freshly graduated from the Agricultural college, Professor Hornbeck was adopted in preference to the former lecture method. Prof. Brown's lecture topics were "Soil Fertility," for horticulture, Fletcher's "How to Make a Fruit Garden." The results of his efforts were somewhat improved also, by the purchase of better tools, nursery stock, as well as the obtaining of samples of seed and fertilizer, for the farmer and ground feeds. For the first half year the attention of the class of 14 was given to the subject of fertility. One interesting feature of the work was an address by a former graduate of the high school, Otto Kyrkos, on the subject of commercial fertilizers. As Mr. Kyrkos handles carloads of fertilizer and has made a study of it he was deemed fitting one that he should be called upon to address the class.

Agriculture Was Popular.

By the second semester the work in agriculture had become popular and everybody thought it would be the proper thing to attend the class, and be organized in horticulture. To prevent crowding it therefore became necessary to limit the membership of the class to those who had already taken a year's work in agriculture, and the class was boiled down to about twenty-five.

This class had the experience of a field trip to a large orchard one spring morning, and the attention was declared by O. F. White, field agent in horticulture for the Michigan Agricultural college, who showed them how to prune and spray all the various vine and tree fruits. In addition to this, many of the students were enabled to learn a little money while attending school by pruning grapes and setting out strawberry plants. Throughout the Western Michigan and the teacher in charge of the school board approved of the $150 to be used in purchasing and planting additional ground for the school buildings, and this kept the teacher, and those of the class in agriculture who were anxious to earn money, well occupied during the spring.

Selected a College Man.

The following year, 1912-13, a new teacher was selected, a graduate of the college of agriculture, and one from the Agricultural college, Prof. Leon B. Carmer, was chosen. The Traverse City high school is therefore to be congratulated on never having made the mistake of thinking that "anyone could teach agriculture" and attempting to satisfy the demand for this work by an ineffective test book course in the hands of an untrained teacher. Mr. Gardner had an enrollment of 17 in farm crops and 15 in horticulture during his first year. During that year a short course in horticulture was made available to young men not students at the high school. This lasted for a week, and there was an earnest class of 12 young men willing to sit for of the lecture experts during the time, to learn the newest methods of fruit growing.

During the present year Mr. Gardner has 105 students in agricultural botany, 25 in advanced horticulture (medicinal study of fruit diseases) and seven in soils. The short course of last year will be continued again this year, and it is expected that there will be at least twenty-five young men in constant attendance during the week that this work is given.

No attempt has been made to urge students to come in for work in agriculture, the school being full to the limit already two crowded, and it is not thought inadvisable to conduct any advertising campaign for additional students until a new high school building is erected, as it undoubtedly will be in the near future.

About $300 is being spent this year for laboratory equipment, in addition to a blackboard leaster, set of 12 compound microscopes, a microscope and moisture apparatus, box for demonstrating growth of seed planting, etc.

Some Curious Results.

Many of the boys who first took the work in agriculture are now working on farms or are taking courses in agricultural college. Many, too, are in lines of endeavor quite remote from agriculture. This, however, is to be expected when we remember that students of high school age are commonly peripatetic as to their choice of vocation. The most noteworthy result of the teaching of agriculture, for it by high school a person can determine whether or not he wishes to pursue it as a permanent work, is that it has deterred many from the course to pay him for his trouble. One thing that the teacher of agriculture is perhaps more in a spirit of over-confidence on the part of the public generally, as to the ease with which he can pursue his studies in agriculture. After the first few days of the year, such boys experience a change of feeling, and come to regard agriculture as a profoundly abstruse study, involving all the other sciences for its foundation. The teacher is thus a success. At a recent meeting of several state national commissioners of agriculture and Homans attended the same, and the proposed conference called March 19, in the result of what was learned at the conference. The agricultural College offers to companies in the state, whether connected with the field interests or independent, to be at the conference. Kansas has such an organization, now and has a representative who acts for it.

2,500 Eligible to M. A. C. Alumni.

A clause in the by-laws of the Michigan Agricultural College at its recitation, if adopted, will mean annual membership of the graduates instead of the old triennial plan that has been in vogue a number of years. It is and that 2,500 persons are eligible to membership in the association.

Plans Better Sal ula.

The state board of appointment as inspector of state high schools for the University of Michigan, Professor J. B. Pollock, principal of the Jackson high school, said that the university regards plans for the state board of appointment as time to bring about greater efficiency in the schools of the state.

The principal work of the inspector is to visit the 240 accredited high schools or the state to determine whether they are doing work to enable their students to matriculate at the university without examination.

SYNOPSIS.

[illegible] Jack Bridge, a young mining engineer, is down and out when he meets Mr. Simmons, who is being threatened by an anonymous message addressed to the Mexican Eagle. He does not take the message seriously, but when he reaches his office he finds a dynamite bomb in his desk. Suspicion falls on Bridge, the chief's secretary, Miss Lydia Leyden, and the office force. Experts are called in before the bomb, which is found to be of a new type. The next evening Mr. Simmons is warned that he will be killed at eight o'clock. Bridge is sent to meet a special train bearing his friend, Mr. Barrow, who is now blind, and who has invented a new system of signaling by wireless. At eight o'clock Simmons is killed by a bomb while Bridge and his assistant, Kennedy, are below town in a room into darkness and all traffic is stopped. Bridge, Barrow, the office assistant, Kennedy, interviewed by the police, and Miss Leyden are held as suspects, but Bridge is saved by a warrant he discovered in the force by which he can call on Mexico City for his release. Bridge and Kennedy, accompanied by Barrow, go to Mexico to clear themselves from the charge of murder. Bridge, Barrow, Kennedy and Miss Leyden are now in Mexico City. Barrow has perfected his system, and Bridge is now using it, through the newspapers, reassuring the people. He hears the Unknown will attempt the dynamiting of heat which would cut the city off from water. Bridge, Barrow, Kennedy and Miss Leyden are in two hundred miles from here on a railroad. It has for its transportation a private train, and it will be given a clear right of way. He turned to Simmons. "Have you found yourself able to communicate with the Monsieur X at any time?"

"Communicate!" echoed Simmons. "Why, he's easier to talk to than a girl who wants an interview, and—"

"Then send this: 'Your messages have been communicated to the people in patient.'"

"What do you get?" asked Eldridge, after a moment.

"Oh, a lot of the same sort of stuff," answered Simmons wearily. "Do you want 'em?"

"No, it is not necessary," replied Eldridge. "But listen for another message from about the same distance when he has finished."

Silence fell on the room. At the end of ten minutes Simmons raised his head.

"That's O K Q over and over," said he. "Want that?"

"That," replied Eldridge with satisfaction, "indicates that my crew on the Leyden jar has now connected two hundred miles away has heard your message to Monsieur X." He glanced at his watch. "Now, if you would be so good as to afford us a moment's assistance," he received Simmons, "I wish to disconnect from your instrument and connect with the Leyden jars, and to substitute for it one of weaker voltage. I wanted to construct my delicacy man to leave a few in the case, sir."

Then, will weaken the sending power of my instrument," objected Simmons.

"Exactly what I wish to do," replied Eldridge.

"He's clever all right," Darrow murmured admiringly to Jack. "Also what is using."

"Not a bit of it," I answered. "I'm feeling a lot better also can I sit up right."

"But I can't show you unless you lie down," he insisted.

"Rather than have any talk about it I lay down on the bed.

"Shut your eyes," was the next order.

"Joe here," I said, "what's all this for anyway? Go ahead and show me and I'll take care of my eyes. If I lie down and shut my eyes I'll feel as if were dead."

"He climbed up at that.

"You make me feel like a ruffle dead," he said cheerfully. "That's just what I do. Now, I'm going to the village undertaker and I'm only used to shaving corpses."

Dockyard of Solid Rock.

The New South Wales government decayard on Cockatoo Island is synonymous in Australia of cold rock. Historically, Cockatoo Island is much interest, as it was the site of a large prison in the days when British convicts were deported to Australia. The prisons closed on the island long ago, but the old prison buildings, the stone walls, barred windows and iron-doored cells being still in evidence. The formation of the island was originally quite unsuitable for a dockyard, as the solid rock rose sheer from the water to a height of 60 to 70 feet. By using convict labor, however, the rock was gradually cut back, first to permit the building of graving docks and later to make room for building slips and shops near the water level. The work has been continued until at present two-thirds of the total area of 23 acres has been brought to a practically uniform level of about 15 feet above high tide.

To Save Money.

Economy, rightly understood, requires careful study and consistent action. A knowledge of market prices and money values are necessary for an intelligent solution to the high cost of living, but the family must itself does not suffice. Consistent action is equally if not more important. The "head and heart" of a family must be one in their efforts. They must work in unison.

How to Help Inquirers—The Fearful

By REV. HOWARD W. POPE
Superintendent of Men
Moody Bible Institute, Chicago

TEXT—"Look unto me and be ye saved."—Isaiah 45:22.

A very common excuse which is met in Christian work is this:

"I am afraid I cannot hold out."

In dealing with any case it is well to do more strain first the cause, and then look for a cure. There may be many causes, but whatever they are, there is always a sure cure in the Word of God. In this case it is evident that the cause of the man is in his life is thinking of raving himself, instead of committing the case to Christ. He means to try a little harder than ever before to do good, but he has failed so often in the past that he has little confidence that he will succeed any better in the future. And the man is right. He certainly will fail if he relies upon his own efforts to lead a Christian life.

The remedy in this case is to take the man's attention away from himself, and fix it upon the Lord Jesus, who alone can save him. Say to him, "My dear friend, the question is not whether you can hold out but whether Christ is able to save you. Let us see what he says about it." Opening your Bible ask him to read aloud Hebrews 7:25. "Wherefore he is able also to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them." After he has read it, say to him, "If God is able to save to the uttermost, there is certainly some hope for you. With an 'uttermost' salvation such as Christ offers, there are no hopeless cases, do you see?"

"Yes, it does look a little more hopeful I must confess, but I am afraid I should fail, if I started in the Christian life. My bump of persistence is not very prominent, and I am easily discouraged."

"That may be true, but do you know this 'uttermost' Savior has made provision for you to keep you from falling? Read what he says in Jude 24: 'Now unto him that is able to keep you from falling, and to present you faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy.'

"Isn't that splendid? 'Able to keep you from falling, and to present you faultless.' Blameless would mean a great deal, but without fault means more still. Let us read the context in which Christ promises that you shall be when he presents you before his glory. Turn back to the verses to the text verse to see the joy of the message. Christ has the will to save, able, but the joy of the Savior as he looks with extreme satisfaction on his work. It doesn't seem possible, does it, that you can be saved so completely? Thousands of years ago, God foretold that the Lord Jesus will put you in satisfaction as a sample of his handiwork, with actual pride and joy? And yet that is just what he will do, if he can do, and he certainly ought to know. You see for your case seem hopeful, looking at it from God's standpoint?"

"Yes, I must admit that it does, but you see my case is peculiar. I had a Christian mother and a godly father and I have inherited from him an appetite for liquor. Occasionally an awful craving for the stuff drives me to it, and with irresistible power, and down I go, before I know it, I'm drunk and all my apprehension. If it were not for that I think I could do great work for you see my case is peculiar."

"Yes, I see your case is peculiar, but do you know of any one else whom God Savior? In the first place, he was accustomed to the most refined surroundings, and he knows all about that as well as the second place, he has made ample provision for it in the Bible. Indeed, he has provided a special promise for just such cases. Read if you will 1 Corinthians 10:13. God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that we are able; but will with the temptation also make a way to escape that ye may be able to bear it.

"Now, let us sum it all up. Jesus says that if you will commit the keeping of your soul to him, he will be able to save you to the uttermost, and able to keep you from falling. Furthermore, knowing just how weak you are, he guarantees that no temptation shall be allowed to come upon you which you are not able to bear, and that when temptation comes he will make it least to all, he will provide some way of escape, so that you shall be able to bear it. Do you believe that he is able to save you to the uttermost, and able to keep you from falling? Do you believe that he is able to save you to the uttermost, and able to keep you from falling? Further, knowing just how weak you are, he guarantees that no temptation shall be allowed to come upon you which you are not able to bear, and that when temptation comes he will make it least to all, he will provide some way of escape, so that you shall be able to bear it. Do you believe that he is able to save you to the uttermost, and able to keep you from falling? Do you believe that he himself will be proud of you? Now what will you do? Will you keep on trying to save yourself, and behold you always have, or will you commit your soul to this 'uttermost' Savior who is able to save, and keep, and protect you from every foe?"

If these words of God can lead a person to a decision I have sacrificing time to stop you from falling! Read what he says in Jude 24: "Now unto him that is able to keep you from falling, and to present you faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy."

"Isn't that splendid? 'Able to keep you from falling, and to present you faultless.' Blameless would mean a great deal, but without fault means more still. John Wesley Hyatt, who has been awarded the Perkin gold medal for chemical discovery in recognition of his discovery of celluloid in 1870 and also of his long years' research work in chemistry, lives at Cleveland, O. The recognition was made by the Society of Chemical Industry.

The Writers.

Maurice Delage, the novelist, is a skillful gardener and a great lover of outdoor life.

Katharine Sarah Macquoid, the English novelist and writer of travel books, celebrated her eighteen birthday recently by adding another chapter to her sixty-fourth novel. In reply to questions of interviewers she declared that work kept her young.

A. F. W. Weiss, the English novelist, is said to be the last dressed in every man in London. He is a quaint looking man, with something of the appearance of a Georgian dandy. He published his first novel in 1885. He is an Alpine climber and enjoys the three-mile ascent of Snowdon but the house of commons bored him.

Town Topics.

New York city, they say now, can borrow $283,700,000. She'll borrow it.—Buffalo Enquirer.

A Chicago minister says the women of that city waste 15 per cent of the food they buy. Well, we guess that news is about as bad as odors Chicago food.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

A brick toll road for automobiles from Chicago to St. Louis is proposed by Lake county to be paid for by the motorists—that it will cost and pay all the tolls indefinitely.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

French scientific writers award Paris the palm as the most noisy city. This distinction will not be disputed, though it is thought New York might contest the claim with some show of right.—New York World.

English Etchings.

Last year there were only twenty-three murders committed in the city of London.

In Buckinghamshire an ointment made from mistletoe berries is still believed to be a cure for rheumatism and enlargement.

Among the offences for which capital punishment can be ordered in English law today are high treason and murder in a royal dockyard or arsenal.

The average wages of kitchen maids in England is $96.50 a year, while those of governesses is $97.50. Next in order are nurses at $101.75, parlor maids at $117.75, ladies' maids at $125 and cooks at $125.25.

DAMES AND DAUGHTERS.

Probably the best known tuneless woman in New Zealand is Miss A. E. Jones, amateur soprano to Clutton Turbell, the oil magnate.

Mrs. Julius S. Walsh, Jr., of St. Louis, is the largest woman holder of stock in the United Railways of Baltimore. She is the owner of 700 shares of the preferred stock.

Mlle. de la Rinelle, an inspector of labor for the French government, has just completed a book on the question of sleep problems in America. She is the first woman ever sent abroad on such a mission by France.

Dr. Rachel Hirsch, a woman physician of Berlin, recently applied for a professorship in the Medical college of Berlin, is the first woman to be so honored in Germany. She is forty-three years old, unmarried and for ten years has been a surgeon at the Charity hospital, Berlin.

Mrs. A. A. Adams, whose reputation has been recognized, will have the distinction of being the first woman assistant United States district attorney, it is said. She is a graduate of the University of California and was admitted to practice last year. She is engaged in legal practice in San Francisco.

Flippant Flings.

A St. Louis plumber has fallen heir to $700,000. What does any plumber need of an extra $700,000?—Los Angeles Express.

This is the season when the man who made an income tax return reminds a lot of exemptions he could have put in if he had thought of them in time.—Washington Star.

A Gotham author tells 5,000 women that by taunting they can get thin. And he might tell this women that in watching fat women taunt they can build enough to get plump.—Detroit Journal.

The German professor who says the people, the press and parliament constitute the three virtue evils of Germany doubtless admits the ideal state would be composed of a royal family and a batch of professors.—Chicago Herald Herald.

Fashion Frills.

Men's trousers in Paris are now to have plaits. Quite the newest wrinkle.—New York Sun.

"Spring corset" was announced as the latest French fashion courtesy. We shall probably take their dares before long.—Boston Herald.

London tailors are trying to introduce "sane dress suits." As if we weren't uncomfortable enough in one of those black things as it is.—Detroit Free Press.

Women's hats are to be small and will be decorated with flowers. This announcement ought to brief relief to the male patrons of the street cars, who are tired of charging fashions.—Toledo Blade.

"Love," she said, "must have something to feed on."

"I acknowledge that," he replied. "But I don't believe it will be able to develop much vigor on sandwiches."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Mary went to milk the goat,
And when I heard her sandal
Upon the stone I knew I had to wait,
And then it turned to butter.

A daughter at the home of W. F. Smith, Sunday; a son at Colin McKinnie's and another at James Bogart's. No race suicide in Charlevoix.

Mrs. J. E. Bash, of Petoskey, is spending a week in this city with her sister, Mrs. J. S. Ackert. Mrs. Bush is accompanied by her daughter Margaret.

R. F. Sloan has been confined to his room at the Bartlett House the past week by illness. The report has been in circulation that he has the measles he declares to be an "exaggeration."

By an error last week the name of Alex Cameron, democrat candidate for supervisor in the second ward, was omitted from the list of nominees published in these columns.

The publisher of this paper is a republican. He started in as a republican in 1890; he has been a republican ever since, and he will continue to be a republican. He takes what comes as a punishment for that fault.

Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Ackert and Miss Marion Harris gave a party at the Bartlett House Tuesday night. There were sixty guests. There were refreshments, and "500." It was socially one of the successes of the season.

A somewhat heroic taste of winter came Wednesday morning of this week. A cold wave accompanied by snow came in if he had thought of doing it first. But it was probably the last dying gasp of winter.

The missionary societies of the Methodist and Baptist churches will be entertained by the missionary society of the Cong'l church, Friday afternoon, March 20, at 2:30 o'clock in the dining room of the Cong'l church. A freewill offering will be taken.

We forget last week to remind our readers that Tuesday of this week was St. Patrick's Day. Over at Beaver Island they needed no reminder, but on this side of the channel Pete McCafferty forgot it. But Mayor Lawmen had a green "sprig" on his coat all day with other Irishmen. There was not a blackthorn in sight here anywhere.

The 11 year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. I. McMillan, of East Jordan, was seriously injured while coasting in that city Thursday evening. She was thrown from her sled, and before she could arise another sled struck her in the mouth, badly lacerating her lips and causing a contusion of the brain that rendered her unconscious at that night. Dr. Armstrong was called in consultation Saturday.

The Northern Michigan Transportation Co. has just completed the expenditure of $40,000 on the steamship Manistee, giving her first class and modern equipment. Hot and cold running water has been installed in every state room on the ship and she has been made as secure a boat for size as plies the great lakes. She will be placed in commission early in the spring on her run of last season, Chicago to the Soo.

Between the postoffice matter and the city election campaign, there are lively days for the boys on the political warpath. In all those scraps may the best man win. As to whom will be postmaster or mayor we don't know, but we can make a pretty good guess. Meanwhile, "possess your soul in patience." Don't get excited.

The pioneers are not yet all quite forgotten. It is very gratifying to notice that "old Doc Lewis" is still "on the pike" having a good practice, and as vigorous as many a younger practitioner. There are many people in this neck-of-the-woods who are still tied up to the faithful old doctor who administered to their infinities forty years ago, and who has ushered into the world about half of the present population of Charlevoix, such as it is. The old "one horse chaise" is still doing business, and we are glad of it.

R. O. Crain left Monday for Frankfort where he assumes the management for the Booth Co. of the fisheries on that shore as far south as Manistee.

Archie Livingston, of the State Savings bank force, passed his wife in Lansing over Sunday. Mrs. Livingston has been visiting relatives there the past month, but returned here with her husband.

The Charlevoix Ice Cream Co., after a thorough overhauling of the factory, opened for business Tuesday morning of this week, and will fill all orders promptly.

They tell us that the name of Pete Vandenbush was omitted from the list of city candidates, in this paper last week. It certainly was unintentional. Pete is the candidate for clerk on the Progressive ticket.

Visiting Day for schools, Tuesday, March 24. At 7 p. m. in the assembly room of the high school building Mr. DeVoe will show stereoptican views of Panama canal. A charge of 10c will be made.

At the Beekeepers Association meeting at Petoskey last week Ira D. Bartlett of East Jordan was re-elected secretary and treasurer, and Geo. Jaquaye, living east of town, took first prize offered for best comb honey.

E. A. Fox, a prominent business man of Central Lake, and held in high esteem throughout the county, was found dead in the basement of his drug store about six o'clock last Friday evening. Mr. Fox had not been in the best of health for some time and his sudden death was due to heart failure.

On Tuesday evening, March 24th a six o'clock pot-luck supper will be served at the Masonic Temple for Masons and their wives, Eastern Star and husbands. After supper the evening will be spent with games and in visiting. It is hoped that all members of both Orders will come out and help make this a pleasant gathering. Visiting members will be welcomed.

COLONIAL JACK

Arrival of the Renowned Wheelbarrow Walker in Charlevoix

Wednesday morning J. A. Krohn, better known everywhere as "Colonial Jack," arrived in town from Petoskey wheeling his barrow that has been his traveling companion in a walk of 9,000 miles around the borders of the United States.

The "walk" was made in 557 days, or 45 days ahead of schedule time, making an average of over 25 miles a day, thus making it one of the greatest walking feats ever known. Starting from Portland, Maine, he followed the northern border to Seattle, Wash., thence down the Pacific coast to Los Angeles, Calif., across the southern border to Jacksonville, Fla., then up the Atlantic coast to Portland. During the trip Jack wore out eleven pairs of shoes, five wheels and three tires to the wheelbarrow. The wheelbarrow weighed from 60 to 100 pounds.

He pictures along the road to pay his expenses illustrating his talks with views. He talked at the Majestic, Wednesday evening, (18th).

The Charlevoix Pomona Grange will meet with the Boyne City Grange on Thursday, April 9. The meeting will be opened by Prof. L. R. Taft, of Lansing, president of the Farmers' Institute Society. The first address will be at 10:30 a. m., and he will also give talks in the afternoon and evening. A program which will prove instructive to all interested in farming has been prepared and the meeting will be a big affair in the annals of the Grange. Plan to attend for it will be well worth your while.

One of the pleasantest social events of the season occurred Tuesday evening when the Masons and the ladies of the Eastern Star met at a pot-luck supper at the Masonic Temple. All the rooms were thrown open to everybody, and before and after the feast the time was used for social enjoyment. The attendance was large, the big, beautiful lodge room, the club room and ladies' parlor were all with the spirit of the city. It was a jolly gathering, and would be to prove the social influence of fraternal societies.

With a demand upward of 10,000,000 more bushels of potatoes from the growers of Michigan during the coming year than was produced a year ago, the work of the Michigan State Potato Growers' Association, which was recently organized here is facing a big and open field for activity. An active campaign for membership is being made, and according to John I Odell, secretary of the West Michigan Development Bureau, one of the prime movers behind the new association, the potato crop in Michigan this year will be the biggest in the history of the state. We hope the Charlevoix section will do its full share.

A very pleasant evening was enjoyed at the home of Supt. DeVoe last Monday, the occasion being the eve of his birthday. It was a complete surprise and it took the best some time to recover. The entire faculty greeted him on his return home at six o clock and a very pleasant evening was spent and the guests departed wishing the Supt. many happy returns of the day.

The United States Express Co. has decided to go into liquidation and wind up business at once, it is stated that this will throw 15,000 men out of the job. This is the express company which operates over the Pere Marquette railroad. It is an open question, under present condition, whether any express company will ever be granted its service to the territory abandoned by the dissolution of the United States Express Co. The Charlevoix office, however, is still doing business.

Capt. P. D. Campbell returned home from Manistee about supper time Saturday evening, and, as guests one of those surprises that Mrs. Campbell delights in perpetrating upon her worthy spouse, a supper was a banquet served in honor of the Captain, and there were present a dozen of his best friends. It was a most happy gathering, and the evening was a most enjoyable one. It was necessary to state that the S. S. S. was well represented. As above stated, there were twelve guests, one or two invitations having been unexpected. The Sentinel scribe would have been the 13th, and he was expected, but an war-sick kept him at home. We were since learned that Capt. Campbell posted Harvey outside the door with instruction to kill the 13th man, so that it would not be necessary to mess up the house.

The fight against the apple tree tent caterpillar is becoming a better one. Many millions of prospective caterpillars have already gone to eternity and the indications are that the coming season will be disposed of before the warm winds of May cause the eggs to hatch. Under the direction of the Orchard Association of Eta Rho Gamma has been offered which will be awarded to the school total bringing in the largest number of egg masses. The prize is a dozen photographs of the boy or girl who wins in the contest. A local merchant contributes the funds to pay for the photographs, and the owner of photographer has promised that his best skill shall be used in securing the likeness and producing the finished prints. It has been the custom through the ages, to portray the likenesses of heroes of war, so that people may know to whom they signed pay deference, and it is most fitting that he or one who in this war against the caterpillar, performs the greatest feats, should be honored in this way.

'Do You Remember?

Yes, we remember when Robert Bedwin in 1869, landed on the land that is now the Robert Stuart farm, Chas. Hyrns manager, at the entrance to South Arm. Mr. Bedwin came from England. He was a tailor and for many years helped out when it came to good clothes. Mr. Bedwin had ambition to raise grape, and we remember the terraced grapery that adorned the sloping shore forty years ago.

We remember when it was not an unusual thing to see otter swimming the lower river, and deer running through its settlement.

We remember when the woods and swamps of Marion, Banks and South Arm were swarming with deer, and when otter were trapped around Twin and "26" lakes.

We remember, and can sometimes almost hear the ring of Robert Miller's novel in the little old blacksmith shop that stood near the present Argo mill site.

We remember when coopers were as numerous as fishermen, and when tons of big fat whitefish rotted on the beach for want of salt.

We remember when postmaster "Pap" Beers dumped the mail on his bed, and everybody helped themselves to their mail.

We remember when, in the '70s, Capt. Wm. Moses brought from Muskegon the little steamer Annie, the first passenger boat on Pine Lake; and we remember when a little later, Morris Stockman had the Gazelle built in Cheyboygan and brought here for the Lily and run, with Capt. John Mason as master.

And we remember when Bernard Burns, Anthony D. Brady, Wm. Graham, Isaac Agee, Robert Gregory and L. W. Skinner were "homesteaders" in 1 and ten—all gathered home long years ago.

We remember, bless the Lord, when maple blockwood was $3 cents a cord.

We remember (1892) when David C. Sattleton was a homesteader, under date of 1867, on a quarter section near the head of South Arm, and we remember that, in 1900, he was postmaster at "Nelsonville," and we remember that he was the first postmaster for the section containing all territory now tributary to East Jordan.

We remember when Rex Beach, the renowned novelist, was a small child down at Atwood; and we remember to have seen him crossing on the Atwood bill, at the school house where he learned to read.

Reforestration

Prof. Comfort A. Tyler, of the Michigan Agricultural College, is studying the local forestry conditions for the purpose of interesting land owners in reforestation operations. He says that there is more interest being taken in forestry now than ever before and that the planting of forest trees during the year 1913 was almost as great as for all the preceding years since the organization of the College.

The largest settings so far located in Charlevoix county, in the southeastern corner of the state, but Prof. Tyler is of the opinion that conditions are favorable in the Grand Traverse region for settings that will surpass those already made. His work is largely that of inspecting the land that it is proposed to devote to forest trees and decaying what varieties if trees are most adapted to the soil and climatic conditions. In this way, success is more probable than if the trees were just stuck out without regard to soil or climatic conditions.

"With the right trees on the right soil" the question of reforesting the lands that are not yet needed for agriculture, becomes a very simple one, and also a very profitable proposition. Prof. Tyler is an admirer of the white pine, because of its great value from a practical standpoint and because of the fact, that so far, no insect pest has been discovered that makes aggressive attacks upon trees.

Something That Cheers the Editorial Soul

We have received a nice letter, enclosing a generous check, from J. C. Stirge, of St. Louis, but who has been spending the winter in California.

This is what Mr. Birge says:

"I incidentally noticed in your paper that some aspectacled subscriber had paid advance subscription to 1917. I reckon I feel about as that subscriber does. I say that last in a credit to Charlevoix. It appears to be sound and level, as all subjects that it discusses its editorials are written in a dignified, judicial spirit, and on a high moral plane. It is a first class local news paper that every citizen of Charlevoix should help to maintain."

The World Ablaze.

The world is aflame; and yet the world has been ablaze for about years. The same temple at the Hague is a mockery, and the white dove is lost amid the smoke and ashes of war's holocaust.

Civil war in Ireland threatens to overwhelm the British empire, which is called upon to face the most alarming conditions since the restoration, and the worst of it is that it is a religious insurrection, in which the Orangemen have the Catholic.

The home rule party, after struggling for years, induced the British government to introduce the Irish home rule bill. With the slogan, "Ulster will fight," the Orangemen of Ulster organized a volunteer army, estimated at from 25,000 to 200,000 men, to resist the Dublin parliament. Under refusal the Asquith compromise permitting "local option" on the home rule question, and since Thursday the British government has been mobilizing troops and ships of war at strategic points. Home rule was passed twice by the house of commons and once by the house of lords, and if passed a third time by the commons it becomes a law regardless of the veto of the lords.

Russia is increasing and mobilizing her land and naval forces, and war with Austria is thought to be probable, which will involve Germany. There are more battleships being built now than ever before in the world's history, and armies are being trained for service on our own peace-loving republic.

The Mexican situation is still unchanged, and American protection goes inevitable. There is no likelihood that the defeat of Huerta by the Constitutionalists will bring peace to that country.

In the United States anarchy is rampant from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Thousands march through city streets with the blood-red flag, defying law and authority and flaunting their revolutionary demands in the face of incendiary.

And they talk of peace!

PRECEDENT SET FOR TRIP OF BRYAN TO SOUTH AMERICA.

But First Secretary to Leave Country For Pan-American Conference.

Following precedent set by Elihu Root and Philander Knox when holding the office of secretary of state, Secretary Bryan will visit South America. He has accepted, with the sanction of the president, the invitation of Chile to visit its capital, Santiago, next September, when the fifth Pan-American conference will be assembled there.

The secretary of state has informed the governing board of the Pan-American union, composed of the representatives in Washington of all American republics, that he proposes to make the trip.

Unless some unforeseen development interferes Secretary Bryan will leave about the middle of August. He expects to proceed down the west coast of South America, stopping at Peru, and to return by the east coast, making visits in Argentina, Uruguay and Brazil.

Mr. Bryan's predecessors, Secretaries Root and Knox, paid friendly visits to a number of the South and Central American countries while they were in office. Secretary Root made an extended trip around South America, during the course of which he delivered many important speeches, which diplomats said did much to increase the general friendship between the United States and the other American republics. The trip made by Secretary Knox three years ago was to the capitals bordering on the Caribbean and was for the purpose, as officially announced at the time, of "manifesting our friendly interest in these, our neighboring republics, by a visit to them of the secretary of state."

Secretary Bryan will be the second repeat of the office who has gone out of the country to attend one of the Pan-American conferences, which have been held successively in Washington, the City of Mexico, Rio de Janeiro and Buenos Aires.

In the preparation for the conference the governing board of the Pan-American union has authorized John Barrett, director general, to attend and granted him sufficient leave of absence so that he can visit the different capitals of South America. He expects to leave early in July, going first to Chile.

"THINGS I REMEMBER."

Frederick Townsend Martin Wrote Candid Criticisms of Notables.

The late Frederick Townsend Martin, broker of by name as the leader of society in New York and president of Ward McAllister, published in October, 1905, "Things I Remember," a book showing the personal side of international society life. In this he told of well known rulers of the social world and drew upon the recollections of some massive pens for stories which widely touched both in American and Europe. King Edward, three popes, General Grant and others found a place in this volume of memories, which was considered a rather frank revelation.

Mr. Martin, who was sixty-four years old, never married. He was a student of labor questions and a friend of the needy. He frequently visited the Bowery missions in New York and gave talks there to the homeless men and on many occasions these men were his guests at dinners specially provided.

INCOME TAX $40,000,000.

That Amount in Sight and Ten Million More Expected.

The income tax law promises to live up to the expectations of the originators of it. Washington figures show that about $40,000,000 annually is expected paid by close to 400,000 individuals.

Although treasury officials decline to make public for the present the reports of internal revenue collectors on the income tax, it has become known that more than 350,000 individuals had made returns in sixty-three collection districts up to midnight, March 1, when the time limit expired. From these individuals it was understood the government would collect more than $40,000,000.

Officials expect the final figures to show at least 25,000 more reporting than were given in the preliminary lists from collectors.

MAN MAY LEARN TO LIVE ON GRASS

New Methods of Preparing Plants For Food.

NATURE IMPROVED UPON.

Experiments Show Scientific Preparations of Beans, Spinach, Carrots and Cabbage Are Nourishing and Obviate Intestinal Disorders—Way Paves For Vegetable Innovations.

The Journal of the American Medical Association, commenting on the availability of nutrients from plant sources, says it has long been believed that it may be possible to utilize green vegetables so as to make them more available for digestion and assimilation by man. Some experiments in this direction have been carried on in Germany. The economic may pave the way for useful innovations in the use of vegetable foods.

It has been found that been powder fed to man in the form of a puree contains far more nutriment than string beans served in the usual form. Spinach, carrots and cabbage similarly prepared were relished with singular freedom from the troublesome intestinal symptoms which so often follow their use. The cellulose of these plant products appears to have been surmounted by their preliminary treatment. A group of vegetables to which no one has thus been converted into a source of nutriment.

"The efficiency here 'exceeded,' says the writer, 'in reason of the more within by the report from the Altona city, it that yet omce a day of vegetable powder, equivalent to a pound of fresh plant, may easily be assimilated—an amount which in the crude state could not be tolerated. Possibly, by suitable preparation such plant products as spinach, which have hitherto been excluded from the dietary, of man, may yet be used as direct sources of energy in human nutrition.

Dependence Upon Plants.

"Without discussing the advantages and disadvantages of the use of foods of animal and vegetable origin, relatively, we are found to admit that man and animal alike are dependent on plants for nutrition. A recent writer has said that man is a parasite living on the plant kingdom. The main source of human energy is found in plants. In so far as mechanical energy is consuming the flesh of the domestic animals, only a fraction of the supply taken by the latter in the plant products can ever reach the sphere of usefulness to man.

"The animals which furnish food to man are expensive converters of the energy of plants into a form directly available for his use. Only a very small residue of the energy intake of such animals is left in the tissue which they furnish as food to man. The great bulk of what has been consumed has become lost in the processes of growth and maintenance before the animal food product is ready for use. To appreciate this we need only consider the enormous amounts of vegetable food necessary to produce a flesh of cattle for human consumption. A few years ago it was a common thing during several years before she is ready for the market.

"It is obvious that it would be an advantage if man could utilize more directly the energy of the plant. Recent years only after it has been converted into animals into the forms that suit his preference.

Products Science Has More Edible.

"Hitherto the contribution of the plant world to the human dietary have consisted of the parts of plants which serve as storage depots—as reserve supplies for subsequent growth. Seeds, roots, tubers and rhizomes are the chief types of plant products which find their way into the mouth and stomach. These are by no means all well suited, there is a tendency, in the progress of science and the industries and the ingenuity of the domestic arts have in the last little so far as to make from which such materials as cereals, potatoes, etc., are converted for human food, that nothing else can.

HOW VERGARA MET HIS DEATH; SIDE LIGHTS ON TEXAS RANGERS

THE secret entry of the Texas rangers into Mexico to recover the stolen Santa Gertrudis Ranch in American territory on February 19 last, has been made available at last on this organization of hardy men, who are the terrors on the Texas side of the Rio Grande which it patrol, northwest, mounted police of the people of northwestern Cameron county.

The raid was made by Captain Parker, Sergeant Friday, Feb. 13, and crossed the river into Mexico on receipt of a message from three federal soldiers, Jesus Garcia, Ysidoro Rodriguez of the Texas rangers, sent to settle for Lorenzo Vergara's ranch, on the Santa Gertrudis. Mr. Vergara rounded with his mounted not

Bandits Crossed In 1874.

The last time Texas rangers crossed into Mexico in a manner to attract official notice was in 1874. Then the government was in 1874. Describing this incident, Governor Coke in a report to Secretary Bryan, stating whether he might send rangers into Mexico, used the following words:

"At periods in the past commanders of American troops and of Texas rangers have crossed the border in pursuit of bandits and marauders and inflicted chastisement to them on Mexican soil. This was notably done by the Texas rangers in pursuance of an order issued by Governor Coke of Texas in 1874, and it is a considerable fact that the process in that case was defended in Washington, where the most recent outrage against American citizenship was committed. With a full and fearless presentation of the facts and the claims of the state of Texas by Governor Coke to President Grant, attorney general the matter seems to have ended in acquiescence, if not with approval, on the part of the federal government in the course of the state of Texas."

Governor Colquitt did not quote any decisions by the Washington authorities in the Coke case, but said Coke's order was for Texas rangers, when in close pursuit of Indian and Mexican marauders to cross the Rio Grande and take them. President Grant, the governor said, objected to the order of the commander of Texas troops, referred it to the attorney general of the United States, with the inquiry as to how far the then governor of Texas had be authorized to make such a decision, any section of the act of congress of April 20, 1871. The attorney general answered the president of Texas might use that any order he could be entitled to make would be duly considered.

President Grant Objected.

Governor Colquitt then quoted the lower Coke's order, which used the right of Texas to capture such marauders. What reply, if any was made, is not stated.

An examination of official precedents discloses that there have been a number of cases where the civil authorities of a state of the United States invaded a foreign territory but none in which the purpose was similar to that of the Texas rangers, who invaded Mexico for the purpose of taking away the body of an American citizen to be used as evidence that he had been murdered. In most of the cases that the raids were for the purpose of capturing persons accused of crime in the foreign territory.

Four Hundred Pioneers of Oregon "Desert" at Unique School.

The college extension school recently held in Burns, Ore., is described by Annie Shannon Monroe, author and magazine writer, as the most wonderful school in America and the only one like it that has ever been or ever will be. The student body was made up of 200 men and 200 women, who lived in the sparsely settled, semi-arid regions in that portion of the state which was formerly designated as desert. Many of the students came 200 miles or more to attend this school of growing and study the principles of scientific production and to handle home making. They were compelled to travel by primitive modes—horseback, wagon and stagecoach. The town of Burns appropriated money to provide comfortable and wholesome living for the students, and the instruction furnished by the extension staff of the Agricultural college was free.

Because of the semi-arid conditions of climate and the sandy character of the soils, dry farming methods and irrigation occupied leading places on the agricultural program. The best methods of converting the sagebrush very demonstrated by laboratory experiments and the principles applied in field soils. Selection and adaptation of crops to the drouth conditions were also featured strongly as factors in successful dry farming.

The results in domestic science and art concerned themselves with the best use of materials close at hand. The philosophy of economics and of right living was explained in the instruction between practical demonstrations. Thus sheepskin were made of the hides produced in the neighborhood, frozen in snow that falls deep there, frozen in snow that falls deep there, frozen in snow that falls deep there

Tells Congressional Investigating Body at Chicago That Guards Would Insult Women to Bring on Fights.

Chicago, March 12.—How private detectives hired by the mining companies mingled with the strikers and insulted the women and then added insult to injury by "shot up" the homes of the strike workers and resorted to trickery in inciting the miners to rioting, were described by Henry Bleiter before the congressional committee on Tuesday in Los Angeles in a little investigating the strike of the copper miners in the northern Michigan copper country.

Bleiter was employed as a private detective by the Pinkerton detective agency of New York. He said that he was in charge of the 200 private guards who were sent to Calumet to quell the strike.

We were all given revolvers and clubs an hour before our train reached Calumet, said the witness. We understood that we should harass, taunt and go among the strikers in order to cause trouble and throw the blame upon the striking miners," continued the private detective.

Bleiter said that he has been employed by private detective agencies for union buyers and hired out as a strikebreaker.

The witness described how the private detectives would mingle among the strikers as peaders and create disturbances in order to break up the parades and incite rioting "so that the Michigan National Guards could use their bayonets in disbanding the strike men's parades.

"We would not hesitate to insult women in order to create a disturbance," said Bleiter. "I remember one night, when everything was quiet and peaceful and the miners were in their homes and making no demonstrations, one of our men—a private detective called Curry—came up to me and said: 'I gave a girl a shot up on one of the miners' homes.' In a few minutes I saw him the several shots through a cottage owned by Mrs. Hanson.

Maj. H. P. Britton of the Michigan National Guard was called upon to the stand. He told of the frequent clashes the militia had with the striking miners.

Britter admitted that among the strikebreakers hired by the detective agency was a number of gunmen.

Charles H. Mahoney, vice-president of the Western Federation of Miners, who was to have been a witness before the committee, is at the Kosciusko hospital recovering from an operation for appendicitis. At the hospital it was said his condition was good.

Would-Be Marchers to Washington Are Marooned in Yolo County, Cal.—Leaders Are in Jail.

Sacramento, Cal., March 12.—Houseless and badly disorganized, the leaders of the unemployed army of marchers with scanty food and shelter, the "unemployed army" driven from Sacramento on Monday is encamped across the Sacramento river in Yolo county, a deserted lot of men. Deputy sheriffs and state troops are guarding the bridges and will not permit any to return to the city, and Yolo county officers, heavily armed, are keeping the men within the new camp. With no spokesman and no leaders, the camp is in a pitiable condition, primarily its projected trip to Washington, D. C., and turned its attention to the grave problem of subsistence. The men have found themselves in an unfriendly country, isolated from return to Sacramento over either of the bridges over the river and beset on the south, north and west by flood waters of the Sacramento river in Yolo basin, they are practically helpless.

FLYING OVER THE ALPS IN AN AEROPLANE

This remarkable photograph shows the French aviator Parmelin in his marvelous flight over Mount Blanc and the snow-capped range of which it is a part. Until recently the Alps were thought to be an effective barrier against aviators, but Parmelin passed over in safety and landed in the valley of the Aosta in Italy.

VANDERBILT IS DEAD

SUCCUMBS TO OPERATION FOR APPENDICITIS.

Built the Biltmore Estate Near Asheville, N. C., and Developed Forestry School.

Washington, March 9.—George W. Vanderbilt of New York died here on Friday from the effects of an operation for appendicitis performed several days ago. He was the youngest son of W. H. Vanderbilt.

Dr. James Mitchell, the attending physician, stated that Mr. Vanderbilt died from a pulmonary embolism, a blood clot in the lungs. He explained that the operation for appendicitis had been successful, but the blood clot was the direct cause.

Mr. Vanderbilt was born at New Dorp, S. I., N. Y., on Nov. 14, 1862. He was a son of William Henry Vanderbilt and a grandson of "the commodore." His early life was spent like that of his brothers and sisters, in the midst of wealth and luxury. He was educated by private tutors and at the best private schools, and he inherited and studied a great deal abroad.

In 1898 Mr. Vanderbilt married Edith Stuyvesant Dresser, the niece and talented daughter of Capt. C. Dresser, U. S. A. This marriage was "deplored" by many matrons of the "smart set" in New York and Newport on the ground that the bride was "not sufficiently of the elite." Society, however, pleased himself—and his wife—by ignoring the snobbish exclusiveness of aristocracy in America.

The Vanderbilts had three homes. One was at 52 Fifth avenue, New York city, another in Bar Harbor, Me., and the third, the palatial one of more, the hundred thousand acre estate in the mountains of North Carolina.

Biltmore, under Vanderbilt's personal supervision, became a vast experimental laboratory of industries. The best methods of farming were sought and found; the science of forestry was developed on an unprecedented degree, the infant science of horticulture was developed under so long than Gifford Pinchot, a friend of Mr. Vanderbilt's lieutenants.

SEIZURE STIRS U. S.

WAR OFFICE AND BRYAN ORDER INQUIRY OF VERGARA INCIDENT ON BORDER.

VICTIM TORTURED TO DEATH

Corpse Containing Several Bullets, Head Crushed in and Hands Were Charred—Carranza Orders Villa Not to Harm Terrazas.

Washington, March 11.—The United States government is engaged in seeking information as to the circumstances under which the body of Clement Vergara, an American horse dealer supposed to have been killed by Mexican federal soldiers near Hidalgo, Mex., was found on the American side of the Rio Grande. The entire incident has been referred to the state and war departments in that the body is on Texas soil.

A brief telegram to the state department from Carranza personal agent at Nuevo Laredo, Mex., informed the state department that the body had been found and that details would be reported by mail.

The slay mail process did not satisfy Secretary Bryan, who promptly wired the consul to make his report by telegraph. This is now being awaited.

Laredo, Texas, March 10.—Several Texas rangers said to have been acting under orders from Governor Colquitt crossed into Mexico on Sunday, exhumed the body of Clemente Vergara, the Texas ranchman who was kidnaped and put to death by a band of Mexican federals three weeks ago and brought the body back to the American side.

The body was in such a good state of preservation that it was easily identified, and all the wounds could be distinguished. There were several bullet wounds on the body and the head had been crushed in with some blunt instrument. The charred condition of the hands indicated that Vergara had been tortured before being put to death.

Brownsville, March 10.—Ambassador Fletcher, acting on the suggestion of the state department, called at the state department and informed Secretary Bryan that an Englishman named Syndan had been driven off his ranch and that his property was in danger of destruction. Mr. Bryan immediately telegraphed to Consul Letcher at Chihuahua to make an inquiry and report the facts. It is presumed a protest will be made to Villa or Carranza.

El Paso, Texas, March 10.—Declaring that General Villa's action in demanding payment of $250,000 from General Tomas Terrazas under threats of seeing his son, Louis Terrazas II., to the firing squad was an attempt to convince the United States, General Carranza wired orders to Villa to withdraw the demand and refrain from mistreating the prisoner. Terrazas in any way. Although Villa has not yet replied, it is taken for granted that he will obey the order.

MANY DIE IN FIRE

FOURTEEN BODIES RECOVERED 28 ARE STILL IN DEBRIS OF ST. LOUIS CLUB.

RESCUERS WORK ALL NIGHT

Seven-Story Building Occupied by the Missouri Athletic Club Destroyed—Dozen Men Slide Down Rope to Safety.

St. Louis March 11.—Forty men are known to have perished and 29 were injured in a fire that destroyed the seven-story building occupied by the Missouri Athletic club on Monday. Fourteen bodies were recovered, 28 are missing.

The building was owned by the Hartman's heirs, which occupied part of the first floor. The bank opened temporary quarters in a building four blocks away. In the vaults of the burned building, officials said, are $1,000,000 in currency and $2,000,000 in coin. This money, it is believed, is safe.

The cause of the fire is unknown. Assistant Fire Chief Tucker said he found the floor about the desk of the clerk caved in, but an adjoining part of the floor seemed to have been blown upward, indicating that the fire was caused by an explosion.

When the firemen arrived on the scene the flames were shooting out of the roof and all the window above the second floor. Men were jumping from windows and climbing down descending ropes made of bed clothes and bedspreads. More than a dozen jumped several stories to the roofs of adjoining buildings and escaped with broken legs or less serious injuries.

Thrilling stories of the fire were told at the city hospital by persons who were injured.

About twelve men escaped from the sixth floor by descending a rope made up of the sheets tied together.

At the 12 men stood on the roof of the next store they saw about twenty persons at the windows of the sixth and seventh floors of the club.

The entire city fire department, aided by 50 policemen and volunteer squads, worked frantically all night to force a way into the ruins of the Missouri Athletic club building, from which eight identified bodies already have been taken, in the eight hours that some of the missing may be rescued.

The known dead follow: John M. Hickey, Chicago, treasurer and auditor Ford Manufacturing company of St. Paul; A. J. Gerhardt, Chicago, sales agent railway supply company; L. A. Ingle, Chicago, sales agent Missouri hardware company; Edwin C. Kessler, St. Louis, cashier "Six Company" Hook and Ladder company; Edwin C. Kessler, killed in leap from sixth floor; James D. Reilly, contractor, St. Louis; body found in the ash pit and identified by Athletic club; unidentified man. The man listed as unidentified may be William E. Ford of East St. Louis. The man was identified by Jim Ford of Allen Hancock of St. Louis.

The injured follow: Charles Reinhart, Chicago; H. Van Brunt, superintendent of an electrical supply company, Chicago; Ed Wolf, Chicago; Ill.; T. Little, Chicago; Theodore Berry, secretary, E. M. Ross, St. Louis; Ben P. Williams, in serious condition; H. C. Holmes, McComb, Miss.; Ed Hancock, St. Louis; E. J. STORIES of CAMP and WAR

HOT FIGHTING AT NEW BERNE

Graphic Account of Battle Given by Member of Fifty-First New York —Had One Leg Amputated.

My regiment, the Fifty-first New York, went to the war on October 29, 1861. About ten o'clock a. m. we left our headquarters at the Old Palace garden, Poughkeepsie, N. Y., and Seventh avenue. We marched down Broadway to the Battery to the tune of "The Girl I Left Behind Me," the drummers afraid and a brass band. I felt proud that day, writes Arthur Hale, Fifty-first New York, Second brigade, Second division, Ninth corps, Bedford, N. Y., in the National Tribune. Some one on the sidewalk would sing out: "Here comes the Fifty-first New York!" At the Battery we went aboard the boat for New Berne, N. C. During the fight at that place, March 14, 1862, my regiment was formed in line of battle. The usual whistling of the bullets came through the woods. Early that morning our orderly told us to shoot off our guns and reload, as it had rained the night before and a number of guns would not go off well. That was my fix. I said to Orderly Smith: "I can't get my gun to go off." He said that he could not help me, and told me to do the best I could in the battle.

I began to see men falling. The girl in front of me was shaved up by a ball. Our little Orderly Smith was shot dead. Pear soon left me while I was loading and firing. I saw one of my comrades lying on the ground. He did not move, and I ran to him. I ran down on my knees as I was looking for the bullet hole. I felt a tap on my shoulder, and, looking up, saw it was our chaplain, Benton. He said to me: "Young man, attend to your duty! I will attend to this man."

I began loading and firing as fast as I could, and heard a loud blast of the bugle. Our captain sang out: "Charge bayonets!" Our chaplain, Benton, was killed in the charge. As we reached the breastworks the rebels broke and ran. I climbed on top of the breastworks and jumped over to the other side. Dead and dying rebels were lying all around. A dying rebel turned his eyes toward me, stopped, and saw his lips move, but no sound came from them. I put my ear to his mouth and he whispered: "Water." I gave him a drink out of my canteen and put a blanket under his head and left him.

My first battle was Roanoke Island, then New Berne, Second Bull Run, Chantilly, South Mountain, Antietam. At South Mountain I was wounded in the leg, which rendered amputation necessary. When I was shot two of my comrades carried me about a mile in the old village of Bedford, Westchester county, and laid me down on a pile of the grass, where I lay all night. These two comrades' names were Nora and Mike Sullivan. The next day I was shot at Antietam, and he went home and died of disease.

Most Ancient Royal Family.

Were all the rulers of the world to meet on neutral ground—say Switzerland—for the purpose of taking precedence, the veteran Emperor Franz Joseph would undoubtedly take leadership all the crowned heads, according to the London Chronicle. He is entitled on account of his age or because his reign of sixty-five years is longer than that of any other living monarch, or because he is the head of the oldest reigning house in Christendom. More than half a century before the Norman conquest of England the Hapsburg ("Hawks castle") held their fortress, which overhung the Aar, and were a power to be at least distinguished. Election to the purple and diplomacy in the Hapsburg family was a century or so later, and in unbroken succession the Austrian Caesars have traced no nearer back to those simple Swiss ancestors.

Brutality in British Army.

It would seem from the accounting of an army form of advertisement indeed to attract men to the English army a hundred years ago. Writing of that period, a writer says: "Flogging was almost universal. The minimum number of lashes were gradually reduced from 1000 to 500. Without such severe discipline could not be maintained among the scum of the earth, recruited and enlisted by the bounty system. It is asserted that "the income of the Paget family was greatly augmented, a variety of expedients being resorted to for this purpose," and that "the fictitious showing of income was used by the officers of the Paget Sound company to aid in the sale of the bonds." No doubt this was not yet regarded, it is taken for granted that he will obey the order.

Remarkable Offer of Free Transportation Expenses to Moline, Ill., and the Famous Tri-Cities, and Return, Made to Intending Automobile Purchasers.

Any intending purchaser of an automobile in this vicinity who writes to Mr. Chas. E. Giltner, personal representative of Mr. Velie, care of the Velie Motor Vehicle Co., Moline, Ill., will receive full details as regards the personal offer the Velie Company is making of paying transportation expenses of intending motor car buyers in this vicinity to and from Moline.

The Velie company has always claimed that anyone going through an automobile factory, and studying carefully how an automobile is made, has a great advantage over those who merely know how to drive an automobile. In order to popularize this idea of having factory selections made and to educate Velie buyers at the Velie factory they are making this unusual offer.

This offer is made with the approval of the local Velie agents; in fact, the Velie agent hereabouts is you will guarantee service of the highest type to any purchaser of an automobile who goes to Moline and selects his car at the factory.

Any publisher of a paper in this vicinity is well acquainted with the high standing of the Velie Company and knowing the gentleman interested in the Velie and John Deere Companies for years agents for Velie Motors and Moline Implements, I can assure in recommending this offer as being of treatment to the man worthy in every way of careful consideration.

Special arrangements can be made with those preferring to visit the Velie Agencies at Omaha, Kansas City, Minneapolis or Davenport, as these cities nearer than Moline.

Write Mr. Chas. E. Giltner, c/o the Velie Motor Vehicle Co., Moline, Ill., and mention this paper.

Sermons That Carry Healing

Written for the Christian Science Monitor

"Divine Science derives its exaction from the Bible," declares Mary Baker Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, in the text-book "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 146), "and the divine origin of Science is demonstrated through the holy influence of Truth in healing sickness and sin." The statement declares a few words the authority which bases the explanatory note read from the Christian Science Quarterly before the lesson-sermon in the Sunday services of every Christian Science church or society all over the world. "Friends," it begins "because all men are in reality friends and brothers, such is a sense of the divinal greeting to the congregation assembled; "the Bible and the Christian Science textbook are our only preachers. . . . The canonical writings, together with the word of our text-book, corroborating and explaining the Bible texts in their spiritual import and application to all ages, past, present and future, constitute a sermon undivorced from truth, uncontaminated and unfettered by human hypotheses, and divinely authoritive."

This may seem a very broad statement to make, and some people have questioned it, but its authenticity may be confirmed by any individual who will earnestly and unprejudiced though investigate for himself. For an investigation he will require the Bible, the Christian Science textbook, and the Quarterly. The majority of students will soon say, "That statement is true; I have always thought that;" and again, "This is all in the Bible." Many times the inquirer will be surprised to find himself spiritually uplifted and consequently healed of physical ailments before he has completed his studies.

Christian Science proves itself by practical results to be what it claimed for it, and, by the same token, the sermon is known to be "inspired from truth." Many go into the Christian Science churches suffering with various so-called diseases to which flesh is heir and come out whole and free—delivered from their belief in disease and dismayed by the frequent unprovoked reading of the Bible (which has become the constant companion of the loyal Christian Scientist), and corroborative passages from the denominational textbook. The influence that works in these churches is more than a belief, it is an understanding that God is ever present, that He has power to heal all diseases and destroy all evil, and that He is ready to help every one of His children if they will only believe, love, loves such one with an everlasting love which attracts all to him. Many people go into these churches sorrowing, sinful, hopeless, and come out with renewed hope dawning in consciousness, because they have learned about a God who cares—a loving, nearby Father, who does not even say, sickness and death, but eradicates all unrighteous beliefs from thought and gives only good to man.

The investigator will find that this is the purifying religion which Christ Jesus taught his disciples and revealed to the world. A religion actually demonstrated by healing works proved need scientific. Likewise a sermon of Bible verses with their correct spiritual interpretation, as set forth in a textbook as to be individually demonstrable, and absolutely free from personality, ostentation, or any suggestion, is "divinely authoritive" by the Christ, Truth. Christ Jesus constantly emphasized his teaching by the works that he said the Father had sent him to do. In the tenth chapter of John we have his own words supporting the importance of his works. "If I do not the works of my Father believe me not." Again we have his positive statement. "Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that believeth on me the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do." Christendom doubted or denied these statements for centuries, until Mrs. Eddy discovered the Principle, set forth the rules in her denominational text-book of Christian Science, and gave to the world the sermon never dispelled from the divine, healing Truth.

The Christian Science sermons are taken from the Bible, the entire Bible being drawn upon from cover to cover, and the spiritual application is given from the text-book as it has applied to every age. The truth may now be used by all who will. The subjects of these sermons for the quarter beginning with January are "God," "Sacrament," "Life," "Truth," "Love," "Spirit," "Soul," "Mind," "Christ Jesus," "Man," "Substance," "Matter," and "Reality." Are they not among the most important subjects that mankind can study? Does not every individual long to know about a God who loves him, heals his iniquity and disease, and is his constant protector? All the subjects throughout this year, when studied without prejudice, unfold the spiritual sense which is man's birthright, shed the glorious light of Truth over the Scriptures; heal the sick and sinful, and bring the conviction that one may begin here and now the true understanding of God, and the real man, with the assurance that the lesson will be continued until it is perfected.

The first step is surely to begin an understanding of God, and of the man of His creating as described in the first chapter of Genesis. The great Teacher, Christ Jesus, revealed the truth that God's creation is spiritual, and that man's paramount business is to learn this truth. The Christian Science Bible lessons are imparting this momentous knowledge to man's consciousness in this age. They are studied during each week and listened to every Sunday with absorbed interest because there is ever something new to be learned about God and His infinite range of expression. It is impossible to exhaust these subjects, and as human thought unfolds and expands gradually to the marvelous infinity of the God who is divine Love it becomes a daily joy of the student to anticipate a progressive step and more of good. All the sermons give evidence that the Christ, Truth, still comes as of yore into the thoughts of men "with healing in his wings."

Emory of the Old Mission and Bowers Harbor line of boy steamers has been from Elk Rapids, where he completed arrangements for the construction of a suitable barber, which is designated to be used as an outlet for the fruit raised at Old Mission and vicinity. The Pere Marquette has offered to run a track to the dock at Elk Rapids. The steamer Helen E., passenger and freight, will make the trip from dock between Old Mission and Elk Rapids, and what fruit is carried can be transferred directly from boat to car. Capt. Emory has offered the use of his pile driver, gratis, and will supervise the work. The harbor will be suitable for docking of all small steamers and gasoline craft which will make the port.

East Jordan Herald: The boldest robbery our city has known in several years was perpetrated by a Detroit youth in our city Monday night. George Franklin, aged 18 years, came up from Detroit a week ago to visit his uncle, Elias W. Goins and family. On Wednesday evening, during the absence of the members of the family, he extracted from a bureau drawer $100 in cash, and certificates of deposit and a mortgage to the value of $600 belonging to Enoch Goins. He immediately made his get-away, but the robbery was not reported to our officers until Thursday morning. Surrounding towns were notified and about 11 a. m. he was picked up by Alba officers who on his way to the bank there. The stolen property was found on his person. He was returned to East Jordan, admitted his guilt to prosecuting attorney Pitch, and was bound over to the May term of the circuit court. In default of $1,000 bonds he was taken to the Charlevoix jail by sheriff Rodgers.

RISE WITH THE CHANGE.

We are naturally and justly sad when we think of this world as a place of change, but there is a point of view from which it appears a matter of rejoicing that it is so. It is a place of trial and probation, in which the condition of no one is fixed, he's a boundless possibility of change for the better is open to every one.—Hugh Macmillan.

GOVERNOR FERRIS TO GIVE ADDRESS

OTHERS TO SPEAK AT THIRTY-NINTH MEETING OF STATE SCHOOLMASTERS.

SESSIONS APRIL 1, 2 AND 3

Three Day Program Includes Many Interesting Subjects—Paper on Women's Suffrage Will Be Read.

Lansing.—The forty ninth meeting of the Michigan Schoolmasters' Club will be held at Ann Arbor on April 1, 2 and 3.

The program will contain many interesting subjects to be handled by men prominent in the educational world.

Included in this program will be the celebration of Washington's birthday, the evening of the opening day, when the exercises will be held in Hill auditorium. The entertainment is to be given complimentary to the School masters' club by the German societies of Ann Arbor and the university with Dr. W. W. Florer of the German department of the university presiding.

The principal address of that evening will be given by Consul General Alfred Lorisier of Chicago. A program of music will be offered, including "Evening," by Professor Williams Hand, a group of German songs by Mrs. George Hastreiter of the city, organ selections by Frank Fabry, grand lodge and German songs by Hill Darling quartette.

Governor Ferris will be one of the speakers during the three days' session, as will also Professor Hopkins of the University of Michigan, Prof. Charles Zueblin of Chicago University, Mason E. Gray, Rochester, N. Y., Dwight Andrews West of Pittsburg; Dr. E. P. Hyde, President D. V. Hawkins, Cleveland, and Dr. W. J. Hall, Nashville.

Included in the program is a symposium on new instruction in which both Dr. V. C. Vaughan of the university and Dr. W. H. Hall of Nashville will read papers, and a discussion will follow, opened by Prof. Jesse Fleming of the Upsilanti Ann.

On Wednesday the classical conference will be held, followed by a gymnastic demonstration by the university women in Barbour gymnasium, a meeting of the Physical association, and at eight o'clock, the celebration of Washington's birthday.

Thursday many conferences will be held. Among them will be a biological, classical, modern language, history, commercial and educational psychology.

The annual junior girls' play will follow. At the business session Miss Florence Barnard, '96, of Saginaw will preside as toastmistress, and toasts will be responded to by Governor Ferris, President Emeritus James B. Angell, and President Harry B. Hutchins.

Friday morning the general business meeting will be held. The afternoon of that day is to be given over to conference.

Friday afternoon, in the language conference, Miss Mary Ruthven of the Owosso high school and Miss Pauline Harris of the Pontiac high school will read papers.

Woman suffrage will have its inning, also, for Prof. E. H. Pierce of the history department of the University of Michigan will read a paper, "Woman's Sphere in Ancient Times, 1700-1897."

Professor C. S. Larzelear of the Mount Pleasant Normal school, will teach a night school, being greatly agitated in this state. "The Study of State History."

Unification of State Laws.

Although measures in their work, the commissioners on uniformity of state laws are gradually untangling many variances in state laws.

Explanatory of the work C. P. Bissell of this city, one of the Michigan commissioners, says:

The negotiable instrument law has been adopted in 47 states, the uniform warehouse receipt act in 39 states, the uniform sales act, in 11 states, the uniform transfer of corporate stock act in nine states and a uniform act as to the execution of wills has been adopted in six states.

The Michigan commissioners in their report to the last legislature said: Nothing tends more to the constitutionality of the power in the general government than the inharmonious and inconsistent laws of the several states, the effect of which is to cause the business men of the country to look to the general government for relief from wrongs that properly under our form of government should be righted by state statutes which when uniform apply every where.

State Meeting for Battle Creek.

Presbyterians from all parts of the northern part of the state of Michigan met in Battle Creek and heard Rev. John Timothy Stone, moderator of the general assembly of the Presbyterian church of American. Talks were given during the rally by Rev. A. H. Atwood, superintendent of the synod of Michigan, who makes his headquarters in Lansing; Rev. J. Ambrose Dunkirk, chairman of the home missionary committee, stationed at Saginaw, and J. C. Blaisdell, president Alma college.

Furnace Man to Elsner.

A committee report favoring incorporation was made at the annual session of the Michigan Throughout association in Lansing. The question of incorporation had been under discussion at previous sessions and the favorable report was received with much interest. Officers were elected as follows: President, W. H. Morton, Paris, vice-president, W. M. Hicks, Mt. Pleasant, and secretary-treasurer, R. B. Hughes, Ionia. Mr. Hughes' resignation was unanimous, and he carried over his own protest.

Need Not Fear Tuberculin Test.

Many stock breeders are apprehensive of the tuberculin test, fearing that it would mean the infection of the animals in their respective herds. This sentiment has been encountered frequently by members of the dairy live stock commission. As to the commissioners' views of the tuberculin test, Dr. E. T. Hallman, of the bacteriological department of M. A. C., says there is no possibility of producing disease by this test.

Starts "Safety First" Campaign.

In accordance with his announced plan of two weeks ago, Superintendent Keeler of the department of public instruction, began sending out to the school principals throughout the state definite plans for his "Safety First campaign among the school children.

He is sending out placards which he desires to be placed on every school and a bulletin the contents of which Mr. Keeler asks to have read to the pupils. The bulletin is illustrated by two pictures, one showing boys crossing railroad tracks apparently without any attempt to scan the tracks either way, while the other shows a number of boys keeping in the state by hiding under the end of a gondola car.

The work in the public school must be the backbone of the Safety First instruction," says Superintendent Keeler. "There the greatest number can be reached most effectively. Although there is greatest need for the work in the schools in the vicinity of railroad centers, there are very few localities in the state where the work cannot be carried on to advantage. The Safety First movement is to help the individual help himself. As a result of the educational movement in the localities where the work has been carried on, the number of killed and injured has been reduced at least two-thirds. The work in Michigan thus far has been local. A concentrated effort is to be made.

The placard, which is to be shown in a conspicuous place, has twelve commandments. They are:

"Do not walk on railroad bridges or trestles.

"Do not walk around the end of lowered gates.

"Do not crawl under lowered gates.

"Do not loiter about railroad stations.

"Do not jump on or off trains, cars or engines.

"Do not crawl under, over or between cars.

"Do not cross tracks without stopping, looking and listening to see whether a train is coming.

"Do not play on or around turntables.

"Never take chances. The safe course is always the best, and it is the quickest in the same run.

"Be on the alert.

"Get the safety habit.

"Practice it every minute."

May Tax Michigan Hunters.

A bill will be introduced at the next session of the state legislature by members of the Michigan sportsmen's association to provide that all resident hunters, except deer and beaver hunters, more than seventeen years old say a fee of $1, and that non-resident hunters be taxed $10.

This action was decided upon at the meeting of the association held at Grand Rapids when the present license law was considered inefficient. It is proposed that the revenue from the licensing shall be paid over to the state treasurer to be used exclusively in the protection and propagation of game and fish.

Following the lead of W. B. Mershon of Saginaw the members of the association will go on record as favoring a non-partisan, non-political fish and game commission to replace the present department.

In this instance Charles Hoyt of Lansing, member of the state game warden's department, spoke openly in opposition to the plan. He also attempted to refute the statement made by Secretary W. L. Tatem of the department that the present plan of two weeks ago, Superintendent Keeler of the department of public instruction, began sending out to the school principals throughout the state definite plans for his "Safety First campaign among the school children.

WESTINGHOUSE DEAD

FAMOUS INVENTOR EXPIRES SUDDENLY IN NEW YORK.

Multi-Millionaire Was Ill Several Weeks—Death Kept Secret by His Family.

New York, March 14.—George Westinghouse, aged sixty-seven, inventor and multimillionaire manufacturer of railway devices is dead. He died suddenly on Thursday. He had been seriously ill for several weeks of heart trouble, but his friends and relatives had kept secret his indisposition.

George Westinghouse was one of the most noted inventors and manufacturers in the world. He was born at Central Bridge, N. Y. December 6, 1846. As a youth he spent much of his time in his father's machine shop and at the age of fifteen years made his first invention, a rotary engine.

To relate the history of the inventor, he invented a device for replacing railroad cars on the track in 1865. Three years later he invented the Westinghouse air brake. He drew the attention of railway officials, the telegraph and electrical machinery. It is proposed that the people benefit by the licensing shall be paid over to the state treasurer to be used exclusively in the protection and propagation of game and fish.

AVENGES HER HUSBAND

WIFE OF FRENCH MINISTER OF FINANCE KILLS EDITOR OF PARIS FIGARO.

MURDER RESULT OF FEUD

Affair Has Held the Attention of French Capital for Some Time—Noted Journalist Had Accused Official of Corruption.

Paris, March 15.—Gaston Calmette, editor of the Figaro and a noted journalist, paid the penalty of the unwritten French law which forbids that the honor of a woman shall be dragged into a public controversy. He was assassinated, his body riddled with bullets, by Mme. Henriette Caillaux, wife of Joseph Caillaux, minister of finance, who had been the subject of bitter personal attacks published in Figaro and signed by Calmette. He died on Monday.

The Caillaux-Calmette feud had held the attention of Paris for a long time. The Figaro editor repeatedly accused the finance minister of political corruption. The feud reached its climax last week when the Figaro published the contents of two letters that Caillaux wrote to his present wife in 1901—before they were married and when she was the wife of Leo Claretie, the literary critic of the Figaro.

It was not to avenge this attack upon her husband, but to vindicate her own honor that Madame Caillaux started out to shoot Calmette. With a stated purpose in her muff she went to the Figaro office at the business time of the evening and sent up her card to Calmette's room.

Calmette, the famous novelist and academician, was with the editor when her card was received and Calmette was astounded when he learned the identity of his caller.

"Do not see her," M. Bourget advised.

"She is a woman," Calmette replied. "I must receive her."

Bourget thereupon shaked his friend good-night and withdrew.

Immediately upon entering the room Mme. Caillaux raised her arm and fired five shots at a distance of six paces. Calmette fell dead, shot through at the first shot and lay apparently lifeless. Two of the shots hit the attendants seized the woman, who resisted perfect self possession.

Mme. Caillaux, it is said, had badgered to their graves, and had passed through the other shots on the beach known how many others, living or dead, are hit.

One hundred and seventy men, work for the Pullman company, engaged in finishing Inspector McKelver, were ordered out just in time, and had barely reached the shelter of a hill.

William Davidson, employed in the sand dunes, was shot out dead, and the bodies of a man and a woman Ten laborers are missing.

Among the laborers taken out alive are: Miss May McIlvin, stenographer for the sand company; Winfield Sandersman, Hazel Sunderman, Henry Suttman, Stephen Paulter and Henry Hasselmeyer.

James Cobb, manager of the sand company, was pinned beneath a section of the fallen wall. After two hours of hard work he was rescued by alive and surgeons think he will recover.

It may be days before it is definitely known how many were killed. Reports from the beach say there is the shore there were about a dozen persons when the disaster was caused by a high wind.

Fire Destroys Hotel in Canadian Town—Big Conflagration on Baltimore Docks.

Brescoe, Ontario, March 19.—Four persons lost their lives in a fire which destroyed the Brescoe hotel and for a time threatened to wipe out a big area of the town. The victims were Mrs. Thomas McCauley, her son, a daughter and the daughter's maid. More than twenty guests fled in their night clothing. The loss was $30,000.

Black Hole of Calcutta.

The lunate corruption and depravity of human nature is illustrated by more clearly brought out than in the famous Black Hole of Calcutta. That atrocity stands unrivaled as an instance of the almost inferred human cruelty and depravity, and there is a large number, yet leaving a few survivors, to prove that the people concerned have been slain or executed at one time. Death being expected, that probably only safe keeping of the prisoners was intended, and only fear of breaking a despot's sleep prevented their earlier release. Yet this torture, continued in the history of Africa, whose record cannot be read unmoved by the Christian, "for a hundred and fifty years," was produced merely by crowd of Europeans, and by the Portuguese and Dutch. No fires, racks, nor scourges were needed, all that was done or required, was to shut up the victims in a room each the amount of air and space to which he was accustomed, crush him out at least three feet, should and out at least three trees.

He has been able to show three great nursery companies that it will pay to sell two-year-old trees at one third their usual cost. Authorities at the state agricultural college, experts from several nurseries, representatives of the Western Michigan Development bureau, and others versed in apple growing, have pledged their cooperation to the end that a fair start will be made, and personal work will be conducted throughout the county at no expense to the farmers.

Hardy varieties have been selected to the end that farmers will not take any chances of failure because of the long winters. Those farmers who in other years have selected certain varieties because of the best may have taken care of their culture, have made a great success of apples in this part of the state, in fact the apple crop in Northern Michigan is and will do as well in northern Michigan as in western New York, and that is sufficient to convince people in Ludington.

Ludington, of course, is enthusiastic. Officers have been elected and the apple propaganda is being pushed forward throughout the countryside. In the fall another day will be set aside for planting in the same way. Careful attention will be given the farmers by experts. Thus from year to year, and twice a year will trees be set out and the good work continued. Mr. Ferris has been a real power for Cadillac and this part of the state for a quarter of a century, and it is recognized that he and his paper have never before started anything that promised more good for that territory and its people than his apple growing plans.

WHERE BEST GROWN IN COUNTRY IS GROWN

Seed Warehouse in Charlevoix County.

HAS FINE ORCHARD.

Squires & Co. of South Beardman have 170 acres of apples, the finest apple orchard, the land of the trees being but one year. Shipments are made three years. The trees are favorably located, and it is said there is not a bad year in the county. The company regards the orchard as better than the average investment of assessors, and is a bigger life insurance company in the world. If the owners insist upon carrying their 120 acres for ten years, and being a business concern it is in the power of the company to show that they will, they will have a "pollyer" than any investment in Michigan that would make most old time pollyers look like the proverbial "thirty cents, bad money." That appears or chard is an object lesson that makes the big apple growers of southern Michigan more than envious.

FAIR WILL STICK.

The directors of the Copper Country Fair association spent a foolish few minutes recently when they entertained a motion to change the date of the fair for 1914. It soon came to the conclusion that it would do no such thing, never do. Houghton county is making greater progress than any other county in the state, and the people of the upper peninsula and is exceeding the efforts of any other county south of the straits, so why give up the fair. It was not given up, and

1,000 FARMERS IN BIG APPLE CAMPAIGN

Next best to having a powerful bunch of prosperous industries in a town to back it up and provide bread and butter for the people thereof—or even better than that, as claimed by many, it is to have a good agricultural community. Such is the belief of the business men of Cadillac. Now Cadillac can and does, boast of the best line of industries of any city in the state of Michigan, taking into people, but Cadillac well knows that these industries will not last forever, and believes in getting ready for that proverbial rainy day when the lumber will be no more and several of the big mills of today will have ceased their business perhaps forever.

Cadillac has never fallen down on a big project, and does not expect to now in its latest, and that may prove to be its greatest project. This new project is expected to be of itself made value not only to that city, but to the entire county of Wexford.

Perry F. Powers, editor of the Cadillac Evening News, recently stated in an editorial in the paper that he is a recently additor general of Michigan. If his plans work out successfully, will be remembered as the man who, knowing nothing about apple culture, promoted one of the biggest apple growing campaigns ever started in this country. He knows that he has great faith in the virtue of the soil around his home city, and he has well grounded faith in the great campaign in which he expects to enlist this coming season at least 1,000 farmers within a few miles in his apple project. He plans to have his work on Arbor day for several thousand apple trees of certain varieties to be selected in the addition to that he believes that every householder in the city, who has

REPORT SENT TO CAPITAL

500 Men Were to Mobilize in Chicago and Launch Raids—California Officer Discovers Plot.

Sacramento, Cal., March 19.—In a remarkable document which came to the war department in Washington, Adjutant General Forbes of the National Guard of California has given official cognizance to an alleged plot of "General" Kelley's unemployed army to seize the federal arsenal at Rock Island, Ill., in order to equip an army of 500,000 men with arms and ammunition for a revolution against the government.

General Forbes' report is based on one made by Lieut. Colonel Franklin Grimes of a Sacramento company of the state guard, who joined Kelley's army as a "spy" several days ago while acting as a spy on behalf of his chief.

Lieutenant Grimes with a wealth of detail told how he had gained the confidence of the leaders of the unemployed, who divulged to him their plot for capturing the United States government. There was to be a mobilization of many armies at Chicago, according to Grimes, the report declared that city as best they might. The leaders, according to the report, believed they could assemble 500,000 men at Chicago. Then, moving in force, they would attack the arsenal.

Retreat out of Chicago would be commandeered, said the lieutenant, and the unemployed force, well armed, would be rushed toward Washington, where it would at once have the national government at its power.

There would then spread a seditious revolution of the unemployed against the employers of labor, which would depose all civil and military authorities and install the army's leaders as supreme.

Grimes declared his informants asserted the movement was being conducted from the east, and that Kelley's force was but one small unit in the whole. Among many other private statements was one that the leaders were relying on the support of a large Canadian contingent.

President Holds That Ambassador's Address in London on Mexico Depredations Was Harmless.

Washington, March 18.—President Wilson on Monday exonerated Ambassador Walter Hines Page, the United States envoy to the court of St. James, and held that Page's address in London during the week was not a single phrase at which this government might take offense. The president believes that the speech was misconstrued and misrepresented.

He told his callers that the address as it has now been reported to him was an absolutely accurate statement of fact, and without a line to which this government could take exception.

As an instance, he said, of how Mr. Page has been misquoted, the president cited the fact that the passage of the address was called as follows:

"We will repeal the exemption clause of the Panama act, not merely to please England."

What Mr. Page did say, the president declared, was:

"We will repeal the clause, not to please England, but," etc.

The speaker was Mme. Montessori, the Italian educationalist. She continued:

"On my way hither on the boat there was a romantic American heiress to whom a young magazine writer from the West paid assiduous court. But he, on account of the low rates of the magazine, was as poor as a church mouse, and so the heiress would not consider him seriously.

"As they leaned side by side over the rail one afternoon, the heiress, looking over the rolling waters, sighed and said:

THE BEST TREATMENT FOR ITCHING SCALPS, DANDRUFF AND FALLING HAIR

To allay itching and irritation of the scalp, prevent dry, thin and falling hair, remove crusts, scales and dandruff, the following simple, inexpensive and beautiful treatment will generally prove agreeable and economical. On retiring, comb the hair out straight and thoroughly, then begin at the side and make a parting, gently rubbing Cuticura Ointment into the parting with a bit of soft flannel held over the end of the finger. Anoint additional parts about half an inch apart until the entire scalp has been treated, the purpose being to get the Cuticura Ointment on the scalp skin rather than on the hair. This done, take a hot Resinol or Sulphur soap and lather the parting and the scalp with a good lather, and shampoo the head with the same. Shampoos alone may be used as often as agreeable, but once or twice a month is generally sufficient for those who have treated for women's hair.

It is surely a mark of appreciation of the well of northern Michigan that so many seed companies have located here after years of experiment farms in that part of the state. Now the Cole Seed company, one of some of the oldest farms in the state are located in northwestern Michigan, and all the best seeds are raised in wild land, or virgin, or jack-pine land. It is the land in southern Michigan, it is the land in that section being all land, or "Hoven" on jack-pine land. No, indeed, but on the contrary it is the land in that section which can, it is raise anything. It has the added advantage of the lake breezes from lake Michigan, which make growers declare is well worth while. Not only Michigan seed concerns prefer seed in northern Michigan, but some from other states from the far East and from the South. Beans especially are a favorite seed crop, and vast acreage are grown for seed about

FAUNCE'S GREAT WORK.

The farmers of northwestern Michigan have much to be thankful for that County School Commissioner W. H. Faunce is "in their midst." He began making good as a school commissioner, and that is no easy job in a county like Wexford. He has 85 schools to care for, and in eight years he has brought up those schools to a point of perfection not exceeded by many counties in the state.

He has done more. His work taken him on long drives. He stops and gets dinner or supper in any farm house where he happens to be. He sleeps wherever nightfall overtakes him. Thus he has worked up an acquaintance second to none in the entire county, and whatever he asks for, he gets. That is why, when he hobored out to the boys of the county that they ought to be ashamed of the way their fathers were growing corn, he was able to organize a Boys' Growing club of more than 100 members. They have held four corn shows in the last four years and have made great records. some of the boys below, went to the agricultural college for a short course as a reward for their work. They have accomplished what Mr. Faunce desired—showed their fathers that they were not doing their own duty in the matter of corn.

Now, Mr. Faunce is doing another good work. He is helping save the apple trees of his county. He interest hundreds of rural school boys and girls in hunting for the tent caterpillar which is the enemy of the apple trees, and some other trees. It was agreed that the week of February 14 should be devoted by the boys and girls to the spare time of that week—to gathering caterpillar masses, found aplenty in the trees in their district hornbeam. Would the plan work well, the following week, March 14-21, is not much poetry in scouting out into the orchards on a cold day to pull a nasty

WHAT FARMERS ARE DOING IN LEELANAU A COUNTY OF SUMMER RESORTS

In Fertile Leelanau County.

The farmer in Leelanau county whose farm is not contiguous to a lake is the exception. There are "acres" of them, and many beauties in the bunch. Leelanau is full of lakes and orchards, with many farmer combinations. It is one of the most delightful counties in Michigan with a great lake shore line that beats any other county in the state. There are many old, heavily productive farms that yield general crops, and some of the best fruit farms in Michigan, and within the county limits. Many business and professional men of the large cities have their summer homes in Leelanau county, perhaps a fruit farm managed by a caretaker, and they like to come around one who is able to get a fine living out of it, and turn over to his employer every fall a far larger net than the owner of the farm would get out of his money in bank, stock or bond. Then in this beautiful lake region there are many fruit farms improved and run by retired business or professional men, so struck with the beauty of the locality and the idea of living the unsentimental life of a fruit farmer, they gladly have given up the city for the farm.

CABBAGE INDUSTRY IN BENZIE COUNTY

Previous to the year 1897 there was probably not a barrel of cabbage raised to be shipped in the whole of Benzie county, in the spring of that year Joseph M. Masters of Chicago came to Frankfort with some genuine Holland cabbage seed that he imported direct from Europe himself and distributing this seed among a few farmers who became interested. That first year Joseph H. Masters & Sons bought and stored in their new warehouse at Frankfort 500 tons of cabbage. Since that time the industry has grown, and for the last eight or ten years the annual production has been in the neighborhood of 3,000 tons; most of this is bought and stored in the three cabbage warehouses in the county. One of these is owned by W. L. Case, near Thompson, and has a capacity of 500 tons; the Jackson warehouse in Elberta holds 700 tons, while the two warehouses owned by the Frankfort Fruit & Produce company hold 1,000 tons.

There is probably no other commodity that varies in price as much as cabbage, the price, however, depending entirely on supply and demand. The price at harvest time, which is about November 15, for late years has been between $5 and $10 per ton to the farmer. The field price is seldom less than $10 and sixteen dollars is the average price. The number of partial failures during the past seven years has been quite light due to drought. Under these conditions there it might be interesting to note two remarkable instances of success obtained in spite of adverse circumstances. Oregon Oliver put out two acres of young apple orchard to cabbage in June 10, 1912, leaving out two rows of cabbage where the trees came from the end of the orchard. He sold cabbage, realizing $153.75, with a short distance of Mr. Oliver is the farm of Hankison Brothers, who put out 3½ acres of cabbage, which yielded 100 tons of the best marketable heads—a return of over $400, or $120 per acre. Part of the Hankison cabbage field was hardwood forest the previous winter, having just been lumbered off. It is only fair to say that the price paid to the grower for cabbage is high this year, as all overflower varies, and that the average farmer has been about ha'f normal.

The cabbage crop is one of the easiest to raise. The seed is first drilled in rows about 14 inches apart, one seed

CANADA WINNING CHAMPIONSHIPS IN AGRICULTURE

The Latest Is Winning Championship for Oats a Third Time.

Recently we published the fact of remarkable winnings by Canadian farmers in several events during the past three or four years. The latest is that of Messrs. J. C. Hill & Sons of Lloydminster, Saskatchewan, who won in a hard contest for the championship over Montana. At the National Corn Exposition at Dallas during February, Montana oats were awarded the championship for the United States. Waiting for the winner of this to be announced was a pack of oats belonging to the Canadian growers above mentioned, and alongside of these was a like quantity belonging to a Minnesota grower, who was barred from the regular competition because he got at one time the winner of the trophy—the prize. The three oats were side by side on the judge's bench. It would not be possible to bring together three more likely samples. The Montana and Saskatchewan entries were of equal weight—50 pounds to the bushel. The Minnesota sample was some "three pounds lighter." The judge was unanimous in favor of the Saskatchewan. A Texas judge, Kansas and Iowa greatly to the credit of the Canadian product was that the oats, grown in 1913, were entered and won by those who had competed during the past three years, only on each occasion. This, the third winning, gives the Hills the title of the world's championship and full possession of the splendid $1,500 silver trophy competed for by the states of Colorado.

A mile or more wide, the Western Canada winners, another splendid advertising card, were grown 300 miles north of the International Boundary line, proving that in this latitude, all the conditions of climate, soil, and greater perfection and with more abundant sunshine than further south all this country are to be found farmers who produce oats running from 42 to 50 pounds to the bushel, with yields of from 60 to 100 bushels per acre. Wheat also does well, grades high, and yields from 35 to 40 bushels per acre. The same may be said of any portion of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, famed where the wheat not only is a sure yielders, cultivated hay and alfalfa are grown, thus giving plenty of feed, and a good, well ventilated, dry, warm shelter and plenty of water, being the conditions in which stock thrive, has been able to record. Thousands of farmers from the United States who have their homes in Canada bear ample testimony to the benefits they have derived from their change in western Canada.—Advertisement.

Not Much of a Mystery.

Two boys had been playing on the street of one of the large cities, spoke to each other as follows: "Say, Bill, I'll tell you a secret." "Well," said Smith, "what is it?" "Well, I'm going to be a Trumpet, was found dead in his office last night." "Yes, so I hear," answered Brown. "Foul play is suspected, of course," he added. "That's the police theory. But why should anybody want to kill a Trumpet? Who is making any enemies?" "None at all, as far as I can hear. You know he had no money to speak of and was not putting a pure, modest, highly moral family paper." "That explains it!" "Who could have killed him?" "Why, he was killed by a person starved to death!"—San Francisco Argonaut.

TRANSFORMATION OF THE ORIENT

Psychological Opportunity of Missionaries Is at Hand.

AMERICAN IDEAS GAIN HOLD

Asiatics Breaking Away From Shackles of Ignorance and Superstition. Much More Progress in the Far East Than Generally Supposed, Says Y. M. C. A. Student Secretary.

"The people of the orient are hungry for new truth, especially western or American truth." This is the conclusion of Dr. W. D. Wetherford, the well known southern Y. M. C. A. student secretary, who recently returned from a trip around the world studying the influence of Christian missions.

Dr. Wetherford, in a recent address at Hampton Institute, described some of the Chinese and Japanese economic conditions, which show, he said, the need of the influence of Christian missionaries.

That English and American ideas are eagerly sought by the orientals is shown by some of the street signs printed in English. A few follow: "English Taught Up to the Latest G." "Hairdressing Cute—Men Properly Barbered." Behind these absurd signs there is, in the opinion of Dr. Wetherford, the tragedy of a people eager to work their way out of the bondage of ignorance and superstition.

In the Imperial university of Tokyo there are over 70,000 volumes. Of this number some 100,000 are printed in English. On the shelves of the leading Japanese bookshops are the latest German and English books on civics, economics, sociology and philosophy. The new truth is eagerly sought and quickly applied.

Progress in the Far East.

Dr. Wetherford said frankly that the trip was not half as slow as he thought he would find it. He described very vividly his railroad journey through Manchuria on a first class Japanese train, which was made up of Pullman compartment cars, a good dining car and a great American locomotive. Travelling on a train time at the rate of forty miles an hour was made possible in the far east through the introduction of American high speed products.

He described, too, one of the great cotton mills in Kobe, Japan, in which 2,000 operatives work. The company operating this mill, and eight other similar mills, is capitalized at about $2,000,000 in gold. It furnishes free meals and lodging, and provides schools for the children of the mill operatives and employs a force of its men and women.

This social service idea was brought to Kobe by the general manager of the cotton mill who had been Y. M. C. A. secretary at Yale ministering to the soldiers in the Manchurian trenches.

Cheap Labor in Japan.

Dr. Wetherford says that great mines throughout the far east are idle just below the line of efficiency. There are millions of people in China who have not enough level land to do the prevailing economic conditions.

Mr. Nagasell Dr. Wetherford saw Japanese women handling baskets of coal for miners or gravelers loaded with very few impedimenta, for some 15 cents a day. In the match factories of Japan a woman who is able to turn 20,000 labels a day on boxes receives 30 cents for twelve hours of labor.

The Japanese are book shops that there are twenty-one skilled and unskilled professional paying individuals from 31 cents a day down to 6½ cents a day. In China men who act as coolies carriers receive 3½ cents a day, and out of this sum they buy almost one-half for the privilege of engaging in this laborious occupation.

WOULD PENSION THE AGED.

Connecticut Representative Urges the United States to Take the Lead.

Representative Thomas L. Reilly of Connecticut is offering to congress a bill to create a commission to consider the question of pensions for aged government employees want on record as favoring a general old age pension plan.

The resolution authorizes a commission of five members, to be named by the president, and its report would be submitted within a year. An appropriation $25,000 to defray expenses of the commission would be asked.

"The more I have studied the question," said Mr. Reilly, "the more I am convinced that all worthy citizens should after they have reached a certain age say sixty-five or seventy, be pensioned at a moderate rate—enough to take care of them and prevent their going to the poorhouse or depending on charity.

"In matter of this kind the United States should lead. If a general old age pension system is adopted—and I am sure one will be eventually—nothing would be lost in the aged, who are unable to care for themselves, now to be taken care of one way or another by public or private charitable institutions.

"It would solve the problem of pauperism to a great extent. It might be a good idea to make relatives responsible to contribute toward the maintenance of a fund for this purpose."

CONCENTRATION.

He who would do some great and lasting thing in this short life of ours must apply himself to the work with the concentration of his forces at the expectators who live only to amuse themselves, like insensity.—Francis Parkman.

Iron, Gold and Water.

Iron is seven times as heavy as water, but for bulk, gold and silver, times as heavy.

THE FLOWER GARDEN.

Time Now to Start Plants to Get Out Early in the Season.

It is now time for the amateur or country woman to begin to think about her garden.

In planting in cement borders, which may be started now, she should think of their future and not overrun. Plenty of room should be left for later development. Clear spaces which kept free from weeds and well hoed are by no means unsightly.

She should make the holes sufficiently wide to allow for the spreading of the roots. When the planting is finished dress the beds with a scattering of leaf mold.

Chrysanthemum plants will be requiring attention now. Many of those which were propagated indoors during the two last months will now need repotting.

To discover those that want shifting carefully shake the plant from the pot. Should the roots be coiled thickly round a mass of mold this shows the plant is needing more space. Supposing it has been in a three inch pot it will now require the five inch size.

No cramping should be necessary until after mildmount, on the success of these plants depends largely on the winter. It must be accomplished carefully and. If overcrowded the mold turns sour and the roots do not assist life's purchase. If kept too dry they shrink, wither and ultimately to many fairy-like pots.

Some plants coming from a distance should never be repotted in the autumn. Select a sheltered but cool place.

Respecting the verbena, aim at early culture. If the seeding is left too late the winter frost will kill the plants while the blooms are at its best.

The seeds may be sown in January, but it is not too late now. Glass covered pans should be used and a temperature temperature is required of about 60 degrees. When the third leaf begins to appear transplant the seedlings about an inch apart. Boxes or pans are preferable to pots for this purpose.

The Verbena venosa, or velvet verbena, is a most useful border plant. It grows much taller than the bedding kind. It has bluish violet color and grows to a foot and a half in height.

Given a sunny aspect it should commence to bloom in July. In cold localities it is safer to lift the roots before winter.

SIAMESE TWINS SEVERED.

Separation of French Babies a Notable Triumph of Surgery.

An operation of great importance to the surgical world has just been performed in Paris. The so called "Siamese twins," Madeleine and Suzanne Durand, were separated with specially constructed instruments by Dr Hue (aveline) assisted by Dr Rieg, chief of Dr Victor Lemaire and his wife who also is a physician. Numerous other surgeons were present.

A short account of the event, and the babies cried a little during the operation, but the operation proved successful.

The girls were born on Nov 28, 1911. They were joined above the stomach over the letters of the breastbone by a band of hard flesh about a foot in circumference.

The organs were entirely distinct. The sacrum of the girls was joined, though always disposed to life was considered possible in French surgeons. Two years ago the girls were joined above the stomach over the letters of the breastbone by a band of hard flesh about a foot in circumference.

The organs were entirely distinct. The sacrum of the girls was joined, though always disposed to life was considered possible in French surgeons. Two years ago the girls were joined above the stomach over the letters of the breastbone by a band of hard flesh about a foot in circumference.

It does sound better to say that we accepted the position than to say we nearly ran our legs off and told Tony him to get it.

SYNOPSIS.

Percy Darrow, young scientist, in search of a job, enters Party's restaurant in Chicago. Party's McCarthy gal tips Percy forward by an anonymous message ordering him to the Hotel Kinzie. Here an attempt is made seriously, Darrow thinks at first, to poison him. Later he is attacked by a masked man who, when Darrow escapes, throws a bomb into the Allas Building, a new office building of great importance. Darrow's chief, Dr. Schermerhorn, the electric connections are restored, and the building saved. Darrow's chief claims he answer at all. Prompt. It is Darrow's entire project. Representatives of New York is cut off. Percy Darrow takes his place. He is escorted to the place of Jack Warford, a college chum, who is in trouble. Warford is to run down the man who is responsible for trouble. McCarthy has just received an anonymous letter ordering him to the Allas Building, where Dr. Schermerhorn is waiting for an answer. Next day Dr. Schermerhorn's laboratory is blown up, all leading suspected. Prof. Eldridge, inventor of the wireless telephone, is missing. Darrow's chief claims he knows the man who is sending the warnings has discovered the secret of Dr. Schermerhorn's discovery

How to Detect the Alum Baking Powder

"Which are the alum baking powders; how can I avoid them unless they are named?" asks a housekeeper.

Here is one way: take the can of a low-priced powder in your hand and read the ingredient clause upon the back label. The law requires that if the powder contains alum that fact must be there stated. If you find one of the ingredients named alum, or sulphate of aluminum, you have found an alum baking powder.

There is another and a better way. You don't have to know the names of the alum powders. Use Royal Baking Powder only; that assures you a cream of tartar powder, and the purest and most healthful baking powder beyond question.

Nordrum Is to Remain

MARCH 30, 1914.

To Whom it May Concern:

It has been rumored, and no doubt for campaign purposes, that Nordrum is to leave Charlevoix for other fields, and to set the people right on this matter, I wish to state that I have tendered my services to the Booth Fisheries Co. for another year and that I have received a letter of acceptance, dated Chicago March 20th, 1914 and reads as follows:

Mr. Nordrum, Charlevoix, Mich.

Dear Sir: In keeping with our conversation at Fort Huron, I hereewith accept your proposition covering your services for another year, beginning April 1, 1914 and to run until April 1, 1915, to be located at Charlevoix, Mich., in charge of our interests in that territory. Hoping that the coming year will be as pleasant and more prosperous than the past, I am, Yours very truly, (Signed) J. P. Tippett.

The letter above referred to may be examined at any time at my office. I have also another letter accompanying the above which reads in part as follows: "Am enclosing herewith acceptance of your proposition and hope that you will be with us for many years to come."

All of which is respectfully submitted

O. NORDRUM.

F. D. Kercher, of Chicago, who owns one of the resort cottages at Walloon Lake came up last Friday to see the lion go out, it being a new experience for him. While at his cottage he secured a fine milk from a nearby farmer and drinking the same was stricken with ptomaine poison. Saturday and Sunday he was entertained for his recovery as his condition was very serious, but today he is much better and, it is thought, will recover.

After an illness of only five days Mrs. Sophia Jane McGulpin, wife of Alexander I. McGulpin, died of pneumonia Tuesday afternoon at her home in Harbor Springs. Sophia Jane Stevens was born 76 years ago on Mackinac Island of French and Scotch parentage and at the age of 20 years was united in marriage to Alexander McGulpin. With her husband she came as one of the earliest white settlers to Little Traverse and since that time has been associated with the people of that vicinity. For the past 55 years the family have lived continuously in Harbor Springs.

Cheboygan Tribune: Work on rebuilding, enlarging and making ready the land dry dock for log business will start in about two weeks time. J. L. Crandall, of the Crandall Engineering Co., a firm building and dry dock contractor from Boston, Mass., was in the city yesterday in conference with Dr. A. McGerow, Lund Bros., and F. S. Moody, publicity man for the chamber of commerce. Mr. Crandall returned home with a signed contract this morning and he will at once arrange for the blue prints plans and specifications and secure engineers and labor for pushing the construction work. It is expected that $20,000 will be expended on the building operations. A dry dock large enough to handle the largest boats sailing the Great Lakes will be built. Between 40 and 50 men will be engaged in the work and as may will be employed in the regular dry dock work during the season.

A sea serpent, 105 feet long, will wriggle along the streets of Petoskey on June 25, spitting fire and smoke from its enormous mouth. The creature will be a life-like representation of the serpent which is supposed to inhabit Little Traverse bay, and which did much toward advertising the northern Michigan resort region some years ago. There are many persons who claim to have seen the Little Traverse bay sea serpent. The first, however, was brought into Dr. Alexander Winfield, justice of the peace. To him was given the credit for discovering the reptile. This was 20 years ago. Dr. Werden was supposed to have seen the creature gliding through the waves of Little Traverse. Its head near Petoskey and its tail emerging out far from Harbor Springs, 10 miles away. The water was churned into mountains of waves, and fish leaped clear of the surface in fright. After that, it was no difficult task to "see" the water dragon, and every season imaginative tourists would spy it. Now, all the tales that have been told will see the realization in the big serpent which is being constructed under the supervision of George W. McCabe, chairman of the parade committee of the Petoskey Elks.

City Government

The management of the city by its elective and appointive officers, should be so conducted as to provide the greatest safety and security to life, liberty and property.

The greatest abuse, is in regard to property. A person may be over taxed, or his property over valued, his property may be destroyed by fire, unless a competent fire department is made and trained. Our city is justly proud of its fire-fighting equipment and the volunteer firemen.

As to taxes: the burden for some years has been a great one in the matter of revenue to the city being obliged to maintain a water and electric lighting plant for a city of 7,000 during three months of the year, and for the balance of the year having but 2,500 people to support such a large system. Again public improvements have been many, there is no city of equal size that can point to as many miles of cement sidewalk, or sewers and pavements.

In this form of municipal administration, the annual tax budget for the city taxes was $59,904.25. In 1911 the state tax commission reviewed Charlevoix county and the valuations were greatly increased, and the annual tax budget was $25,095.38. At the end of Mr. Hampton's second administration a report was made as of March 1, 1912, signed by Will E. Hampton, Mayor.

A portion of which is as follows:

"Two years ago, on March 1, 1910 the city owed the banks borrowed money, represented by two running notes amounting to $6,800.46. It is surely a pleasure to report that we now owe them nothing and have in addition to wiping out this floating debt paid out $7,000 of bonds and time contracts out of previous years, and have paid our running expenses in cash, during the two years since March 1, 1910.

In April, 1912, Mr. Nordrum was elected mayor by the the Republican party, and took the reins of government with the city's finances in the best condition they had been in a great many years.

The annual tax budget for 1912, under Mr. Nordrum, was $55,000.22 near, $10,000 greater than under Mr. Hampton's administration. No explanation of the same was ever made, later when the annual report was made, March 1, 1913, the general funds showed a balance of $4,211.66.

During the month of March 1913, Mayor Nichols made a summary accounting and explanation relative to the taxes and on that platform was elected, and promised to reduce the taxes for 1913 from the sum of $55,000.22 to a one per cent tax amounting to $22,845.67. Mr. Nichols administration has paid all debts due by the city and on March 1, 1914 had $10,975.47 cash in the general funds.

Mayor Nichols appropriated in taxes $12,135.77 less than under Mr. Nordrum and at the end of the year had $5,000.00 cash, more than Mr. Nordrum had at the end of his term.

This would apparently show that Mayor Nichols run the city for $17,000.00 less than Mr. Nordrum. However Mr. Nordrum he given credit for expending $5,500 of the funds on the Hibbard avenue paving, the balance of $6,000.00 that was expended on Dixon avenue paving was made in the form of bond issues taken from the sinking funds, of which $1,000 was paid under Mr. Nichols, this would entitle Mr. Nordrum to a credit of $4,000.00 which would show that Mr. Nichols operated the city for $13,000.00 less than Mr. Nordrum. In other words, under Mr. Nordrum the tax rate for every man, woman and child residing in the City of Charlevoix was $14.49. Under Mr. Nichols the tax rate was $9.07, a difference of $5.42.

Mr. Nicholls brought to the city a business management and reduced the taxes just as he promised. This year Mr. Nicholls agrees to further reduce the taxes, and asks the support of the voters of Charlevoix that the burden of taxation may be so lowered that future administrations will hesitate before they raise such a large tax as was raised under Mr. Nordrum.

Printed by authority of the Republican City Committee.

Mayor Reyerst of Petoskey vetoed a resolution to expend $75,000 in paving there this season. The kicermen passed it over his veto and now there is a merry war in the city.

Mr. DeVoe Retires

It has been known by the board for some time that Mr. DeVoe was not a candidate for the school superintendency, the coming year, he having decided to enter the Michigan University for the completion of a course in literature begun some years back.

There is probably not a position in the category of public servants that is so hard to fill as that of a superintendent of schools, for reasons well known; but we believe Mr. DeVoe has come as near filling out the essentials of a successful teacher and executive as most of them. He is a scholar of marked ability, a gentleman always, and as calm under unjust criticism as a "human man" can be. He certainly has many well-wishers in Charlevoix.

It is very gratifying to note that the board has elected M. H. A. Craig to succeed Mr. DeVoe. Mr. Craig has been the principal under Mr. DeVoe, and has attainments of a high order in his chosen profession. In addition to this he enjoys a popularity with the students that is a valuable asset. We predict that Mr. Craig will be a positive success at the head of the Charlevoix schools.

South Side Sewer Question Up in New Form

It looks as if the south side sewer question, which caused such a turmoil some months ago, and the opposition to which caused the council to recind its action, will have to be threshed out again, but with a different modification of the plans made by the distinguished sanitary engineer, Geo. S. Pearson, of Milwaukee.

Mr. Pearson is here again this week, at the instance of the council, to give his views concerning the septic tank system. Such a plan will eliminate very much of the expense that the original plans contemplated, and has been demonstrated that some provision must be made to give proper sanitary drainage to the territory covered.

It will be remembered that the Petoskey council promised the same privilege to a septic tank which was planned and installed by Mr. Pearson some years ago.

Another Early Pioneer Gone

"Gus" Munson, whose residence in the Pine Lake region covers a period of forty-five years, died at his home near Eveline, near Ironton, Sunday, aged 80 years.

There were very few who could outrank him as an early settler. He was born in Sweden, coming to this country when a young man. For a time he lived in Boston, going from there to Northport.

In 1865 he came to the Pine Lake region, long before there was a Charlevoix county or a Charlevoix township. A homestead opposite what is now known as Holy Island near Ironton, where he has resided continuously since. He was married at that early date to a daughter of Adam Lloyd, long since dead, who was also an early pioneer.

Besides his wife, he leaves two daughters, Mrs. Will Bird, of Eveline, and Miss Margaret Munson, who is teaching at Jackson.

OLIVER NORDRUM.

To the Electors of the City of Charlevoix

On April the 6th cast your vote for J. A. Auld for Mayor, and ensure for your city a new and efficient administration and the promotion of the general welfare impartially, and without fear or favor.

J. A. AULD.

Mr. Nordrum's Side of the Question

March 31, 1914.

To the Mayor and Finance Committee, Gentlemen:

With reference to the financial statement of the city for the past year recently published, there is nothing I wish to say with any intention of reflecting upon the present administration. I would, however, refer to the last paragraph of your report in which you make reference to the financial condition as compared with March 1, 1913, and the lower taxes etc.

It is almost impractical to compare the operations of one year with another. The conditions vary too much and the only subjects you could reasonably bring up for comparison would be:

The Hose Tower. You completed the hose tower, but the council of 1912 laid the foundation and furnished about $500 worth of new fire hose. Compare this item.

The Street Work. You made improvements on Ferry street and Belvedere avenue and the former administration put in quite a little work on the same. Compare this and the balance may be a little in your favor.

The Water Mains. You made extensions of the water mains and so did your predecessors. Compare this and you will find some in your favor.

What else have you to compare with the operations of the administration of 1912? Can you possibly find any items that will offset the following:

Audit of the books	$ 616.00
Adding Machine	250.00
Street Springer	356.00
Mason street dock	250.00
Water main accident	500.00
Suits for Fire Boys	171.00
City Band	500.00
Paving (city share)	5,000.00
	8,074.00
Add to this the cash turned over to you	4,811.00
And you will have the nice sum of	$12,885.00

that might have been turned over to you had it not been for the above items, but, I think you will agree that an audit is necessary in any corporation. The adding machine is in operation, the sweeper is in evidence on the streets, the fire boys are comfortable, the band plays for us and we completed the big paving job on Dixon avenue. On a fair comparison would have been the biggest month sewer proposition and if you had gone ahead with it, your cash balance would have been much lower than this.

Just a word about taxes: You raised a 10 mill tax amounting to $27,711.00 to which add what the former council turned over to you $4,811.00 and you have $27,522.00. You have now on hand something over $10,000.00 and it will take about $17,000.00 more to make up the same figures as last year. You can do it easily with a tax of 7½ mill and come out in fine shape.

Yours very truly,

OLUF NORDRUM

The ladies of the Eastern Star will give a supper in the Masonic Temple dining hall on Thursday evening of this week. On Friday evening of this week they will give a social dance in the same place. Fruit punch will be served. Bill 75 cents.

Capt. O. E. Wilbur finished with Geo. H. Van Velt at the Chicago Association of Commerce last Wednesday. Capt. Billy Thorpen says Wilbur is getting too high class for membership in the S S S. Club, Geo. Wilbur, however, is expected to bring the matter up at the next meeting of the society.

The county Y M C A committee is making arrangements for an Older Boys' Conference to be held here on the 24th and 25th of this month. This conference is the big indoor event of the year and delegates from all over the county will be in attendance. As soon as arrangements are completed a more extended notice will appear in the SENTINEL.

Yes, thank you. The circulation of the SENTINEL is increasing every week, due to the public conviction that it has become the public favor, and that it is the paper in the county. It is a well indisputable fact—that the SENTINEL prints double the reading matter of any other paper in the county, and is of a character that appeals to Northern Michigan people. A joppa crowd of ladies from the front yard of Mrs. Dr. Bill, on Park avenue, Friday, more or less noisy in a lady-like way, attracted our scribe to the premises. The crowd was behind locked up in solitary manner of the party, and the scribe said the penalty of inquisitiveness by being individually "snapped" before he knew it. The gathering was a "swapping party" given by the Misses Bond and Miss Wilking, of the high school faculty, and it was a bummer.

The president may have good reasons, that should not be made public, for his attitude on the canal tolls question; but from the fact that American money built the canal and American money is approaching and defend it, we find ourself wondering why a foreign nation should be permitted to dictate just how it shall be run. Then again we are a quandary as to how the president reconciles his position with the platform of his party with reference to the question.

The early spring schedule of the Pere Marquette resort trains from Chicago and St. Louis has been practically completed and, according to announcements the first resort train out of Chicago for this city will leave there Friday, June 5th. Two trains a week will be operated until June 26, when the regular daily service from Chicago, St. Louis and points south will be started. The through train service will be in operation until Sept. 12 and special trains will be operated from that date until about the first week in October to carry the summer residents back to the south. Special resort trains will be operated between Petoskey and Charlevoix during the Elks' convention, as efforts now being made may be successful in getting the regular summer schedule in operation at that time.

WEATHER FORECASTS

Treatise Showing How the Weather Bureau Can Foretell Storms

Many people have an idea that there is something mysterious and occult about the work of the Weather Bureau in forecasting the coming of storm-fronts, and floods. Not a few think that the observers must necessarily get their data by reading the planets, the stars, and the moon. As a matter of fact, the forecaster of the bureau foretells the coming of disturbances in a business like way, very similar to that in which a man who has ordered a shipment of goods would estimate the date of its arrival.

Suppose a business man had ordered a carload of pineapples from the Hawaiian Islands. He would know the average time it would take the steamer to make the trip to the Pacific port, the average time for unloading and loading into refrigerator cars, and the average number of days to be allowed these cars for their trip across the continent to New York. His estimate, however, would be subject to error, because the steamship might be delayed by fog or the cars might get into a wreck.

Storms, like pineapples, as a rule do not originate in the United States. Some come from the Philippines, Japan, Siberia, Alaska, Canada, the Gulf of Mexico. The Weather Bureau receives cablegrams, or wireless notice of a foreign storm. Station after station, or vessel after vessel reports the storm's arrival in its neighborhood, so that the general direction and rate of progress can be determined very early. In fact, the arrival of some storms can be foretold ten days in advance.

The forecasters watch for the region of low barometer which is the storm center around which the winds blow. This wheel or eddy moves bodily forward with the general eastward drift of air. Since the winds blow in our latitude, the forecaster determines the direction of movement of the storm and its velocity.

When weather disturbances are expected, the forecasters know from experience about how long it takes them to reach our Pacific coast, and then how long after they will reach the Atlantic coast. For example, if a storm coming from Siberia drifts eastward around the North Pole and reappears in Alaska, it would appear, in Washington, and Oregon in about two days; should get to the Great Lakes in about five days and to the Atlantic coast in seven or eight days.

Storms sometimes change their course or divert them from the straight track, just as a refrigerator car may be thrown off its schedule or be shipped by accident on a wrong road. Some of these storms deplete themselves by running into regions of high barometer, which are of greater magnitude and extent than the storm itself. Some of these, however, do not completely round the world.

Twenty to twenty-five waves that come to the United States from Canada are tracks, the Weather Bureau stations the Canadian weather reports. Log, and sends reports from Iceland, the British Islands and continental Europe, Alaska, Honolulu, Manila, and Petersburg on the conditions in Russia and Siberia.

The same business like system starts in tracing the track of a storm in approximating the arrival of frosts.

Osborn for Governor

Unless ex-Governor O-born again pulls the foot down hard, his name will unquestionably be on the Republican ticket as a candidate for Governor of Michigan next fall.

Politicians for him have already put in an appearance. It is known that they are being circulated all over the state and his friends are enthusiastic over the prospects.

Gov. Osborn is still traveling in Eastern countries and nothing has been heard from him to indicate what his attitude toward a second nomination would be. Once before politicians were fitted for him and he refused to allow his name to go on the ballot. But it is said that he then was embarrassed by a convention pledge which would not interfere with the administration of another term interviewed.

All this is upon the assumption that the Michigan woodpecker will be in the Republican camp when he reaches his native soil, which, in our opinion, is highly improbable.

One word from Osborn on the "get together" proposition would do more to harmonize the two factions of the party than any other influence that could be brought to bear.

Gov. Ferris is a strong man; stands well with his party, and has a clean record. But Hulbert is a reliable politician and can be relied on to the republican column with Osborn as the candidate.

Osborn was the greatest governor Michigan ever had.

WILSON ANALYZES SELF TO PRESS MEN

President Tells What Office Means to Him.

SIZE OF TASK TREMENDOUS

Chief Executive Finds Pose of Dignity Irksome and Declares When Term Is Over He Will Visit Washington on Sightseeing Tour.

Washington, March 23.—Woodrow Wilson unbosomed himself to the members of the National Press club of Washington Friday, telling them in a frank, conversational way how he felt as president of the United States; how difficult it was for him to remain himself as the chief executive with the formal amenities of the position, and how he had struggled to be as free as the ordinary individual without the restraints of his office.

It was an intimate picture of Woodrow Wilson—the man—drawn by himself on the occasion of the "lonesome warning" at the Press club's new quarters.

The president did not intend to have his remarks reported, but later, at a reunion of the club, the speech was made public.

Wilson and His Sees Himself.

"I was just thinking of my sense of confusion of identity sometimes," said the president. "I have never read an article about myself in which I recognized myself, and I have come to have the impression that I must be some kind of a fraud, because I think a great many of these articles are written in accordance with facts.

"I tremble to think of the variety of personalities in the impressions I make—and it is being borne in on me so that it may change my very conclusion—that I am a cold and removed person who has a thinking machine inside which he adjusts to the circumstances which he does not allow to be moved by any winds of affection or emotion of any kind—but turns like a cold searchlight on anything that is presented to his attention and makes it work.

Feels Responsibility Keenly.

"I am not aware of having any detachable apparatus inside of me. On the contrary, I seem to be fatiguing myself. I would say that my constant endeavor has been to retain the emotions that are inside of me.

"You may not believe it, but I some times feel like a fire from a far from extinct volcano, and if the lava does not seem to spill over it is because you are not high enough to see into the basin and see the caldron boil. Because, truly, gentlemen, in the part I do, which I accept there is a sort of—I do not know how else to express it—but to me—passionate sense of being connected with my fellow men in a personal relationship of responsibility of office, but God knows there are enough things in the world that need to be accounted for.

Fear He'll Disappoint People.

"I have said that I have had all sorts and conditions of men—there are might be kinds of men that have to be described to me, and there are mighty few kinds of experienced that have to be described to me—and when I think of the number of men who are looking to me as the representative of a party, with the hope for all varieties of salvation from the things they are struggling in the mire of, it makes me tremble.

"I am sometimes not only with a sense of my own inadequacy and weakness, but as I feel myself to be the very things that are shaking them, and if I seem circumspect it is because I am distinctly afraid of trying to make any colossal blunders.

"I see the statement that a number of blunders a fellow can make in 24 hours—I do not remember and he does not listen more than he talks, you would see something of the feel that I have.

Always Eager to Get Advice.

"I was amused the other day at a remark that Senator Newlands made. I had read his the truest message that I was to deliver to congress some ten days before I delivered it, and I never got factorial limits of that that until the day I have to deliver them.

"When I go before congress I tremble. I think it was better than it was when you read it to me." I said, "Senator, is one who illustrated I do not think you understand. I not only see all the brains I have, but all I can borrow, and I have borrowed a lot right I need to be your best.

"That, I dare say, is what gives the impression of circumspectness. I am thinking I am distinctly trying to collect all the brains that are borrowable to order that I may not make more blunders than it is inevitable that a man should make who has great reflections of knowledge and capacity. And the emotion of the thing is so great that I simply have to keep the kind of a mask to conceal it.

Often Feels Like Hypocrite.

"I really feel sometimes as if I were masquerading when I come out to speak of myself in some printed description.

"In between things that I have to do as a public official I never think of myself as the president of the United States, because I never have had any sense of being identified with that office.

"I feel like a person appointed for a certain length of time to administer that office, and I feel just as much outside of it at this moment as I did before I was elected to it. I feel just as much outside of it as I still feel outside of the government of the United States.

Office So Great, Man So Small.

"The machine is so much greater than himself, the office is so much greater than himself, the office is so much greater than he can ever be, and the most he can do is to look grave enough and self-possessed enough to seem to fill it.

"I can hardly refrain every now and again from tipping the public the wink, as much as to say, 'It is only that inside this thing. I know that I will have to get out presently. I know that then I will look just my own proper size, and that for the time being the proportions are somewhat retracted and misrepresented to the eye by the large thing I am inside of.' from which I am tipping you the wink.

"For example, take matters of this sort. I will not say whether it is wise or unwise; simple or grave, but certain precedents have been established that in certain companies the president must leave the room first and people must give way to him. They must not sit down if he is standing up.

Finds Customs Embarrassing.

"It is a very uncomfortable thing to have to think of all the etiquette every time I get up and sit down, and all that sort of thing. So when I go guests in my own house and the public is shut out, I adjourn being great land and take leave of him as a gentleman. If they draw back and insist upon my doing something first I firmly decline.

"There are blessed intervals when I forget by one house or another that I am president of the United States. One means by which I forget to get a rattling good detective story, get some imaginary problem, and chase him all over—preferably any continent but this—because the safest parts of this continent are becoming painfully suggestive to me.

"The modifiers and many other things which stir reminiscences have worked them over with a pale cast of thought. There are postoffices to which, I wouldn't think of mailing a letter, which I can think of without trembling with the knowledge of the heartburnings of the struggle there was in connection with getting some body installed as postmaster.

Knows Little of Capital Sights.

"Now, I wonder if I ever can, I do not infrequently up to these rooms. You know I never was in Washington for a very few hours until the last year and I never expect to see the inside of the public buildings. The station until my term is over.

"The minute I turn up anywhere, I am personally conducted to beat the band. The curator, and the assistant curators, and every other functionary of that sort, and they show me the wonders attached to the public buildings. I would have to say, 'Stand aside and let me see what you are showing me.'

"Some day, after I am through with this office, I am going down to see it to Washington and see it. In the meantime, I am in the same category as the National museum, the monument, the Smithsonian institution, or the Congressional library, and every thing that comes down here has to be taken as standing in the mire of it. It makes me tremble.

"I am sometimes not only with a sense of my own inadequacy and weakness, but as if I were shaken by the very things that are shaking them, and if I seem circumspect it is because I am distinctly afraid of trying to make any colossal blunders.

"I see the statement that a number of blunders a fellow can make in 24 hours—I do not remember and he does not listen more than he talks, you would see something of the feel that I have.

ONE FATAL DISASTER FOLLOWS ANOTHER IN ST. LOUIS

U. S. TROOPS KILL 6

MEXICAN FEDERALS FIRE ACROSS THE BORDER AND AMERICANS REPLY.

FAILED TO HEED WARNING

U. S. Commander Near Del Rio, Tex., on the Rio Grande Orders Men to Return Shots—General Scott Receives Report of Affair.

Eagle Pass, Tex., March 25.—United States troops and Mexican federals engaged in a battle at Melico Creek, Mex., 10 miles above Del Rio, on the Rio Grande on Monday in which several federal soldiers are reported killed. A patrol from F troop of the Fourteenth cavalry returned the fire of the Mexicans across the Rio Grande and for ten minutes the shooting continued. One of the Americans was injured.

Forty constitutionalist soldiers had been cut off by the federals on the river bank. After fighting for nearly half an hour, the constitutionalists tried to cross the river and surrender to the American troops. The federals confluxed firing at the constitutionalists in the water and even after they had reached the American bank and surrendered.

The commander of the American cavalrymen signaled repeatedly for the federals to cease firing, but his signals were disregarded. Finally he ordered his men to return the fire.

A number of federals were carried away after the firing ceased. Colonel Dillon has ordered one troop of cavalry from Fort Clark and the machine gun platoon from Eagle Pass to proceed to Del Rio.

Officials at Washington approved the action taken by the United States troops on the border.

Juarez, Mex., March 25.—Gen. Manuel Chao announced that he had received a message from General Villa on Monday stating that the general attack on Torreon had begun and that he expected to be in possession of Gomez Palacio four miles from the center of the city, by nightfall.

El Paso, Tex., March 25.—Hugh L. Scott, commanding the United States troops here, has received information from Del Rio, Tex., to the effect that Mexican federals fired on the United States cavalry stationed there. The troopers, according to the report, returned the fire, killing six Mexican soldiers.

Hermosillo, Mexico, March 25.—The long-expected battle of Torreon is on. General Villa's big guns on Monday began the bombardment of the Mexican "Gibraltar" strongholds, hurling shells into Gomez Palacio and the suburbs of Torreon.

The first fighting of the last 48 hours hundreds of federal troops broke from their ranks and deserted to Villa's army. They were held in the trenches under the orders of the constitutionalists only by the threat of their officers, who shot into the backs of men who tried to flee. The loss of

TORREON CAPTURED

VILLA'S REBELS KILL 1,500 HUERTA SOLDIERS IN TERRIFIC BATTLE.

CITY IS NOW IN FLAMES

Victors Apply Torch to Captured Town to Wipe Out Cholera—Defeated Troops Throw Away Arms to Avoid Being Shot.

El Veejol, Durango, March 25.—Torreon fell at five o'clock on Tuesday, General Villa won a complete and startling victory. The former bandit and refugee is now the absolute master of northern Mexico. There are only meager federal forces to resist his occupation of Monterey and Saltillo and Tampico on the east and Mazatlan on the west.

With the Huerta army under Velasco scattered and broken beyond repair at Torreon, the road to Mexico City lies open to Villa. Villa is being cheered by his men and his generals as the great military genius in Mexico.

General Velasco knew he was defeated when his forces were smashed and driven out of Gomez Palacio. He had realized that there was the place whose natural advantages gave him his best chance of stopping the advance of Villa with his 12,000 men against Velasco's 9,000. The artillery equipment of the opposing forces were about equal. Fleeing from Gomez Palacio in utter rouse, Velasco's men got no respite. The rebels pursued relentlessly. The federals only now want to hold the Nazas river against Villa with their batteries there. But their guns were turned against them from the north, covering the advance of the forces of Villa and Hernandez from the northwest, and when the Nazas batteries were silenced Torreon was doomed.

With 1,500 federals estimated to have been slain in the terrific fighting at Gomez Palacio, which ended in the rout of General Velasco's forces, Villa mercilessly pursued the beaten forces, and then, with Torreon surrounded, Villa and General Hernandez, with his famous Zaragosa brigade, led an onslaught from the east and northeast.

The fierce hand-to-hand fighting in the streets, the flaming of buildings put to the torch and the desperate attempts of the federals to flee from Gomez Palacio and Torreon are described in the dispatches.

Torreon, Mexico, March 25.—Under cover of the heavy fog which lay on the city Monday morning, hundreds of Villa's army. They were held in the trenches under the orders of the constitutionalists only by the threat of their officers, who shot into the backs of men who tried to flee. The loss of

SUFFRAGE BILL HIT

SENATE VOTES DOWN AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION.

Women Fail to Get Two-Thirds Needed to Pass Measure in Upper House.

Washington, March 21.—Woman suffrage advocates lost their fight Thursday in the United States senate for the inclusion of a constitutional amendment giving women the ballot. The vote was 35 for the measure to 34 against it, a two-third affirmative vote being required for passage.

The amendment offered by Senator Vardaman of Mississippi, which provided in effect for the repeal of the fifteenth amendment to the Constitution, was defeated 46 to 19. The amendment to the joint resolution offered by Senator Williams of Mississippi, which provided that only white women should enjoy the right of suffrage, was lost, 44 to 21.

Immediately after the vote was taken Senator Shafroth of Colorado announced that he would offer an amendment providing that whenever five per cent of the voters of any state petitioned for the question of woman suffrage to be submitted to the voters the question should be so submitted. In lieu of an amendment to the state constitutions.

The proposed Shafroth amendment embodied the plan which has been advocated by the National Association for Woman Suffrage through its congressional committee here.

Senator Ollie James of Kentucky asserted that his state had had the "most unfortunate" woman suffrage in a local school election. He said on the occasion women voted for every white woman.

CRISIS IN CABINET

FUTURE OF HOME RULE BILL WRAPPED IN CLOUDS—PREMIER WEAKENS.

CRISIS IN THE KING'S ARMY.

Many Officers Resign to Avoid Military Service in North of Ireland—All Face Courts-Martial—Troops Are Being Moved to Scene.

London, March 25.—The future of the home rule bill is wrapped in the clouds. Three senior officers from the Curragh camp, who had resigned, returned to Ireland to resume their posts Monday after a conference at the war office, which they said entire ly satisfied them.

The Times confirms the announcement that General Gough has resumed his post, and comments on the written assurance that his troops are not to be used to coerce the people of Ulster into acceptance of the home rule bill. This is considered a direct surrender by the government.

The army has checkmated the government, according to the Unionists, who are threatening to resist the bill, in spite of an amendment to the state constitution.

LABOR BODY DEFENDED

MITCHELL WARMLY UPHOLDS WESTERN FEDERATION.

Denounces "Industrial Feudalism" Which He Says Existed in Michigan Copper District.

Washington, March 25.—John Mitchell, former president of the United Mine Workers and for ten years chairman of the trades committee on agreement of the National Civic federation, warmly defended the Western Federation of Miners and denounced "industrial feudalism," which he alleged existed in the Michigan copper district and in the Colorado and West Virginia coal fields, when he appeared before the house subcommittee on the Michigan strike Monday.

"The charges made by mine owners in Michigan that the Western Federation of Miners is a Socialist organization and that on that account agreements with it cannot be made, is utterly fallacious," said Mitchell. "The Western Federation has for some years made trade agreements its fundamental policy. For 12 years it has been in control of the Butte copper districts, where perfect harmony has existed with the Amalgamated Copper company.

"Red" Socialism does not enter into the question in Michigan. The Western Federation is affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, which has no more connection with the Socialist party than with any other party.

"The mining companies had no grounds for complaint in Michigan. It was only after the union asked for more wages that they began to talk of 'red' Socialism."

Seth Representative MacDonald today for consideration of the bill immediately. The Observer says also that the powerful Irish Republican Army has issued 200 warrants for the arrest of the leaders in Ulster.

The army's refusal to military precautions to preserve order in Ulster presented a crisis without parallel in the history of the British army. Rather than be placed in a position where they might be called on to act against the Ulster covenanters, numerous officers resigned or were dismissed.

While the war office refused to say how many officers had tendered their belief based on reports from the different regiments, was that the number of officers who had expressed the should succeed John Bassett Moore. NOTED EDUCATOR SLAYS SELF

Ex-Prof. H. T. Peck of Columbia Faced Suit by Newspaper Owner—Wife Nursed Him.

Stamford, Conn., March 25.—Harry Thurston Peck, a former professor at Columbia university, committed suicide on Monday at a rooming house here by shooting himself with a pistol revolver. Doctor Peck was a writer of note and for 26 years was professor of Latin language at Columbia. He left the institution more than three years ago following a series of unpleasant notoriety incident to a breach of promise suit for $50,000 brought against him by Esther Quinn, a stenographer. In March, 1913, Miss Quinn's suit was dismissed by the defendant. Later she filed another action, which was pending at the time of his death. Doctor Peck dropped out of sight after his retirement from Columbia and did not come before the public over until April of last year, when he became seriously ill at Utica, N. Y., suffering with a nervous breakdown. His illness was frequently of such a character as to cause his wife, Mrs. Peck, to be in the hospital and administered to him.

The second Mrs. Peck lodged no objection to the administration of the divorced wife; in fact, both worked together for the professor's recovery.

The AIR RACE 'ROUND the WORLD

BEACHEY'S PROPOSITION TWELVE MEN TRACKING

MAJORITY of experienced aviators believe the proposed aeroplane flight around the world, which, if it will be a marvelous demonstration of human progress and efficiency, is entirely feasible. The director of the Panama-Pacific exposition at San Francisco has assured of the cooperation of all the great nations over whose territory the monoplanes and aeroplanes will whirl.

The offer feat of endurance must be performed by the aviator who traverses the broad American continent, makes the ocean jumps from Island to Island of the North Atlantic passes the well-traveled air lanes of Siberia, and fringes the almost uninhabited coast line of northern Asia and Alaska.

But each of these feats has been exceeded already in the air records now on the book. Now all that is needed is the combination of the performance of one great air journey after another, which, although it may have reached Egypt from France. Yet these journeys pale before the difficulties of the task ahead.

It is to be noted, however, that the history of aviation is one succession of surprises. Seemingly anything of importance that could be done has been called impossible beforehand. Aviators have done so much that one hesitate to doubt their ability to do anything.

Special attention will be constructed for the race. These will probably be swift, but not built for speed. Speeds of 100 miles an hour are not difficult. Nothing

There will be accommodations for two men, both pilots, who will relieve each other at the tiller. A large staff of mechanics and helpers will be a splendid test for the machine builders, and the most of the factories in the cities of the Atlantic are expected to be in the field.

In the United States the following constructors have tentatively signified their willingness to build a round the world plane: Glenn H. Curtiss of Hammondsport, N. Y.; Orville Wright of Dayton, O.; W. Starling Burgess of Marblehead, Mass.; Thomas Benoist of St. Louis; Tom Sinclair of Washington, D. C.; the Hetrich Brothers of Baldwin, L. I.; John H. Sloane of New York city, William C. Peyton of Washington, and Lincoln Uppercu of New York city.

There are 2,000 licensed aviators in the world. Out of this field there must be several hundred who are competent to undertake the flight if the financial backing were forthcoming. The first man in America to get in his entry was Beckman Hersey, a student at Yale from Omaha, Neb. Ga., a former army officer, who is the inventor of a fuel feed system, installed in the race. Lincoln Beachey will also compete. From Germany came many requests for information as to the race.

The time before the start is short, however. By May 1, for instance, have their machines in readiness at the Golden Gate. Claude Grahame-White, the noted English aviator, and the aviation committee of the Panama-Pacific exposition, at San Francisco, have assured of the cooperation of all the great nations over whose territory the monoplanes and aeroplanes will whirl.

Courses for Summer School.

The M. A. C. faculty and state board of agriculture have passed favorably upon the plan for a summer school at the college and the courses which consist of an undergraduate and graduate course, have been formulated and also adopted by the faculty committee. Prof. E. H. Ryder will have charge of the summer session and all communications of those interested should be directed to him.

State Potato Growing Shows Gain.

The kind of potatoes best to grow in the largest yield per acre in Michigan, consideration of improved marketing and types of fertilizer were the subjects of a Grand Rapids by the Michigan Potato Growers' association. C. W. Waid, dean of the Michigan Agricultural college, declared that Michigan has now equal to any state in the raising of potatoes. Mr. Waid says indications are that considerable damage has been done to the peach crop in Michigan.

FERRIS TO SPEAK BEFORE DENTISTS

GOVERNOR WILL DELIVER PRINCIPAL ADDRESS AT STATE CONVENTION.

ANNUAL MEETING AT DETROIT

Michigan Association Will Open Session on April 9 and Continue Three Days—Many on the Program.

Lansing.—The annual state convention of the Michigan Dental society will be held in the city of Michigan on April 9, 10 and 11

An extensive program has been mapped out for the members. A public meeting for the discussion of the care of the teeth and mouth has been arranged for the evening of April 10 at the board of commerce rooms. Teachers and others identified with educational work in the state have been invited.

Governor Ferris will be the principal speaker. His address will be "The Duty of the State Toward Mouth Hygiene." Dr. Victor C. Vaughan, dean of the medical department of the University of Michigan and president of the American Medical association, will speak on "Conditions of the Mouth and Their Relation to Public Health." Dr. Charles H. Oakman, president of the Detroit board of health, will talk on "Teeth in Relation to Mouth Hygiene;" Dr. William H. Price, health officer for Detroit, "Status of Oral Hygiene in Preventive Medicine;" Superintendent of Schools Charles E. Chadsey, "The Care of the Mouth as Viewed From the Standpoint of the Educator;" Dr. W. A. White, New York state board of health, "What New York is Doing for Mouth Hygiene in the Public Schools."

Cases and specimens will be made so that they can be seen by the visiting dentists. Although Mr. Finley would not talk in detail, it was understood that the association would be asked to endorse the Master Plumbers' association in its efforts to drive rats out of national organization.

The cause of his trip here was the action of the Detroit board of a whole sale concern in Chicago to honor an order of a plumbers' association, he said.

It is said an order was placed two weeks ago with the Chicago firm and it was returned unfilled.

A confidential report received with the federal officer secured the Master Plumbers' association from the system whereby plumbing communities of any magnitude were allotted a number from the distance of the association. It was alleged that when a plumber wanted a job an additional percentage was added to the bid for the association.

There was a long list of jobs here, according to the records, in which the contractors made the proposals, it is alleged. St. Vincent's Orphans home, J. T. Wise, Trak, Ryan, Hammond brothers, Schmeiser apartments, Hull block, Saginaw Milling company, Curtis block, etc.

Two years ago W. E. Scott attempted to enter the association, it is alleged that the Master Plumbers' association refused, and it was to the extent that he was almost forced out of business.

He became an affiliate to the effect that while in the association that any contractor who employed a man not the plumber who was next on the waiting list.

Delegates Are Appointed.

The following delegates have been appointed by the governor to attend the national conventions on Marketing and Farm Credits at Chicago, April 14: John Rothman, Nashville; Nathan P. Hull, Bimondale; Thomas H. McNaughton, Ada; H. M. Young, Lansing; Theodore Gerlach, Grand Rapids; H. B. Tuttle, Hart; M. Harris, Alma; Thomas Green, Ontonagon; A. T. Roberts, Marquette; H. A. Holden, Munising; John H. Maxey, Alanson; G. W. McCormick, Manistee.

Employers Under Accident Law.

The industrial accident board says that 145 new firms came under the provisions of the workmen's compensation act in January, and also adopted by the faculty committee. Prof. E. H. Ryder will have charge of the summer session and all communications of those interested should be directed to him.

Western Horses Blamed for Diseases.

Owing to outbreaks of glanders among horses in Arenac and Missaukee counties, the state sanitary livestock commission and Dr. C. A. Dunphy, state veterinarian, are making an investigation and gathering facts together to ask the next legislature to pass a bill whereby the western horse carrying a brand cannot be admitted in the state unless he has undergone the Mallein test for glanders, 20 days prior to his shipment into this state. The proposed legislation is for the purpose of protecting Michigan horses as well as residents of the state, as glanders is a disease communicable to people.

In Missaukee county the commission recently ordered six animals affected with the disease, to be killed and the owners received no compensation for their losses; there being no provision made for reimbursement. The Michigan live stock commission would legislate particularly against the branded horse from Montana, as investigations of the commission has shown that the disease now appearing in Michigan is brought in this state from the western ranges. The Missaukee case developed from two western horses brought in the county some time ago.

It is claimed by the commission that the first party to get a diseased horse in Michigan, that were cast off as no longer of value for breeding purposes and that these animals, coming from the larger cities in the central west, have produced, in many instances, diseased progeny. The commission recommends that the Michigan farmer should produce his own horses and that he should see that the animals he does at a cost of several millions of dollars each year. Prevention means disease, and preventative means disease generally and this applies to horses, cattle, sheep and the team, can raise horses at a cost of from $100 to $150 instead of more of them. The proposed Michigan legislation will be almost similar to the Minnesota law which bars the bringing of horse specifically if it has not undergone a test for glanders, mallein and is unaccompanied by a clean bill of health. Dr. Dunphy, state vet. in the western horse or any other disease feared horse from being imported into this state.

Investigating State Plumbers.

James G. Finley of the United States department of commerce, was in Saginaw from Chicago and secured the records of a former secretary of the Master Plumbers' association, left for a trip around the state on the matter of investigating alleged conditions.

Although Mr. Finley would not talk in detail, it was understood that he was making an effort to ascertain if the Master Plumbers' association of Michigan were branches of the national organization.

The cause of his trip here was on account of the refusal of a whole sale concern in Chicago to honor an order of a plumbers' association, he said.

It is said an order was placed two weeks ago with the Chicago firm and it was returned unfilled.

RURAL ADVANCE AND AWAKENING

Visions of a Revitified Community Life.

THE FUNDAMENTAL TASK.

Importance of Local Rural Building and the Erection of Strong Units—How This Fundamental Task Can Best Be Forwarded.

The new rural awakening is upon us. New plans are developing. There are sign-posts of a coveted community life in our rural neighborhoods. There is a keen eagerness in all rural welfare work. The forces of the countryside are rallying for a great forward looking movement, says Kenyon L. Butterfield in the Survey. What shall the new year bring us in our country life companies? What shall be the chief goal of our rural remodeling aims for 1914?

It is to be urged and that the fundamental task of the rural advance is local rural community building—the gradual erection of stronger community units, founded on better farm business, securing a fair profit through better farm business and growing up with a better farm and better life. How can this fundamental rural task best be forwarded in 1914?

First—Organize local community campaigns in as many neighborhoods as possible. Stick the formation of a community council or federation made up of representatives of all the organizations in the neighborhood that have any interest in the common good—church, grange, women's club, farmers club, civic improvement society, etc.

Second—Seek to develop the collective or co-operative method of doing the business of the farm. Farmers can save money by co-operative buying of supplies needed on the farm. It is possible that they can make a larger profit by selling their products in the same co-operative manner. The co-operative plan is spreading. It should not be entered upon lightly, but it promises to render more help to the farmer than does perhaps any other one thing.

Third—Push the idea of an agricultural high school or of an agricultural department in the public high school. Farming demands educated men and women. Any agricultural vocation neither in the classroom nor in their extension services can meet the full need. Every boy or girl desiring the equivalent of a good high school education in and for agriculture should have the opportunity of acquiring that training.

Fourth—Join in the demand for the passage by congress of the Lever bill appropriating federal money to the several agricultural colleges for extension work in agriculture and home economics. This means the democratizing of agricultural education the world over. It means that the knowledge gained in agricultural research will be placed at the disposal of the humblest farmer, a great educational companion for better farming in all its aspects and a great help to every farming community.

This bill, if passed into law, promises not only a distinct advance in the agricultural educational field, but indeed a national benefaction of great proportions and significance.

Fifth—Press for at least preliminary steps to bring together on a national plan the various agencies that are seeking rural welfare. This is merely the mathematics of the plan of local rural community building. The many activities and institutions engaged in promoting rural welfare should be correlated. The country life movement should be integrated. We should look upon the rural problem as a unity. We should try to solve it on large lines and with undivided endeavor.

Sixth—Above all, perhaps, try to stir religious forces to new effort in the rural field. The country church faces a crisis. Rural advance is leaving the church behind. But the rural movement must not be a movement without it. It can easily be spiritualized. It needs the leadership of that institution that stands currently for the great ideals of love and brotherhood and service. The rural Sunday school, the rural Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. should be encouraged and strengthened everywhere. We need their point of view, and above all we need their ideals of character—building and of community building.

So much for the new year as a new standard in all rural life endeavor.

A Municipal Theater.

The little town of Lenox, Ind., has remodeled a successful municipal theater for several years, where clean amusement for its citizens is offered. The theater was built by public subscription several years ago and is in energy of a small commission, which looks after its affairs. When the young men and ladies of the town want to hold a dance the hall is turned over to them free of charge. For all home talent affairs as well the hall is given gratis. A piano has been purchased and is being paid for by subscription and from the income of amateur plays. The theater is also used to attract conventions, and any responsible theatrical company may have the place for a moderate sum.

So Says Department of Agriculture.

GOOD WHEN SOIL IS DAMP.

If Attention to Roads is Put Off Until the Latter Part of Summer the Surface Becomes Dry and the Toil Expended Is Unsatisfactory.

It is a good suitable to put off work on roads until August or September, according to road experts of the United States department of agriculture. The roads should be worked when the soil is damp, so as to make the soil take when it dries out. If the roads are worked when they are dry it takes more power to draw the machine, and besides, dry earths and dust retain moisture and quickly rot other roads. The use of clods, sods, weeds or vegetable matter in building earth roads should be avoided because they also retain moisture.

By using the road machine in the spring while the soil is soft and damp the surface is more easily shaped and better results are made a dry, hard crust, which is less liable to become dusty in summer and muddy in winter.

Repairs to roads should be made when needed and not once a year after ruts are laid in. Because of its simplicity, efficiency and cheapness, the split log drag or some similar device is destined to come into more and more general use. With the drag properly built and its use well understood, the maintenance of earth and gravel roads becomes a simple maintenance matter. Care should be taken to make the log so that it will cut more than it will case, as a light drag can be drawn by two medium-sized horses and responds more readily to various methods of hitching and the shifting position of the operator than a heavier one. The best material for the drag is a dry cedar log, though elm, walnut, hot cedar or soft maple are excellent. Only history or ash is too heavy. The drag should be from seven to ten feet long and from eight to ten inches in diameter. It should be split exactly as near the center as possible and the heaviest and best sub chosen for the log. When the soil is moist but not sticky, the drag does the best work. As the soil in the road will take it plowed wet on the road will be left if the drag is used on it when it is wet. If the roadway is full of holes or badly rutted the drag should be used once when the road is soft and sloshy.

The earth road can best be crowned and ditched with a road machine and not with picks and shovels, scoops and plows. One road machine with a suitable operator and operator will do the work of many men with picks and shovels and, in addition, will do it better. If the road is composed of fine clay or soil it sometimes pay to supplement it with top soil from an adjacent field which has sand or gravel mixed with it.

Storm water should be disposed of quickly before it has had time to percolate deeply into the surface of the road. This can be done by giving the road a crown or slope from the center to the sides. For an earth road which is twenty-four feet wide the center should be not less than six inches nor more than twelve inches higher than the outer edges of the shoulder. The narrow road which is high in the middle will become rutted almost as quickly as one which is flat, for the reason that on a narrow road all the traffic is over a space only a narrow strip.

The width of the earth road will depend on the traffic. As a rule, twenty-four feet from ditch to ditch is sufficient if the road is properly crowned. Ordinarily the only ditches needed are those made with the road machine, which are wide and shallow. Deep narrow ditches wash rapidly, especially on steep slopes. The earth road should not be bowned, dug up or plowed up any more than is necessary. It should be periodically rolled, not hoved, hardened, not softened.

Caste and Diet in India.

The private secretary of the maharajah of Jhalawar gave a lecture on food in London in the course of which he stated that the eating of onions is conducive to "cheerness of spirit." He also avowed that the caste system in India is largely regulated by diet. Thus, those of the highest caste only eat vegetarian food and have to cook their own pots. Members of another caste are allowed to eat meat so that they may become fitted to be warriors, while the lowest caste of all are "totals, flat foots," which suit their unsightliness to their nature.

THE WIDTH OF THE EARTH ROAD WILL DEPEND ON THE TRAFFIC.

JAPANESE PAPERS.

The Latest Fad in Decorations For Walls.

It has long been the custom to decorate large patterned papers for the walls of dining rooms and drawing rooms. To begin with, they are considered fatal to the effect of pictures hung against them. The taste has been in favor of papering neutral in tint and unobtrusive in design, in order that the picture may stand a large flowed wall behind it. If people will have long branches and birds with big plumage sweeping across their walls they must give up the idea of seeing pictures there at the same time.

One cannot say how it will be with respect to the pictures, but it is certain that it will concern the papering itself a complete renovation of taste is going forward. Whole sunflowers and on a big scale, are being thrown on walls, and in the dining and drawing rooms the laundring continues. Sometimes the whole side of the room shows pom-pom dahlias and jungles intermixed with aggressive sweetness of the flora of the country, maybe. Sometimes China men, albeit, like some are there also.

The paper that comes from Japan is more amateur made in accordance with Nipponese taste. And it is not only the note that comes from Japan, but the material itself with which it works are being imported. It is quite the thing among papering, but it is in truth a composition more resembling leather. It is thick, possesses the effect of leather and is certainly of a rich hue, bringing the sheen of copper, bronze and gold. Siberian walls with such a lineage metallic hues has been described as "gilding the face of one's cake," the cake being the room.

REDUCE CONGESTION.

There are commercial and industrial interests which, stirred up by the privileges of the moment, fail to see the advantages of the golden era of the future. These interests, therefore, while yielding to the growing demand for the planning adhered to by municipal boards and societies, which have made as well as proposed in Paris and Berlin and which are based wholly on the principle of workshop economy, merchandising and industrial profits rather than upon the principles of human efficiency and social progress. "Nickel" policies in financial development such as we frequently encounter among our public corporations, boulevard and parkway development, the main functions of which is the increase in real estate values that benefit the few, the construction of costly public buildings to impress the strangers and lessen the profit of big contractors, do not consult city planning.

Unless we realize the importance of reducing congestion, diffusing adequately and equitably the advantages of parks, playgrounds, social and educational centers, give easy and cheap access to the opportunities for employment to the people as a whole, this country will be developing slums and their products—poverty, immorality, crime, disease and death.—Dr. Carol Aronovici.

KEEPING THINGS CLEAN.

Household Utensils Must Be Kept Spick and Span to Secure Good Results.

Some housekeepers who have experienced a good deal of trouble may be glad to have some suggestions given for keeping the housekeeper. For example, to prevent sticking over so much in using a dressing rubber bag use with a large mouthpiece also and a handle to an ordinary tin dustpan in this way: slip the handle of a dustpan through and insert it in the hollow handle of the dustpan.

In sweeping unvarnished stairs a dampened cloth with the proper tools will be found an excellent article. After it has been used no one will like to go back to a dust brush. It reaches the corners of the stairs and also between the edges supporting the railing. A paint brush is very good, too, for use in cleaning dust out of any crevice, for it does the work better than a duster.

Small dish mops also make good soft dusters. They are easily shaken out and easily washed when dirty. Keep a soft cloth in an apron pocket across many steps as the housekeeper goes about her work in the morning, afternoon and evening. Little boys are not the only advocates in the art of using a handkerchief for the purpose, and, indeed, for the further. A duster at hand cleans the piano or table or the stair railing almost with out the realization that the work has been done.

To use a carpet sweeper more useful than it often, removing the brush to prevent the fibers from the wire bristles, which may be bought at a ten cent store, is useful for cleaning the brush of the carpet sweeper. It may be kept in the brush closet for that purpose.

When shaking or cleaning rugs they should never be placed at the door, but always at the side. In this way, if there is a fringe, it is protected and the ends do not rend. The shape of the rug is also preserved.

"Yes, indeed."

"I didn't know it had been published."

"It hasn't. But it kept the feuilleton awake in four adjacent flats while I was pounding it out on the typewriter."—Washington Star.

A Tough Case.

"What's the trouble, old man?"

"I'm in a bad way. I can't awake nights thinking about my work. Then when I'm at work I keep going to sleep."—Pittsburgh Post.

SYNOPSIS.

Percy Darrow, young socialist in search of a job, enters the office of Hobart McCarthy of New York. McCarthy is a wealthy financier who plays at amateur detecting. He does not take the new man, Darrow, with him in the elevator to try for a position with the Atlas Building, but apparently he is the Atlas Building. Darrow and McCarthy are unable to locate the prisoner, whose name is Blodgett. Darrow and McCarthy leave McCarthy's office. It was well so said him at six. Promptly at six the door of the office of Blodgett, Blodgett & Co. opens. He appears—a little, little fellow, with a little, little face. They visit McCarthy and explain to him that Blodgett has escaped from them. McCarthy calls up Darrow without warning by wireless. At six, a dark-faced man who looks like the Big Boss, blustering out all around. Darrow and McCarthy go to Darrow's room and discuss Blodgett, the mind accident becomes interested in the man who is sending the messages. Darrow and McCarthy decide to go back to the office and wait for Blodgett. Suddenly the lights go out. Darrow and McCarthy face flickering messages from Blodgett. Blodgett tells them that he has his own theories in relation to social and religious life, and that he will send them terrifying messages from time to time. Darrow and McCarthy discuss the vibrations of heat which would cause explosions, and the effect of animal and vegetable life upon the vibrations of heat. Suddenly the city. Thousands of people, the Thames, are suddenly receiving wireless messages in code. Darrow and McCarthy go to the Hotels with Blodgett's experiments full of the wireless, and he is taken in custody. Darrow is trying to escape. Darrow and McCarthy are in a hotel room. Darrow is in bed. Darrow and McCarthy are in the office of a crooked deal. A message from Blodgett. Darrow goes to the Hotel Thames. Darrow goes to the Hotel Thames. Darrow is in a state of terror. Darrow is the big boss. ROYAL BAKING POWDER

Is the Housewife's Greatest Help.

WHAT so tempting to the laggard appetite as a light, flaky, fruit short cake or a delicate hot biscuit?

Royal makes the perfect short cake, biscuit and muffin, and improves the flavor and healthfulness of all risen flour-foods.

It renders the biscuit, hot-bread and short cake more digestible and nutritious, at the same time making them more attractive and appetizing.

Royal Baking Powder is indispensable for the preparation all the year round of perfect foods.

Northern Michigan

Twenty-two saloons of Traverse City sell a lot of liquor and vile cigars based out a hazy more. Both the Elks and Bohemian clubs at their rooms behind front dispensaries than more saloons in the city. Apparently the fact that Traverse City has nearly two dozen recognized and licensed saloons does not deter others from engaging in the pastime of selling intoxicants.

Another old relic of the days of slavery passed away in Boyne City last week when William Calhoun died at his home at 212 Trout street. Mr. Calhoun has been a familiar figure in Boyne City for many years and was among the early residents of the town. He was seventy-six years old and was born a slave in one of the southern states. Being north after the war and finding a settling in Boyne City.

Orchard owners would do well to inspect the trunks of their trees without delay. Fear is expressed that the San Jose or mice. Now is the time to report the injury. It is not difficult and a few work may save a valuable tree. Full directions as to how to do the work are given in a recent bulletin from the Michigan Agricultural Experiment Station that will be sent free upon request. Address, R. S. Shaw, Director, East Lansing, Mich.

Boyne Journal: About fifty guests took places at the banquet table last night at the Methodist to do honor to J. E. Converse who leaves the city for Bay City. A splendid four course banquet was served at 6 o'clock after which nearly every gentleman present arose in turn and told how he had found he was has made himself so generally loved in this city. He will enter the old established firm of Hall, Dwyer & Co., filling a vacancy left by the death of Dewey Hall, Sr., a year or so ago.

Because of its sandy, gravelly soil and its nearness to the great consumption markets, Western Michigan is destined to be a great poultry section. The conditions are favorable for the production of eggs and chickens, and when the details are given proper attention the profits are large. W. C. Steere, living in the Grand Traverse section, secured 1,400 eggs in 1912 from eight hens. He net profits from eggs, chicks sold and increase in value of flock amounted to $28.74, which is a return of $2.05 a hen. The constantly increasing summer resort population is likely to strengthen the demand for both eggs and dressed fowls.

Boyne Journal: Michel La Croix, one of the most prominent figures in early northwest Michigan history, a participant in many Indian battles and skirmishes and for more than half a century a leader among the Indians of the early pioneer settlers in these parts died at his home within a week at the log cabin he built 45 years ago when he came here from Pawnee and settled two miles west of the city. Mr. La Croix was born in Michigan eighty-three ago and spent all his life in this state. Most of his early life was spent along Muskegon, Cross Village and at Petoskey and he was for a number of years the only mail carrier from the latter city through the Little Traverse district.

Petoskey News: According to reports the Elks' banquet, initiation and general meeting Tuesday evening at the lodge rooms in this city were the best ever had here this winter. Not only was there an unusually large attendance but much more than usual interest was taken in the doings of the evening, following the regular lodge work a class of candidates were initiated and included in the number were many well-known men from about this section, who have been members of the order months guides the destinies of the S. S. Mentor, a ship that brings thousands to Petoskey, came with two auto loads of Charlevoix Elks. He was made an Elk Tuesday night and from now on will be one of the biggest boosters for Petoskey lodge, No. 639.

Boyne Journal: Night police McNally was a busy man last night when he at all most caught a self-blower in the local postoffice. Knocking one sight for a picture of the culprit with the goodes on him and the Journal came very near having a good story for today. In fact all this was lacking was the robber. While making the rounds last night about midnight, McNally noticed the gas turned on in the postoffice and calling up in his gumshoes to the window saw a man in the safe door opening open. He tried the door and found it locked, whereupon he made haste to a telephone and awoke postmaster Lewis from dreams of another democratic landslide. He broke the door and caused "Bill" to relinquish his exercises to make time in getting down. The police force remained behind the door while waiting for Mr. Lewis to put in an appearance and when the door was opened two men with the heavy-weight demoral came pouring out of the door and made their way to the office in the rear from which sounds were heard of the rending of paper. Gathering their strength for the assault they pounced through the door leading into the back room and upon Floyd Noble who was busily engaged making up the Monday reports. This was not exactly what was expected. The business situation finally cleared up in the morning and Floyd was released from the grip of the Water street were startled by loud and prolonged laughter. After regaining his part in excitement, the postmaster returned to slumberland and the police force on the way, leaving the "prisoner" still at his water.

Congressman Lindquist

We read in the papers that Congressman Lindquist of Greenville has at last decided on his long contemplated and much-mooted visit at Summit, New Jersey. Mr. Lindquist some time ago on the advice of his physician decided to take the "milk cure," which consists of living on an exclusive diet of milk. Since that time his congressional and other duties have occupied his time so fully that he has delayed the trip.

Mr. Lindquist left Washington still undecided as to whether he would be a candidate for a second term in congress and opposed Congressman Jay Fenner for the Republican nomination.

We approve of the "milk cure" for the congressman, but believe it should be skim milk considerably diluted. We do not believe that the trim athletic mentality of the Greenville statesman requires Jersey milk 100 per cent test.

If the physician above mentioned would only decree that his distinguished patient must remain in New Jersey Michigan would be well rid of the longest political joke in the history of the state.

Just a Word

The publisher of this paper has for forty-three years made the claim of that week. His claim in all these years he has had day-dreams and nocturnal visions of a greater Charlevoix; and disappointment has been the harbor of his dreams for decades.

Charlevoix still retains "the beautiful," with every natural element for something more nourishing than scenery." But the ever-ping affliction that is born of a 25c summer lease of the home in which your children were born, and in which, perhaps, you were born, has obscured everything else.

In contemplation of the long years of failure and hope and false prophecy, is it any wonder that we permit our pen to "slap over" now and then? It is no use to be long-faced when the pen must be surrendered to another, more able, and, perhaps, more worthy, but not more loyal.

A Review of the Results

There was no riffles whatsoever in the Charlevoix city election. There was a progressive ticket on the ballot, but the head of the progressive ticket was not a progressive in a political sense. It was the only ticket that was recognized by law as a ballot, emanating from the regular republican and democrat ticket, and was merely an "expedient." Any claim that may be set up concerning the Nonpartisan ticket as indicating "Bull Moose" strength is fallacious.

It was a "battle of the giants." Probably there are not two stronger or more popular men in Charlevoix than the two leading candidates. Both represent large interests and both are good citizens and good men.

We repeat that politics had no part in the election. Local issues governed. Street improvements were to the fore. Both sides put up a hard fight, and there was engendered some feeling which we trust, was dissolved after the votes were counted.

Now let us all work for a greater Charlevoix.

Results Prize Essays "Panama Canal"

About the first of the year the Charlevoix State Savings Bank, placed some very beautiful calendars called "The Panama Canal" prize essay subject, and offered prizes aggregating $15.00 as the best essays written on this subject by children under 16 years of age.

This contest closed April 1st, and many essays were handed in to the bank. The board of directors, at their last regular meeting, appointed H. A. Craig, E. W. Kane and W. J. Ruthven as a committee to look over the essays and to act as judges in awarding the prizes on the work.

The committee reported as follows: Wilma Stevenson, first prize, $5.00; George Bechtel, second prize, $2.00; Irene And, third prize, $1.00.

Addison E. Wood, Little Cornell, Marguerite Smith, Alda Walker, Joe Bottema, and Cornelius Eylstra, as the next best, and they receive $1.00 each. The latter five are pupils from rural district No. 3 Marion township.

Obituary

Mary Dickson Bell was born in Belfast, Ireland Sept., 20, 1830 and was married to Mr. John Bell April 2, 1850. To this union 3 children were born. They have all preceded their mother to the better world but one, Mrs. John Burns of our city.

Since Bell lost all the hardships of pioneer life. He's was the first farm house built in Antrim Co. She came to Michigan in the fall of 1855 locating on a farm near Charlevoix, moving to town in 1873 to afford her children school advantages. This Pastor has been charmed more than once as she told the story of how her God had blazed the trail for herself and family in this new country.

For more than 40 years this saint of God has been breaking boxes of precious ointment to anoint the servants of God and the performer of this ointment was not only filled this church but our whole city has felt the fragrance of this sweet pure life. I never committing her presence but I felt like removing the shoes from off my feet for I knew I was standing on holy ground.

Nature and Grace united to produce in this woman a combination of exceeding beauty and rare attractiveness. She possessed beauty of face and grace of form and the more beautiful grace adorned by the loveliness of soul which vanished her whole life. She was gentle of spirit, refined in manner, possessed of the sympathies and had lofty ideals for her children and for the world. She was a lady in the truest sense of the word, a Christian lady, her highest joy in administering to others needs.

She has gone from us, yet her life remains a rich legacy, to comfort many a heart that will never cease to mourn and miss her. For a child she gave a faith so solid, a trust so complete, there could be but one ending victory and peace perfect peace. She may have suffered to fade and know not fear.

The funeral was conducted by her pastor, Rev. Quinton Walker from the Methodist Church Saturday morning assisted by Rev. C. E. Taggart.

The State Fair has decided to send one boy from Charlevoix County to the State fair at Detroit, Sept. 7-18, and to give him instruction in stock judging, Soil Testing, Dairying, etc.

State Fair pays all expenses. Send a line boy from this county.

The selection of the boys will be made by the following committee in each county: County Commissioner of Schools, Secy of Farmers' Institute Society and the Master of the Pomona Grange.

The committee will meet to select the boy on June 6th, or at the call of the County Commissioner of Schools.

The selection will be made from the two following employments, based on the boy in the county between the ages 12 and 18.

First: The regular county 8th grade examination to count 50 percent.

Second: Examination on 20 Agriculture questions prepared by the State Fair Management to count 50 percent.

Second examination to be taken by applicants on afternoon of May 15th in regular 8th grade examination.

Second examination questions will be sent to each commissioner, under seal, on May 1st. The boy in the county between 12-18 having the highest average standing will be selected by the above committee. Any boy in the county between 12-18 who wishes to attend the State Fair and have expenses paid, must take both examinations this year.

Local Option Elections

Despite the heavy fall of snow which it was feared would keep at home a large per cent of the "dry" Antrim County, local option forces lost only one county in Monday's election, but gained one which was strongly contested. Clare county, conceded to the "dryes" returning a "wet" majority of 100 votes, while Ingham county, in which the biggest fight of the campaign was waged, went into the option column by nearly a thousand votes.

The issue was up in 12 counties and the "dryes" in 8 counties gained and gave the opposition a chance in only Wexford, Arenac and Ogemaw. The "wets" claimed Arenac, Ogemaw, Ingham, Wexford, Shiawassee, Mecosta and Benzie. In none of the counties, save Ingham and Wexford was much of a campaign waged.

The county situation:

Clare went from "dry" to "wet" by 158 majority; Roscommon went from "wet" to "dry" by 84 and Ingham went from "wet" to "dry" by more than 400; Midland, Kalkaska, Mecosta, Benzie, Shiawassee and Wexford remaining "dry," the latter two by a close majority. Oscoda, containing one saloon, was returned to the "dryes" by the "wets" although partial returns which were the only ones available, indicated a "wet" victory. Arenac and Ogemaw remained "wet."

Local option elections were in the opposition were Ingham, Shiawassee and Wexford. In each county a very strong "dry" campaign was waged, and today's election has 24 "dry" counties and 32 counties are "wet."

Pine Lake is yet full of ice.

The governor has designated May 8th as Arbor Day.

Mrs. J. S. Baker and daughter Doris went to Chicago Monday.

Geo. D. Swinton is the last to buy an automobile, and it is a Reo.

The tugs Bermelee and Gelken went out and tied their nets Tuesday.

O. Nordrum was in Cheboygan the last half of last week on business.

Mrs. G. C. Gelken is entertaining Mrs. F. P. Gelken, of Pellston, this week.

The Dictionary meets with Mrs. Stanley Rush Thursday afternoon, subject, Phillips Brooks.

Joseph Stephens, formerly of this place, died at his home in Grand Rapids, Mich., of the flu.

Fred H. Thomas has the contract for the erection of a new cottage for Mr. Metzger, of Indianapolis, on the Belvedere side.

Cold northerly winds prevailed all last week, chilling the marrow and drawing heavily on the coal bin and the wood pile.

Mrs. Fred L. Slaght returned home from Lansing Saturday. Mr. and Mrs. Slaught are occupying the Merriam house, on the north side.

Road Commissioner O. D. Hammond, with a force of men, began the work of cutting down the "Greenway Hill," in that portion of the West Michigan pike proposition, north of this city.

C. N. Smith, deputy game and fish warden, was in town several days last week, waiting for the "Patrol No. 4," to go into commission. Mr. Smith's headquarters will be on the boat this season.

"Satan," or "The Drama of Humanity," at the Majestic Theatre Wednesday and thursday of this week, is an attraction that teaches a lesson. It is said to be one of the greatest of moving picture productions.

The "A. and M. Leak" will be the name of Frank Left's Beaver Island fishing tug, being built by Silas Swanson at the port. The outside planking is all on and work is progressing rapidly. The boiler is being built at Ferrysburg.

As indicated in these columns last week, the old Fountain City House, so close to the heart of the old timers, will be open this season. Mrs. Bedford, owner of the house, having leased it Grand Rapids, has leased the Fountain City House to her sister-in-law, Mrs. H. C. Cooper, who is already preparing for an early summer opening.

East Jordan Herald: St. Joseph's Catholic parish is contemplating the erection of a parochial residence during the coming year. Plans have already been made and approved and the farmer portion of the congregation have commenced hauling the stone and gravel. When complete, the building will be one of the handsomest in the city.

Notwithstanding the presence of considerable ice in the outer harbor, the Steamer Gilbert Boyce opened navigation for Beaver Island Tuesday morning, making the run successfully. She had on board more than two dozen of the mail and a large amount of freight. J. M. Bonner and wife, who spent the winter in Chicago, were passengers. A number of traveling men went over for spring orders.

The engineering department of the University of Michigan has established a municipal and highway laboratory for the convenience of highway commissioners and road builders of Michigan. The equipment includes apparatus for making all the standard tests of cement, sand, gravel, concrete, road stone, brick stone and asphalt block, and drain tile. Tests will be made for cities, villages and counties without any further charge than the expense of shipment of the samples.

As a result of the vast expenditures which are being made for road improvement propositions, there will be more tourists in this region in the future than in the past, and the suggestion is made by the Western Michigan Development Bureau that some effort should be made to mark the historic points and the points of special interest. It is asked that some one in each community be selected to prepare a brief article naming the points in that county that are of special interest, indicating their location upon a map. With the West Michigan pike running through the territory there are many reasons for having this work done.

Thomas Shawley went to Belding to visit his son Ernest.

Empire Stites is at Williamsburg this week visiting relatives.

The local inspectors were here Monday and inspected the steamer, City of Boyne.

Olaf Nordrum went to Fort Huron and Harbor Beach Tuesday on business for the fourth tug.

Mrs. Lydia Todd and Mrs. Art Alcock went to Boyne Falls Monday to attend a convention of the I. O. T. M. M.

Mrs. E. L. Calkins, state president of the W. C. T. U. will speak at the Methodist church Monday evening, April 20.

Dr. Armstrong has bought through the R. P. Sisson agency, a Jackson automobile, which is expected to arrive this week.

A. L. Fitch, who turns the postoffice over to his successor this week, returns to the practice of law, with his office in the postoffice block.

A large delegation of Charlevoix Odd Fellows went to Boyne City Tuesday, by automobile to attend a gathering of members of that order.

Mr. B. W. Dean, auditor for the Foods Reduction Co., is here all this week auditing the accounts of the local branch of that concern.

Passengers over from St. James Tuesday—Rev. Fr. Jewel, James Dowley, John Floyd, W J Gallagher, W. E. Stephens and Frank Miller. Fr. Jewel went to Grand Rapids, where his daughter takes the veil Sunday.

Road commissioner of Emmet county are preparing to lay out a road along the shore from Petoskey to Harbor Springs. Such a road would form a boulevard connecting Petoskey, Bay View, Rose avenue, Kegomic, Menonquin Beach, Pege, Roaring Brook, Ramona Park and Wequetensing.

The news comes from Grand Rapids that Eli Brown, who recently went from here to that city, became violent insane Thursday, and was placed under restraint, subsequently being taken to the Kalamazoo hospital. The hope is entertained that with treatment he may recover his reason. Eli has been considerably out of health for a year or more.

The "Land of Lost Content" will be the subject of Frank Cole's lecture at the Methodist church Monday night. This is an attraction that should be liberally patronized by those who appreciate a good lecture.

Mackinac Island—With hands so small that grandmother's wedding ring slipped over its arm to the elbow, Menominee county's smallest baby, weighing just three pounds, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Beachamp. The child is perfectly formed and is a thriving youngster. The day following its birth the grandmother slipped the wedding ring over the hand until it encircled the elbow. The mother, Mrs. Joseph Beachamp, weighed but a pound and a half when born.

Last week we noted the arrival of Mr. H. L. Oldham from Decatur, Ill., for the season. We did not know at the facts then, but learn from Mr. Oldham that he has sold all his interests in Decatur, and has come to Charlevoix to remain permanently,—at least none moreso of the year. At any rate, we may consider him as one of us, and entitled to all the rights and benefits accruing to citizenship in the best town in Northern Michigan. Mr. Oldham and family were here last year, making a long stay, and he was so impressed with the beauties of the town and the surroundings that he determined to make it his home.

One of the most interesting places in town just now is the new variety store of Mr. and Mrs. Gonser, in the Wilber building, next the bridge. If you can think of anything not found there your mind has a wide scope, for the display is certainly as varied and as complete as the human mind can conceive. The store itself has been thoroughly renovated and decorated, and is full to the ceiling with about everything kept in establishments of its kind in the larger cities. The kitchen and the nursery—the drawing room and the sanitary—may draw upon the stock and then some. It is certainly an enterprising establishment.

The Dictionary Club, which was organized last September, is closing its years work Thursday afternoon. The aim of the club has been improvement, the study American authors. Beginning with the civil war group, geon, writers and their work in prefaces have been studied. Quotations and music have added variety to the programs. In connection with the dictionary study Orr's "Mental Efficiency" and Grigg's "Use of the Margin" have been read with deep interest. It seems appropriate to choose Phillips Brooks as a subject for the last meeting of the year, a benediction on past work, an inspiration for years to come. "The great thing in reading a noble book or thinking of a noble name in history is to get ourselves within the sphere of the nobleness that we are dealing with."—Phillips Brooks.

Mrs. Homer Boothron is visiting friends at Big Rapids.

Andrew Ross, of Munising, was here over Sunday, visiting his father, A. M. Ross.

Mrs. W. W. Hollisworth, of Traverse City, was the guest of her mother, Mrs. Archie Irwin, over Sunday.

Commission of Conservation Council K. of C. M., Monday, April 27. Work on Royal Master degree.

D. B. Fagyon went to Traverse City Saturday. Mr. Fagyon attended a meeting of the Development Bureau Monday.

Miss Catherine Dolsel, who has been the guest of Dr. and Mrs. S. H. Dolsel for the past week, returned to her home in Saginaw Saturday.

Moses Laloind, the aged father of Mrs. S. A. Bush, so vigorous as most young men, went to East Jordan Monday for a week's visit with relatives.

The grocery and meat market firm of C. Lento & Son was augmented last week by the arrival from Detroit of "Ben," the son of Mr. Charles Lento, and one of the firm. The young gentleman has come to stay.

The fishing tugs opened navigation temporarily, Thursday, when the Farmer Bros. and Gelken went out and set nets in the vicinity of the Manitous. They returned to their home port just in time as the ice all came back that night.

Kalkaska county remains in the dry column. After five years' trial of prohibition the people of that county expressed their views on the subject question in a forceful manner by increasing the dry majority as compared with the last election by 100 per cent. The ought to settle the question in that county for a long time, and before it comes up again the nation will be under prohibition.

"There will be no extra session of legislature unless they advance some idea where it is to be found." is the answer of Congressmen Fordney to those who are trying to bring about an extra session of the legislature to rectify the situation resultant of the last one. The governor has received a large stack of letters demanding a special session, either to repeal the Mapes-Agnew criminal college question or to fix up the good roads appropriation, since the supreme court has decided that the auto law is not good.

Otto Powers has inaugurated a movement which, if successfully carried out, will revolutionize the mode of marketing and shipping agricultural products. It is proposed that the organization of a stock company for the purchase of the abandoned beet sugar building and grounds. He has secured a thirty day option on the property at $4,000. The building is well adapted to the use contemplated, and has fifteen acres of ground. The proposition is one of cooperation in the marketing and shipping of whatever the farmers have to sell, and we are of the opinion that it will meet with general approval.

Within the past week very extensive improvements and enlargements have been made in the popular drug and confectionery emporium of J. L. Crane. The Clinton street department of the store, formerly devoted to ladies' ready made wraps, has been removed to the second floor, immediately over the former quarters. And the pleasant feature of this department is that it has been transferred into a beautifully appointed ladies' parlor and rest room. This innovation cannot fail to be popular with the ladies. The rug and carpet department, which to the discomfiture of many a hubby man who pays the bills, is right handy on the same floor, and has the usual variety of temptations. Below, the entire south half of the store, which was formerly occupied by the Crane family, has been opened up to the public, and presents a spacious and inviting appearance. It is in charge of Mr. Frank Wilkinson, who is one of the best all round salesmen in Northern Michigan, was always attractive, but Mr. Crane's motto is "Excelsior."

FATAL AUTO ACCIDENT

Car Turned Over in East Jordan Day Ride—One Killed Others Injured

When a car driven by Oscar Swenson of Petoskey skidded on a corner at East Jordan and tipped over Sunday afternoon, Miss Bernice Gardner, age 22, of Petoskey, was caught under the running board and died half an hour later. Swenson was badly bruised and the other members of the party, Mrs. R. V. Steffes, Mrs. E. Newsom and Harry Adams, all of East Jordan, were slightly hurt. Miss Gardner was a clerk in Hutchinson's department store, Petoskey.

The car arrived in Charlevoix about eight o'clock Sunday morning, and Swenson and Miss Gardner breakfasted at Baker's Inn, soon after leaving for East Jordan.

From the Petoskey News we take the following: "Miss Gardner had gone to that village with Oscar Swenson, the latter taking a Studebaker car owned by Sheriff Bolton, of Boyne Falls, there for demonstrating purposes. Mr. Swenson left Petoskey early Sunday forenoon and, after taking dinner in that village took Mrs. Newsome who owns and conducts the Russel house in East Jordan, and her daughter and a young man friend for a ride about the village for the purpose of showing Mrs. Newsome the car, the latter being in the market for an automobile. In making a turn on the southeast part of the village the car skidded and upset, turning over twice. Miss Gardner was killed outright and the other occupants were bruised and cut but not fatally injured. Mrs. Newsome suffered a broken rib.

Miss Gardner came to Bay View early in June last year from her home in Hamtrillo, Ind., for her health. She visited there throughout the summer and last fall secured a position in the shoe department at Fitchmann's. During her stay in Petoskey she made her home with Mr. and Mrs. Merritt Bechtel at 307 Mission street, and had made hosts of friends. The shock of her sudden death was a terrible one to her friends here."

New Telephone Manager

O. A. Solomon, who for more than four years has been manager of the local branch of the Michigan State Telephone Company has been transferred to Petoskey to become general manager of the exchange there, says the Boyne Journal. Burr Sage, of Central Lake, formerly associated with the Traverse Bay Telephone Co., will fill the vacancy and is already here and doing quickly acquainted with the work. His wife and family will arrive as soon as a house can be found for them.

"Sell" came to Boyne City from Manistee, where he was employed for twelve years as repair man for the Bell telephone company. He has been in the telephone business for more than seventeen years, working his way up step by step until he is now thoroughly familiar with all lines of the business. His promotion is well deserved as the outcome of faithful application to his duties and the interests of the company.

Mr. Solomon and children will remain until the latter part of May or till the close of school in June.

Forty-Five Years

Another SENTINEL anniversary has passed and gone and we forgot to make a note of it. It was the spring of 1869, forty-five years ago, that the SENTINEL was founded by the present publisher.

It is an old story, and, perhaps, a little story-teller there is a great deal in the record of that forty-five years—very much that the present generation knows very little of. Almost a half century! Memory! The little printing office up under the roof; then the little building now among the trees; the old second hand Washington press; the inkslight lamp; the privations and tribulations;—all drift back to the memory of the man who was then but a boy, sustained by hope, living upon what Providence provided for the day, with uncertainty and doubt as to the morrow.

The record of the SENTINEL needs no apologist. It has fought many battles, and has never wavered in its lighting principle, at least from its own viewpoint. When the books are balanced it will be found that it has been mostly consistent in whatever cause it has espoused. In the forty-five years of its life it has never received a dollar for the support of a cause or a candidate. Its editorial support was never in the market.

We want to round out the half century, and we think we will, as "they are the good who die young."

CONVENTION IN CITY OF DETROIT

MICHIGAN SHEET METAL CONTRACTORS' ASSOCIATION CLOSE MEETING.

GRAND RAPIDS GETS SESSION

Officers Are Selected at the Final Session—George A. Van Landegend of Holland Chosen as President.

Lansing—Grand Rapids was chosen as the next meeting place of the Michigan Sheet Metal Contractors' association at the last session of their two day convention in Detroit.

Officers for the coming year were elected as follows: George A. Van Landegend, Holland, president; Adam T. Martin Saginaw, vice-president; I. H. Mathias, Kalamazoo, secretary; Rupert Mathias, Battle Creek, treasurer; executive committee (one year) Thomas H. Gay of Port Huron, A. H. Bauman of Detroit, Joseph Van Rosmam of Grand Rapids; (two years), Charles M. Sutherland of Jackson, H. H. Fudrith of Detroit, William J. Schwartz of Flint.

Talks were given Friday by S. H. Morgan, Detroit; Adam Martin, Saginaw; George Youngs, Detroit; Mr. Lewhites, Saginaw, and George Harris, Detroit, president of the Illinois State association and secretary of the National association, Seabrook.

The convention concluded with a dinner party.

Telephone Man in Lansing.

"If the public utilities of the state would habitu the full acceptance of the fundamental assumption necessary to the economic well-being of both utilities and public, then, and only then, their public relations their first and greatest care," declared Lawton T. Hemens, chairman of the state railroad commission in an address before a state conference of telephone companies held at the state capitol.

"By so doing they will invite the most careful and searching scrutiny of their original investments, continued the chairman, "and they will welcome the public to a full knowledge of all the facts established in their operations; they will give a fair return to the management of the efficiency of their properties and to the quality of service they furnish as they give to the earning of dividends. They will invite the public to give absolute safety, stability and permanence to their securities, and for the second hand they will compensate the public with decreased rates and betterment service."

Chairman Hemens said these observations apply to all utilities, but with special emphasis to telephone companies, for there is no other, in a sense, whose service is so personal and intimate as that of the telephone.

The conference was the result of the invitation extended by the railroad commission to the 1147 persons, corporations, associations and corporations providing telephone service for the state. The attendance was good. The meeting was called for a better understanding of the relationship that should exist between the telephone companies and the public and a better understanding of the laws governing telephone companies administered by the railroad commission.

A more general compliance with the provisions of the law governing public utilities was urged by Chairman Hemens.

"Welcome the new order of things," said Mr. Hemans. "Recognize the public character of your operations. Give as much thought to the public side of your business as to its financial side, and don't be afraid to lead the law, the courts and the commission to the improvement of conditions that result in public benefits, which in the end any company benefits as well."

Death Rate for February.

Secretary of State Martindale issued the following bulletin:

"There were 3,440 deaths reported to the department of state, as have been received during the month. This number corresponds to an annual death rate of 14.9 per estimated population. In addition to the above there were 249 stillbirths returned as deaths. An increase of 14 deaths is noted as compared with the month immediately preceding.

"It may have been now one dozen of infants under one year of age; 212 deaths of children aged one to four years, both inclusive; 1,134 deaths of adult persons aged sixty-five years and over.

Governor Confers With Appointees.

"It was purely an efficiency conference," Governor Groesbeck said after a two hours' conference in the executive chambers with his Democratic appointees to the various state first politics second. There was no time for any secondary considerations at the conference hence politics was not discussed. I had the first one to say when we opened the conference and I told those assembled that there must be no politics in the conference or speech; that that was not the matter to be discussed."

Sixteen of the governor's Democratic appointees met at the conference. In the first place, the governor informed them that he wanted to know their views, and to the needs of their respective departments. Arthur Lyons his secretary, each department will be reports with him. "It is better to be made of the state needs now than to wait until the legislature convenes or until election time," declared the governor in discussing the matter after the conference. "What heads of these departments know best what is needed along the line of legislation."

Republican Mass Meeting May 21.

A mass meeting of Republicans of the state was decided on at the meeting of the Republican state central committee. The date was tentatively set as May 21, and the meeting will be held in Detroit.

Each county will be asked to send one delegate for each 2,000 of its population, and the committee were confident that at least fifteen hundred representatives would attend the meeting. The form of the call drafted was so framed as to include Progressives who are desirous of returning to the Republican fold. Thus the call assembly might return to the Republican party without any conditions was the sentiment expressed at the gathering.

Alexander J. Groesbeck tendered his resignation as chairman of the committee, but after several committee men had made complimentary speeches regarding him, the resignation was declined. The committee members agreed that Mr. Groesbeck's term would expire before his incumbency could arouse any hard feelings. A successor will be elected for him in September.

Nine members of the state committee and nine members of the State central committee were also elected to act in conjunction in arranging for the mass meeting May 21. The sentiment was general that some prominent Republican leader like Governor Hadley, Senator Borah or Controller Prendergast of New York, should be asked to speak.

Disagree on Cause of Epidemic.

Having exploited the theory that the epidemic of septic sore throat among students of the University of Michigan is due to the water supply, physicians of this city will meet next time this week for a conference, at which other lines of investigations will be started.

Dean Wentworth Myers, professor of ophthalmology, otology, rhinology and laryngology in the homeopathic medical college, is authority for the statement that the epidemic is simply an ordinary sore throat, which in less numbers occurs often in years, but the prevalence of it being due to climatic conditions.

The relationship of the disease to the milk supply will be one of the lines of investigation taken up, for in other cities where there has been such an epidemic this relationship has for some time been either suspected or confirmed. Investigations of similar epidemics in other cities have led to the conclusion that the source of the infection is the inflamed udder of the dairy cow, and in their effort to ascertain the cause of the epidemic which has struck Ann Arbor for the last three years, the physicians will thoroughly investigate this theory.

According to Dr. C. A. Stoeffer, of the university infirmary, the cows of H. J. Allington, the Saginaw boy who is still in a serious condition, are not by the only unusual one brought to the attention of the medical authorities in this city in the last few days. REBELS IN TORREON

FORCE FROM EAST FIGHTS WAY TO CENTER OF CITY.

General Villa's Forces Capture Gomez Palacio on Third Assault —Federals Retreat.

Chihuahua, March 31.—Such news as arrived from the front at Torreon indicates that the rebels are in the ascendancy. Local rebel officers admitted they received dispatches from the front, but declined to reveal the contents.

A report originated at one of the hospitals after more wounded arrived in Chihuahua that General Villa had been wounded slightly and forced to retire from the field.

Juarez, March 30.—General Villa said, in a telegram received here, that virtually all Torreon, including the entire business section, was in the hands of his soldiers.

Gen. Manuelow Herrera, his cavalry brigade and part of the Zaragoza brigade, all veterans, were reported by Villa to have entered Torreon from the east, 4,000 strong, and to have marched from house to house and street to street until the bull ring on the northern fringe of the town was taken back, but no one was hurt.

FLOODS PERIL EAST

LARGE PART OF WESTERN HALF OF NEW YORK IN DANGER OF HEAVY LOSSES.

RIVERS IN OHIO ARE RISING

Washing Out of Bridges Cuts Off Traffic on Several Interurban Lines—Columbus Fears Repetition of Disaster of One Year Ago—Two Dead.

New York, March 31.—Floods through the valleys of the state were reported on Saturday to have caused much property loss during the last week.

The warm weather of the last few days has melted much of the heavy snow which fell earlier in the month, and this, with a steady fall of rain throughout the month, has swollen all the streams, many of which are out of their banks, flooding the towns.

At Troy the Hudson river has assumed flood proportions, and with the water rising rapidly merchants along the river front are removing goods to safer places.

Amsterdam reported on Saturday that part of the bridge which spans the Mohawk river was carrier away.

Cohoes, N. Y., March 31.—An unidentified man was washed down Fren'nan's bridge, over the Mohawk falls in the lower part of town, this morning early. The damage done here by the high water thus far amounts to $200,000.

Albany, N. Y., March 31.—The Hudson river is rising rapidly and riverdwellers along the river front are moving to places of safety.

Buffalo, N. Y., March 31.—Towns in western New York are threatened with a repetition of the disastrous floods of a year ago.

In the lowlands of the Tonawanda residents are going to and from their homes in boats, owing to the overflow from the Tonawanda and Ellicot creeks. At Batavia the municipal sewage disposal plant is again put under water.

Whitehall, N. Y., March 31.—The level of Lake Champlain has risen four feet within the last 24 hours. Should the rapid thaw now in progress continue the worst flood in the history of this region will result. It is feared.

Elmira, N. Y., March 31.—With every river and creek swollen over its banks by a steady downpour during the last 24 hours, flood conditions were alarming throughout the entire southern section of the state.

Cincinnati, March 31.—The Big Miami and Wilmetover rivers and other small streams in this section rose at a rampage. Two temporary bridges over the Cincinnati, Lawrenceburg & Aurora Traction company were washed away, cutting off traffic between Cincinnati and Indian town along the road.

Columbus, O., March 31.—With the Ohioto river climbing a foot an hour, and the Muskingum and Licking rivers out of their banks along the low lands, a residence of the disastrous floods of last year, only in fearful

RESIGNED FROM PARLIAMENT

English Statesman, In Accordance With Law, Stands for Re-Election —Omens Absolutely Decline to Retain Rank in Army.

London, April 1.—Following all the many solutions of the government crisis which had been proposed and discussed Premier Asquith announced a decision to the house of commons on Monday which none of the journals had expected or even suggested.

The prime minister himself will assume the burden of the war office, in addition to his other and almost crushing duties. He will resign from the house at this critical stage, when the economic legislation of the last session is about to be taken up, and will appeal to his constituents for a fresh mandate, within a few days for re-election.

Field Marshal Sir John French, G. C. B., the imperial general staff, and Gen. Sir John Ewart, adjutant general, decided to follow the military traditions in spite of the army order, which was generally considered severely framed as a platform on which the generals might stand with consistency and honor.

Lord Kitchener, the hero of the Egyptian and the Boer wars, who is now on his way home from his post as British agent in Egypt, has accepted the portfolio of the war office, and is expected to arrive in England within a few days for re-election.

MRS. WILLIAMS' LONG SICKNESS

Yields To Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Elkhart, Ind.:—"I suffered for four to five years from organic inflammation, with a general weakness, pain and irregularities. The pains in my sides were increased by walking and by standing on my feet and I had such a feeling bearing down feelings, was depressed in spirits and became thin and pale with failing heavy pains. I had also doctors from whom I received only temporary relief. I decided to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a fair trial and use the Sanative Wash. I have now used the remedies for four months and can recommend my thanks for what they have done for me.

"If these lines will be of any benefit to you, you have my permission to publish them."—MRS. BESSIE WILLIAMS, 405 Jones Street, Elkhart, Indiana.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, contains no narcotic or harmful drugs, and to-day holds the record of being the most successful medicine for female ills we know of, and thousands of voluntary testimonials on file in Lydia Pinkham laboratory at Lynn, Mass., seem to prove this fact.

HIS MIND ON HIGHER THINGS

Scholar Unable to Sit Down and Reason Quietly on Matters of Everyday Life.

A monument was recently unveiled to the memory of Henri Poincaire, the famous mathematician and physicist, who was a cousin of the president of France. The occasion recalls a story or two of his remarkable absent-mindedness.

Almost every day Poincaire left his money lying about somewhere. Built he his mother gained his purse into the pocket of his coat. But one day, when he had dressed in a hotel, he put on his overcoat without the coat, and left that lying on a chair. Needless to say, he never saw the purse again.

Then evening he was looking in a closed bookcase for a manuscript. During the search he set the lamp on the bookcase, and at the moment of abstraction closed the door of the bookcase, leaving the lamp inside. After he had pondered for a time on the disappearance of the lamp, he came to the conclusion that he had definitely become blind. That seemed to him more terrible than if his eyes were weak, as, say, and he groaned throughout the night over his predicaments. Suddenly, to his surprise, a great light shone through the door from the adjoining room, and he remarked, with much satisfaction, "My sight is perfect, the lamp is back again." Not even then did he think of the lamp in the bookcase.—Youth's Companion.

Water for St. Petersburg.

The Czar of Russia, St. Petersburg is considering a measure appropriating $15,000,000 for a supply of pure water, to be drawn from Lake Ladoga, 35 miles away. The resulting Ladoga pumping station the water will be driven into reservoirs and Stores, whence it will be distributed. The plan unsolved to the capital and there distributed. The capacity of the works, which will be ready in 1920, is calculated for a population of 4,000,000.

She—What's your opinion of marriage?

He—Sorry, but I have a wife already.

CLEVER WIFE

Knew How to Keep Peace in Family.

It is quite significant, the number of husbands who, in the Dutch Parliament trouble when they let up on coffee. Coffee is not good for anyone, and, in dealing, with a fretting fear in their lives. As he watched, a woman, coarsely dressed, ran across the street, her handkerchief pressed to her eyes.

The notice has gone up on the door," said the janitor, "and I heard the police. Crowds are ugly somethings."

Valliant drew a sudden sharp breath. The corporation down in the mire, with crowds at its doors and the clamor for money entrusted to it, the aggregate of which, in the end of a phan, the piteous hoarded sums earned by labor over which pinched, sickly faces had bent in midnight toil.

The elder man had turned back to the glass to draw a narrow tipped tie slip of paper from a pigeonhole. "Here," he said, "is a list of the bonds of the subsidiary companies recorded in your name. These are all, of course, signified in the larger failure. You have, however, your private fortune. If you take my advice, by the way," he added stiffnessly, "you'll make sure of keeping that.

"What do you mean?" John Valliant faced him quickly.

The other laughed drily. "A word to the wise," he quoted. "It's very good living abroad. There's a boat leaving tomorrow."

A dull red sprang into the younger man's face.

"Look at that crowd down there—you can hear them now. There'll be a legislative investigation, of course. And the devil's got the blindness." He strode the floor with his hand. "Have you ever seen the little fish in the aquarium? Do you know why that rug under your feet coat? Twelve years ago I was an office boy. What do you suppose the papers will do to that? Do you think such things will be seen anywhere else in the world?"

YOUR APPLE TREES

Methods Recommended for Proper Protection of the Orchard

The Michigan Agricultural college has issued a bulletin stating that the time for spraying for the scab on apples and the fungus diseases on this fruit is in the spring. This is called the dormant spray and is intended to be applied before the buds start to open. It must be put on at that time because it is much cleaner than the lake sprays and will burn the foliage. The M. A. C. recommends the use of the lime and sulphur solution for this spray. One gallon of lime and sulphur solution to ten gallons of water being the strength recommended. The scab winters over on the branches of the tree and to best fight this disease it is far better to kill it before it becomes active and ruiner of the fruit than to count on getting it after the fruit is formed and also infested.

The second spray as recommended by the college, consists of two pounds of arsenate of lead in 50 gallons of water. This spray is for the codling moth. Bud moths, canker worm and all insects that bite orchards. It is applied just after the blossoms fall. The apple is in the first stage then add the calyx or blossom is open at that time. It is into this open bud that the female codling moth enters and lays eggs that afterwards hatch out in the core and make the fruit unfit for sale. By getting the poison in this calyx and the moth is killed before she has any chance of laying eggs and so destroyer the fruit. This is the most important spray for controlling the ravages of this pest. The lime and sulphur solution is added to this and all succeeding sprays also, the strength used being one gallon lime and sulphur to 50 gallons of water.

The arsenac of lead is also good for all those worms that bother the farmer. It is good for potato bugs, currant worms, and other pests. For potatoes it is used a little stronger than for apples, 2½ pounds of arsenate to 50 gallons of water being the strength recommended.

There are two other sprays that are important for the fruit grower, coming about ten days after the blossoms fall and the other about the last of July or the first of August.

Jacob B. Graff was elected City Commissioner for a term of three years at the municipal election in East Jordan Monday.

Central Lake Torch:- John Hanley, for many years a resident of Central Lake, but lately of Jackson, died the first of the week at Kalamazoo, after an illness of about a year and a half. He was brought to Central Lake for burial, the funeral taking place yesterday morning, Rev. Wightman officiating. Mr. Hanley came to Central Lake in 1887, and left in 1910, when he moved to Pellston and from there to Jackson. On September 4, 1878, he was married to Miss Emma Getty. Six children were born to them.

Petoskey News:- Crosby Washburne, son of A. T. Washburne, was called to East Jordan Tuesday by the unexpected death of his grandmother, Mrs. William Crosby who passed away Monday afternoon at their farm home in Evangeline township, Charlevoix county. Mrs. Crosby was formerly a resident of Emmet county, she and her husband at one time owning what is now Roaring Brook resort. Funeral arrangements have not been made, but as soon as they are completed A. T. Washburne will go to the Crosby home.

Bellaire Independent:- Wm. M. Robinson has a fine flowing well on his farm 3½ miles east of town. Ed. Humiston was at work there yesterday morning drilling a well for Mr. Robinson when at a depth of a little over forty feet he struck a gusher which throws a two-inch stream several feet above the ground and furnishes enough water to supply the whole town of Bellaire. This big flow of water was entirely unexpected and things were lively round the Robinson home for a time until they got it under control. The flow is now at the rate of 120 barrels per hour.

Boyne Journal:- George Bailey, the well known city assessor yesterday celebrated his seventy-seventh birthday. He was given a cake well laden with candles, each signifying a milestone passed on life's journey, but there is plenty of room for many more and his friends in the city trust a much greater supply of wax candles will be necessary before the greater light is snuffed out. Mr. Bailey has spent twenty-six years of his life in active service in this city and is very popular with all the citizens, being a prime favorite with the younger ones as well as the old residents. Little Jeanne Bailey, daughter of W. W. Bailey and granddaughter of George Bailey celebrated her tenth birthday with her grandpa. It has been the custom for several years for these two exponents of the passing and coming generations to hold their birthday festivities in union.

Boyne Journal:- We hear that Bay Township has a little dispute over yesterday's election. It seems there was only one ticket in the field but H. Arnold of the Brisham Farms ran for supervisor on slips against E. C. Chew. It appears also that Chew and Shaw, candidate for clerk, sat on the board of election inspectors, the former being chairman. At the counting, it is claimed 100 ballots were cast, 46 for Chew and 46 for Arnold. Two of the ballots were so voted that they were called for Arnold for clerk and given to Chew for supervisor. Eight others were thrown out, all claimed by Arnold for improper voting making the total according to boards report, 48 for Chew and 44 for Arnold. It is clearly illegal for candidates to sit on the election board but steps cannot be taken to set the election aside until May and by the time another election is held it will be the middle of summer and most of the duties of supervisor will have been performed. In the meantime as Chew is the former supervisor from this township he will continue in office until the next election is held or dispute settled. It looks as though Arnold was out all the way around.

Petoskey special:- If, on April 9, which is the date set for hearing objections, no obstacle arises, Petoskey will lay 12 blocks of new pavement this spring, as the result of a resolution just passed by the council, and later passed unanimously over the veto of Mayor John J. Boyer who is opposed to paving. Three years ago, Petoskey laid its first few blocks of pavement, on Mitchell, the principal business street. It was an asphaltic mixture, and proved so serviceable that, the following spring, eight more blocks of the same pavement was put down. Last year the council provided for the paving of about three blocks, which would complete the business circuit and include several of the residence streets. To be last comers it was discovered the money could not be created, because the property in the proposed district did not assess enough to pay the expense. Consequently it was dropped till the present spring, although the curb and gutter and other preliminary work was executed. The property owners paying dollar for dollar, includes four blocks on Lake street, six on Mitchell and two on Emmet. Five miles of pavement will be used. If the people of Petoskey sanction the resolution, the work of letting bids will be pushed, so that the pavement will all be laid by the opening of the resort season. Other extensive preparations are being made to improve the city and its facilities for the coming summer, the road connecting Petoskey and Traverse City, which of late years, has been in poor condition, will be put in the best possible condition with double handsome bridges. The road, which is a portion of the state highway, is one of the most traveled in this resort region.

ROAD REPAIRING A REAL ECONOMY.

Funds Should Be Conserved by Repairs at Necessary Times.

The office of public roads of the department of agriculture is making a strong effort to focus the mind of the country on the fact that economical and effective repair are of equal importance with the actual improvement of bad roads, and movement of money in new roads does not become real economy and provision is made for keeping these new roads in condition after they are built. If a new road is built and then allowed to fall into disrepair much of the original investment is simply wasted, says Market Gardening.

Europe, generally speaking, is ahead of the United States in the matter of road improvement, but Great Britain is in the same predicament as the United States. In England, Scotland and Wales there are no fewer than 2,140 separate authorities, who between them administer 177,187 miles of roads, or an average of only slightly two miles apiece. In Scotland, apart from the big cities, there are 200 districts, some of which have ten miles of road apiece to maintain. Needless to say such a minute subdivision is insufficient to keep the road in proper repair, and all the good sense and practical employment of a skilled engineer impossible for economical reasons.

Officials of the office of public roads have recently been engaged in a study of road laws, and are publishing out this road information, part based on a survey and part based upon and experience gained from the necessity to secure the best results.

Statisticians have found that, although the average expenditure on the improvement of roads exceeds $1,000,000 a day, a large portion of the money in the United States is wasted because it is used to build the right type of road to meet the requirements or the failure to provide for the continued maintenance of the improvement.

The various states and counties with in the last six months have taken a great interest in road improvement, and have played in the history of the Dining States "and more is now a general interest in the subject of roads of the country where they are improved. Improved maintenance will be one of the chief features of the work of the office of public roads throughout the present year.

WHEN BOILING FISH.

Thoroughly cleanse the fish and rub it with vinegar or lemon juice. This whitens the fish and makes it firm.

Add salt and a little vinegar to the water in which the fish is boiled.

The water must be boiling and just sufficient to cover the fish.

Allow from five to ten minutes after the fish is put in and then simmer very gently until the fish is cooked.

Overboiled fish is tasteless and unappetizing. Undercooked fish is not fit for human food.

The time allowed for the cooking of fish is ten minutes to every pound and ten minutes over. Continuous scum must be brought to bear with regard to thickness of the fish, when a fork or knife can be used to test the fish, for as soon as the fish flakes easily from the bone it is ready.

Dish the fish at once. Never allow it to remain soaking in the water after it is ready, or it will become "soggy."

If there is not a fish kettle at hand the fish should be placed on a dish and tied in a cloth. The stock, if not too salt, should be used in the making of the sauce.

CHIC HAND BAGS.

Many Novelties In Bags For Wear With Elaborate Costumes.

With one of the concertas, short jacketed spring suits made of silken stuff draped upward to reveal high heeled, buttoned boots, clipped off at the sleeves to display gloves of embroidered silk and trimmed fashionably with tassels, sash bows and frills of lace, a fine well instinct hand bag with leather handles and a square frame would be quite out of the picture. The embossed tailored suit of the moment demands a strong hand bag just as it demands the soft, graceful gloves and the capacious bottomed boot.

Department stores, specialty shops and even jewelers are showing a greater assortment of bags and reticules than previous seasons have disclosed. There is no limit to the number which can be shown in the fashionable metal robes, for they are worn as much as gowns themselves and chosen to match or suit the individual costume.

Dull rose small silk or velvet covered bags, with gorgeous mountings or with rich embroidery, are carried for the opera or evening functions. Some of the latest opera bags are made of silk with embroidery medallions mounted over pieces of perforated [illegible]

Silver mesh bags are made of three-dimensional work with beads is even richer on a background of diffused [illegible]. The peacock colorings are beautiful and easy to carry out with iridescent beads.

Blue dull jet beads closely sewn together on black silk make very handsome morning reticules, which are used a great deal in place of leather bags.

Leather novelties for street include many attractive and convenient hand bags for women. The envelope bag of leather and the long silk or leather bag, with a tiny watch set into the side, are convenient and attractive. The little watch may be consulted by the busy shopper without the trouble of taking out her own watch from underneath her wrap.

Chop Salad Dressing.

When eggs are expensive and salads so essential in the average home one should know of different salad dressings which lose none of their flavor if eggs are not included.

One may use olive oil or butter for the purpose. It should be boiled with the pepper and vinegar, then strained and so it added the desired amount of salt, sugar and mustard, with a fresh teaspoonful of cornstarch to a small quantity of dressing to give it the smooth effect obtained with eggs.

Heat the milk in the boiler, add a very small quantity of sugar and when possible the best bit of whipped cream you have at hand. Pour over the delicious mayonnaise is the vinegar dressing, and garnished with brown sugar and strained for use. It gives the flavor which one is reminded to wonder "What can it be" and yet cannot discover.

YOUR APPLE TREES

Methods Recommended for Proper Protection of the Orchard.

The Michigan Agricultural college has issued a bulletin stating that the time for spraying for the scab on apples and the fungus diseases on the fruit is in the spring. This is called the dormant spray and is intended to be applied before the buds start to open. It must be put on at that time because it is much stronger than the lake sprays and will burn the foliage. The M. A. C. recommends the use of the lime and sulphur solution for this spray. One gallon of lime and sulphur solution to ten gallons of water being the strength recommended. The scab winters over on the branches of the tree and to best fight this disease it is far better to kill it before it becomes active and lodges on the fruit than to count on getting it after the fruit is formed and also infected.

The second spray as recommended by the college, consists of two pounds of arsenate of lead in 50 gallons of water. This spray is for the codling moth. Bud moths, canker worm and all insects that bite orchards. It is applied just after the blossoms fall. The apple is in the first stage then and the calyx or blow end is open at that time. It is into this open bud that the female codling moth enters and lays eggs that afterwards hatch out in the core and make the fruit unfit for sale. By getting the poison in this calyx end the moth is killed before she has any chance of laying eggs and so destroying the fruit. This is the most important spray for controlling the ravages of the pest. The lime and sulphur solution is added to this and all succeeding sprays also, the strength used being one gallon lime and sulphur to 60 gallons of water.

The arsenate of lead is also good for all those insects that bother the farmer. It is good for potato bugs, currant worms and, this year, the tent caterpillars. It is used a little stronger than for apples, 3½ pounds of arsenate to 50 gallons of water being the strength recommended.

There are two other sprays that are important for the fruit grower, one about ten days after the blossoms fall and the other about the last of July or the first of August.

Northern Michigan.

Joseph H. Graff was elected City Commissioner for a term of three years at the municipal election in East Jordan Monday.

Central Lake Torch:- John Hanley, for many years a resident of Central Lake, but lately of Jackson, died the first of the week at Jackson, after an illness of about a year and a half. He was brought to Central Lake for burial, the funeral taking place yesterday morning, Rev. Wightman officiating. Mr. Hanley came to Central Lake in 1882, and left in 1910, when he moved to Pellston and from there to Jackson. On September 4, 1895, he was married to Miss Emma Getty. Six children were born to them.

Petoskey News:- Crosby Washburne, son of A. T. Washburne, was called to East Jordan Tuesday by the unexpected death of his grandmother, Mrs. William Crosby who passed away Monday afternoon at their farm home in Evangeline township, Charlevoix county. Mrs. Crosby was formerly a resident of Emmet county, she and her husband at one time owning what is now Bonnie Brook resort. Funeral arrangements have not been made, but as soon as they are completed A. T. Washburne will go to the Crosby home.

Bellaire Independent:- Wm. M. Robinson has a fine flowing well on his farm 1½ miles east of town. Ed. Humeston was at work there yesterday morning drilling a well for Mr. Robinson when at a depth of a little over forty feet he struck a gusher which throws a two-inch stream several feet above the ground and furnishes enough water to supply the whole town of Bellaire. This big flow of water was entirely unexpected and things were lively round the Robinson home for a time until they got it under control. The flow is now at the rate of 120 barrels per hour.

Boyne Journal:- George Bailey, the well known city assessor yesterday celebrated his seventy-seventh birthday. He was given a cake well laden with candles, each signifying a milestone passed on life's journey, but there is plenty of room for many more and his friends in the city trust a much greater supply of wax candles will be necessary before the greater light is snuffed out. Mr. Bailey has spent twenty-six years of his life in active service in this city and is very popular with all the citizens, being a prime favorite with the young folks as well as the old residents. Lettie Jeanne Bailey, daughter of W. W. Bailey and granddaughter of George Bailey celebrated her tenth birthday with her grandpa. It has been the custom for several years for these two exponents of the passing and coming generations to hold their birthday festivities in union.

Boyne Journal:- We hear that Bay Township has a little dispute over yesterday's election. It seems there was only one ticket in the field but H. Arnold of the Brigham Farms, ran for supervisor on slips against L. C. Chew. It appears also that Chew and Shaw, candidate for clerk, sat on the board of election inspectors, the former being chairman. At the counting, it is claimed 150 ballots were cast, 46 for Chew and 46 for Arnold. Two of the ballots were so voted that they were tallied for Arnold for clerk, and given to Chew for supervisor. Eight others were thrown out, all claimed by Arnold for improper voting making the total according to board report, 46 for Chew and 44 for Arnold. It is clearly illegal for candidates to sit on the election board but steps cannot be taken to set the election aside until May and by that time another election will be held in the middle of summer and most of the duties of supervisor will have been performed. In the meantime as Chew is the former supervisor from this township he will continue in office until the next election is held or dispute settled. It looks as though Arnold was out all the way around.

Petoskey special:- If, on April 9, which is the date set for hearing objections, no obstacles arise, Petoskey will lay 12 blocks of new pavement this spring, as the result of a resolution just passed by the council, and later passed unanimously over the veto of Mayor John J. Reycraft who is opposed to paving. Three years ago, Petoskey laid its first four blocks of pavement, on Mitchell, the principal business street. It was an asphaltic mixture, and proved so serviceable that, the following spring, eight more blocks of the same pavement was put down. Last year the council provided for the paving of about 32 more blocks, which would complete the business district and include several of the residence streets. At the last moment it was discovered the money could not be spared, because the property in the proposed district did not assess enough to pay the expense. Consequently it was dropped till the present spring, although the curb and gutter and other preliminary work was executed. The proposed paving district for this spring includes four blocks on Lake street, six on Mitchell and two on Emmet. Five kinds of pavements will be used. If the people of Petoskey sanction the resolution, the work of letting bids will be rushed, so that the pavement will all be laid by the opening of the resort season. Other extensive preparations are being made to improve the city and its facilities for the coming summer. The road connecting Petoskey and Bay View, which of late years has been in poor condition, will be put in for best possible condition with crushed boulders. The road, which is a portion of the state curve, is one of the most traveled in this resort region.

WHEN BOILING FISH.

Thoroughly cleanse the fish and rub it with vinegar or lemon juice. This whitens the fish and makes it firm.

Add salt and a little vinegar to the water in which the fish is boiled.

The water must be boiling and that sufficient to cover the fish.

Allow the water to boil for three minutes after the fish is put in and then simmer very gently until the fish is cooked.

Overboiling fish is tasteless and disagreeable. Underboiling fish is not fit for human food.

The time allowed for the cooking of fish is ten minutes to every pound and ten minutes over. Common sense must be brought to bear with regard to the thickness of the fish when a fork or skewer should be used to feel the fish, for as soon as the flesh parts easily from the bone it is ready.

Dish the fish at once. Never allow it to remain standing in the water after it is ready, or it will become "woolly."

If there is not a fish kettle at hand the fish should be placed on a dish and tied in a cloth. The stock if not too rich, should be used in the making of the sauce.

CHIC HAND BAGS.

Many Novelties in Bags For Wear With Elaborate Costumes.

With one of the coquettish, short jacketed spring suits made of silken stuff draped upward to reveal high heeled, buttoned boots, clipped off in the sleeves to display glove of embroidered silk and trimmed fetchingly with tassels, ears bows and frills of lace, a fine soft leather hand bag with leather handles and a square frame would be quite out of the picture. The elaborate tailored suit of the moment demands a dressy hand bag, just as it demands the soft, graceful gloves and the coquettish buttoned boot.

Department stores, specialty shops and even jewelry stores are showing a greater assortment of bags and reticules than previous seasons have disclosed. There is no limit to the number which can be utilized in the fashionable ward robe, for they are as varied as the gowns themselves and chosen to match or suit this and that costume.

Just now satin silk or velvet appeal to us, with gorgeous mountings or with rich embroidery, are carried to the open or evening musicale. Some of the latest open tops are made of silk with embroidery sections mounted over pieces of pasteboard.

A combination of silver or gold mesh alternating with bands of velvet richer on a background of ribbon velvet. The peacock colorings are beautiful and easy to carry out with discreet beads.

Fine doll jet beads closely sewn together on black silk make very handsome mourning reticules which are used a great deal in place of leather bags.

Leather novelties for spring include many attractive and convenient handbags for women. The envelope bag of leather and the long silk or leather bag, with a flap which set into the side, are convenient and attractive. The little watch may be connected by the busy shopper without the trouble of taking out her own watch from underneath her wrap.

Cheap Salad Dressing.

When eggs are expensive and salads so economical in the average home, one should know of different salad dressings which lose none of their one flavor if eggs are not included.

One may use olive oil or butter for the purpose. It should be boiled with red pepper and celery seed. Then strain so as to infuse the desired amount of salt, and mustard, mixed with a fourth teaspoonful of cornstarch to a small quantity of dressing to serve it the smooth effect obtained with eggs.

Heat this with an egg beater, add a very small quantity of vinegar and, when possible, the best bit of whipped cream. The secret of an unexpensive delicious mayonnaise is the vinegar used. It is spiced and sweetened with brown sugar and strained for use. It gives that flavor over which one is certain to wonder "What can it be?" and not cost cancer discovery.

COMING.

Toronto, Ontario, May—Twenty Five Thousand in City Streets.

"Although no official concrete price has been made public of apportionment from time to time for a great many places, it is commonly reported, recently, when a writer in the Rivetted World, that the horse has employed or even authority, which is the high and constantly increasing cost of wooden paves, taking into consideration their life, with consequent respective renewal at intervals thereof, as well as the demand of the public for the beautification of the streets, render the consideration of some other construction desirable for the main arteries.

"A number of experimental installations of concrete have been made in the last five or six years on this continent and in Europe. The largest pole installation of concrete is that of 25,000 square feet laid in connection with the Toronto street building and the hydro-electric system in Toronto.

"The appearance of an overhead installation was far greatly improved by using a pole of neat and uniform contour, which is made possible by the use of concrete. With a suitable lighting system and arrangement for overhead wiring, the ornamental effect can be obtained at substantially the same cost as the best wooden poles are used, and there is also the prospective saving in maintenance expense."

BUILDING A TOWN TO ORDER.

Chicago Men Will Provide Modern Homes For Miners.

A new town is to be built adjacent to two villages of Chicago, usually as a place of residence for the miners of a coal mining property recently placed in operation near the town site and a large electric power station. The promoter of the Federal Coal company and the Central Illinois Public Service company.

While the purpose of the enterprise is commercial, it is being carried out with every effort to make it attractive, picturesque, modern, and sociological conditions. At the same time care has been taken to avoid over beautification and to keep the practical purposes and limitations of the project strictly in mind. For this purpose frequent conferences have been held with John Mitchell of the Miners' union.

The new town, which has been named Nowell, is to be subdivided in part of the state, about twenty miles south of Springfield, on 20 miles south of Chicago and one mile north of St. Louis. The plans are and interesting feature of this enterprise is the application of ideals in town planning ideas for an average population. In a mining district.—Engineering News.

ROAD REPAIRING A REAL ECONOMY.

Funds Should Be Conserved by Repairs at Necessary Times.

The office of public roads of the department of agriculture is making a strong effort to focus the mind of the country on the first that judicious and effective repair are of equal importance with the actual improvement of bad roads. Investment of money in new roads does not become real economy until provision is made for keeping these new roads in condition after they are built. If a new road is built and then allowed to fall into disrepair much of the original investment is already wasted, says Montel on Engineering.

Europe, generally speaking, is ahead of the United States in the matter of road improvement, but Great Britain is struggling with a problem similar to the one that confronts the people of the United States. In England, Scotland and Wales there are no fewer than 2,000 separate authorities, who between them administer 175,687 miles of roads, or an average of only eighty two miles apiece. In Scotland, apart from the big cities, there are over 200 burghs, one half of which have not ten miles of road apiece to maintain. It is to be hoped, but as a bill killer is has Salmon and the Scotsman of the 19th Beaten hands down.

INCIDENTS IN THE LIFE OF CHRIST

"He is Risen"

NE day an angel came to Mary and said: "Fear not, Mary, for thou hast found favor with God. Behold thou shalt conceive in thy womb and bring forth a son and shalt call his name Jesus. He shall be great and shall be called the Son of the Highest, and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David. He shall reign over the house of Jacob forever." Mary and Joseph went away into a city of Judea, into the city called Bethlehem, because they belonged to the house of David. When the child was born there were many shepherds watching their flocks. When they heard of Christ's nativity many were afraid, and the angel said unto them: "Fear not, for behold I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Savior, which is Christ the Lord." When the shepherds come to the manger they found the babe wrapped in swaddling clothes. There were angels and a multitude of the heavens in host praising God and saying: "Glory be to God in the highest, and on earth peace and good will toward men." The shepherds fell down before Christ and worshipped him. They then made known abroad what they had heard. Then came wise men from the East, guided by a star which stood over the young child. They opened their treasures and presented him gifts of gold, frankincense and myrrh. Forty days after Jesus' birth his parents carried him to the temple at Jerusalem. There was one Simeon who had long been waiting for the coming of a Savior to the Jews. He took the child up in his arms and exclaimed: "Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace according to thy word: for mine eyes have seen thy salvation."

Joseph and Mary remained but a short time with their child in Egypt. The death of Herod later recalled them to Palestine, and they returned to their old place of abode, the little town of Nazareth in Galilee. They did this because the angel, as the Lord ordered him, in a dream, had said: "Take the young child and his mother and flee into Egypt, and be thou there until I bring thee word, for Herod will seek the young child to destroy him." He grew strong in both body and spirit. Tradition says he wore a garment without seams, made of a kind of woven hair of a purplish brown color.

The Gospels tell us nothing of his occupation as a young man. Tradition relates, and it appears truly, that he spent the whole thirty years before he began his ministry in retirement. John was the first to announce the great work Jesus intended doing. He abandoned the solitude of the desert for the banks of the Jordan. He gathered the people together in hosts. He announced that they were to be delivered from sin and bondage, and to prepare for the Messiah's coming.

It was at Bethabara that John the Baptist saw Jesus for the first time, and looking upon him said: "Behold the lamb of God." It was here that the 12 stones were set up, marking the spot where the children of Israel had crossed the Jordan dry shod to enter the promised land. Jesus had come to be baptized, but John refused until he heard Jesus say: "Suffer it to be so now, for thus it becomes us to fulfil all righteousness." After Jesus had spoken to the people he was led into the wilderness by the spirit. Here he was tempted for 40 days by the devil. He was an hungered and the devil said unto him: "If thou be the Son of God command that this stone be made bread." And Jesus answered him saying: "It is written man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." He next brought him to Jerusalem and set him on a pinnacle of the temple and said unto him: "If thou be the Son of God cast thyself down from hence." Jesus answered, "It is said thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God." Then the devil tempted him a third time, offering Christ the kingdom of the world if he would worship him. The answer came, "Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God and him only shalt thou serve."

The temptation is the expression of the period that intervened between Christ's private life and his public ministry. One day Jesus was walking by the sea and he saw two men, called Peter, and Andrew, his brother, casting a net into the sea. And he said unto them: "Follow me and I will make you fishers of men." They straightway left their nets and followed him. He walked on farther, where he came upon James, the son of Zebedee, and John, his brother, who were in the ship mending their nets. He straightway called them and they left their father in the ship with his hired men and followed him. Nothing was more distinct about Christ's spiritual power until one day Jesus called to him his twelve disciples and gave them authority to cast out unclean spirits, and to heal all manner of sickness and disease among the sick of Israel. And Christ went from place to place until he had found his 12 apostles. He was unwilling to rest then. He began to give food to the hungry, still to the blind, health to the sick and comfort to aching hearts. Among the most illustrious of his miracles was when he constrained his disciples to go on board the boat and row across the lake to Capernaum. Then he sent away the great crowd of people who were still eager that he should be their king. When they were all gone and he was left alone he went up into the mountain to pray. While he was praying in the night a great storm came up on the lake. When the storm was at its height Jesus went to his disciples walking on the water as though the sea were dry land. Then the men in the boat saw a strange figure coming near them and Jesus called out to them: "Be of good cheer; it is I; be not afraid." After Jesus had performed many miracles the people asked him to do them things to satisfy their curiosity. When he refused then they became angry and left him. Finally, Jesus turned to his 12 apostles and asked: "Will ye also go away and leave me?" But Simon Peter answered him: "Lord, to whom shall we go? For thou only hast the words of everlasting life." One day, on entering the temple, he saw that the merchants and brokers were making everything subservient to their avarice. His anger rose at the sight and he drove these nobly doings in the temple. He did not hesitate as to what should be done. He threatened the traders with a scourge of small cords, drove them out and said to them: "Take these things hence; make not my Father's house an house of merchandise." After he left Jerusalem he went directly to Aenon, near Salem, which was the field of John the Baptist's labors. Here he spent most of his time from the Passover to the late harvest. He wished to instruct his disciples more thoroughly in his teaching.

He did not go back to Jerusalem until the feast of the Passover. It was then he healed a man who had been lame for 38 years. It was then that he told them that the bread which he was about to give them was to be the self-sacrifice of the nobly life for the salvation of mankind. Soon after Jesus left Bethabara with his disciples and came to Bethany. There he found a man named Lazarus that had been dead for four days. Martha and Mary could no longer control their grief. Seeing their brother, Jesus, weeping, said: "Take ye away the stone." And he cried with a loud voice, "Lazarus, come forth," and he that was dead came forth.

Then he went to the Mount of Olives, where his disciples followed him. When he came down he rode into Jerusalem, followed by a crowd of many men, women and children bearing palms. As he rode into the city all the thronging was glorious and cried, "Who is this?" And the multitude answered, "This is Jesus, the prophet of Nazareth." He then went to the temple time and again, teaching many things and performing miracles.

It was at this time that Jesus and his disciples partook of the last supper. While they were eating he took the bread and blessed it. He then broke it and passed it to each of his disciples. At the same time he said: "This is my body which is broken for you; this do in remembrance of me." Afterwards he took the cup of wine and passed it to each of his disciples with the words: "This cup is the new testament in my blood, which is shed for you."

When the feast was going on he washed the feet of all his disciples. This means that all who follow him should serve one another, as he was taking he grew sad and said: "Verily, verily I say to you that one of you that is eating with me shall betray me and after the morrow I shall be with you." Then Jesus dipped a piece of bread and gave it to Judas Iscariot, saying, "What you are going to do" After he had waited a few minutes he spoke: "Little children, yet a little while I will leave me alone; yet I will not be alone, for my Father will be with me." He wanted to be alone that he knew that in a little time Judas would be there with a band of men who would seize him.

Suddenly the disciples heard the noise of a crowd. When they saw the swords flashing they knew that Judas had betrayed Christ.

Before he was seized he made a speech to his disciples and the crowd. He was then led away to Caiaphas, the high priest, and when morning was come they delivered him to Pontius Pilate and he was tried before this Roman governor, who was an enemy of Jesus, and was therefore glad of an opportunity to vex him. After Judas saw that Christ was condemned he felt remorse. In honor of the coming Passover one criminal was to be pardoned and he asked that it should be Christ. It was now too late. With two condemned criminals Jesus himself carried the instrument of death to the place of execution. Stripped of many of his clothing he was lifted up to the cross and nailed by his hands and feet. After many hours Joseph and his friends took down the body, wrapped it in fine linen, and laid it in the tomb. The body lay there from one evening of Friday, when he died on the cross, to the dawn of Sunday, which is Easter. When the women came to the sepulchre they saw that the seal was broken and the stone was rolled away. It was empty and an angel appeared and said: "Fear ye not, for I know he seek Jesus, which was crucified. He is not here, for he is risen as he said." And afterward Jesus appeared to his disciples and said: "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." Then he lifted up his hands and blessed them and while he blessed them he was parted from them and was carried up into heaven.

SHEEP FOR CHIPPEWA.

Through the efforts of J. A. Jeffrey, land commissioner for the Duluth, South Shore & Atlantic railway, Montana sheep men have become interested in Chippewa county, in the upper peninsula as a pasture for sheep, ripe for several large sheep ranches. He is confident that one summer's experience will convince the western men that sheep can be fat produced and fattened for market on cut-over lands. He is now getting in touch with owners of large tracts suitable for this purpose. It is not expected that any of the land will be purchased outright at the start, but if satisfactory arrangements can be made for leasing the first season and the experiment is a success, a number of western stockmen will be anxious to buy the land. The demonstration would prove to stockraisers that cattle and hogs can also be raised and fattened for market, with finer flesh and finer flavor than can be produced in the warmer countries.

Mr. Jeffrey, learning that certain Montana sheep raisers were dissatisfied with the short grazing period of that country, got in touch with them. It is said that in Montana the grass begins to fail as early as the first of July, or although it is sufficient to sustain life after that period, it has not the fattening qualities necessary to prepare sheep for the market. As a result, stockmen are obliged to sell spring lambs before they are in their proper growth. In the upper peninsula pasture is at its best in July, just at the time it is beginning to fail in the western states. The climate and soil conditions in Michigan are both conducive to rapid vegetation, and the night dews make up for any dearth of rain during the driest summers ever experienced.

BIG APPLE CENTER.

The fact that it is being made in Cadillac to make that northern Michigan city the center of a vast apple growing country is bearing fruit already. Two thousand farmers within a radius of 20 miles are being interested in the project to set out thousands of trees of hardy varieties this season and to follow that up with other thousands other years. The two-year-old trees will be brought to this city by the carload, perhaps three or four carloads this first shipment. It has been agreed that not more than four varieties will be selected this year in the hope that by concentrating so few varieties, the advertising value for Cadillac will be greater than though a greater number of varieties were chosen.

The trees will be selected in the nurseries by experts, and experts will be on hand to help the farmers at set out the trees. Indeed, Cadillac, through its new organization, the Northern Dairy Apple association, has decided to engage a horticulturist who will give duty enough to make himself useful all over the apple country. Some farmers have made up their minds for 1,000 trees for the first season, and it now seems likely that they will be upwards of three times as set out every that city in April.

"The apple industry in the Cadillac district is operating and practically every one of the 7,000 inhabitants is proud of it," will set out from two to six trees in their city yards. The campaign has fair to be a perpetual 10 providing for the future that any city of Michigan under 10,000 population ever engaged in.

"THE LONESOME PINE"

A W. Corey, foreman and woodsman for Henry Bizard at Lisbon, in Antrim county, with his crew of "swamp angels" has completed cutting off a tract of timber near that village. One grand old monarch of the forest has been spared, a large pine tree standing near the mouth of the river where it empties into Grass lake. This noble old pine has long been used as a landmark by launch owners and business as a guide to the entrance to the river on dark nights. The grand old sentinel will be left to future generations, and can very truly be called "The Lonesome Pine."

SOON WILL BE UNUSUAL SCENE IN MICHIGAN

Scenes like that in the accompanying picture will in a comparatively few years be unusual in the northern part of the lower peninsula. Rarely does one see even a lone pine tree in a forest and the hardwood and hemlock are fast disappearing. In all the northern part of the lower peninsula there are scarcely more than half a dozen large tracts of standing timber today, and in 20 years there will not be much timber left to make use for more than the dinky portable mills. All the big tracts will have been cut over in the air and long before that time most of the lumber companies will have completed their cuts.

The old time lumberjacks have already passed on to other and more lucrative occupations and the death knell has been sounded to the picturesque lumberjack and when one does he secure his work and the men he works with. The jacks of today are a cross between a poor farmer and a poor woodsman with the result that he is not a great success in either. He will never follow the hardwood, however, and with the woods work gone, he may settle down in some of his own clearings and make a fair farmer.

SUCCESSFUL WITH CELERY IN MANISTEE COUNTY

Celery Grown by B. W. McIntosh.

That Kalamazoo has no "corner" on celery raising in Michigan is proven by the great success that has attended the efforts alone that one of B. W. McIntosh of Bear Lake, Manistee county. He found that by draining some swamp land he had on hand a piece of soil for celery growing to any land in Kalamazoo county. It is even claimed for the Bear lake celery that it goes onto the market whiter than does the Kalamazoo brand. Since it has become known that Mr. McIntosh has proved that the northern soil produces such a good article of celery other men have commenced getting ready for a similar venture. This coming season will see G. A. Brigham of Buckley, Wexford county, draining a large acreage of swamp land which he will put into celery and peppermint, experiments on his land proving that the soil is well adapted to celery growing. The knowledge that there is an unlimited demand for celery and that it can be grown in the north, as well as around Kalamazoo, has given northern Michigan farmers the courage to make a new venture.

BANNER YEAR FOR ALFALFA.

The prediction that the season of 1913 would see a much greater acreage of alfalfa on Michigan farms than ever before, even surpassing the great record of 1912, is made by R. I. Baldwin, superintendent of agricultural extension at the Michigan Agricultural college at Lansing. He says alfalfa growing is assuming a new part in the experimental stage and should hereafter appeal to every practical farmer as an economical proposition.

The season of 1913 marked another great increase in the amount of land devoted to the growing of alfalfa. Reports received from throughout the state indicate a high degree of success with the crop and justify the increasing demand for information on alfalfa culture which is being received at the college, there is to be a much greater area planted during the year 1913.

The experiment station has sent out over seventy thousand circulars and bulletins on alfalfa growing, and the extension service has organized 114 clubs, with a combined membership of over two thousand. These clubs are scattered through 70 counties, 11 of which are in the upper peninsula. Many more clubs will be formed during the year.

SCHOOLS DO GOOD WORK.

Nine agricultural extension schools have been held in northern and west Michigan during the present winter. These were at Iron Mountain, Cheboygan, Ironwood, Tawas City, Marquette, Lake Linden, Norland, Sullivan Bay and Traverse City. These schools are a new idea in agricultural education. The state agricultural college sent out 12 men who stayed a week in each place, and held regular sessions morning and afternoon, taking up one or two subjects and considering them in a comprehensive manner. The attendance at these schools was not large, but the results were satisfactory. They have been more educational than informational, and likewise more practical than has been the case in the best institute work. It is now part of the extension work will grow with each year, and eventually put the farmers' institute out of business. It was found in these schools that the farmers in one county either could not or likes to follow one subject long enough to secure a thorough understanding of it. Single lectures are good as far as they go, but they are like a full week's study of one subject.

Nature Never Intended Woman to be Sickly
As a matter of fact it is her right not her duty to enjoy perfect health and strength—to be just as Nature intended she should be—in view of the fact that it is also who brings into the world the children, who are to be strong and healthy. Don't reason yourself to a delicate life.
Many women suffer from headaches, backaches, nervousness, low spirits, lack of ambition, or have lost all hope of health and strength. If you are one, the chance that you will speedily regain your health if you will try
Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription
(In Tablet or Liquid Form)
This famous remedy is the result of years of patient research by a physician who has made women's peculiar ailments a life study.
Sickly women in debilitating weakness, from forty years ago—those who suffered from "female weakness" or "female complaints" and who were cured by Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, are now in good health. They write to Dr. Pierce, Buffalo, N.Y., for a cure for their ailments.

CORN CAN BE GROWN ON CANADIAN PRAIRIES

Manitoba is now commenting to produce considerable corn, chiefly for feeding purposes. In some cases where the crop can be matured into the dough stage, silos could be used and would be a profitable investment. According to the Farm and Ranch Review a correspondent visited a field of corn in southern Manitoba on September 26. The corn then was untouched by frost and it stood on an average eight and nine feet in height. The corn had developed into the dough stage, and the crop would easily exceed 30 tons to the acre. At many experimental farms, the same favorable showing of the corn crop has manifested itself. At the Brandon experimental farm this year several varieties, all very good yielders, matured into good silo corn.

Considering the success with which corn can be produced, and the advantages to be gained by so productive it should not it receive the serious attention of the western agriculturist? Corn is successfully grown in the northern part of Minnesota in similar soil and under the same climatic condition, and there does not appear to be any reason why that results should not be secured in western Canada. It is the opinion of many American farmers of experience that the corn belt is extending northward. The prairie provinces must gradually take up with mixed farming. More stock on the farms must be raised, and in consequence farming must to some extent be diverted from grain growing to other necessary crops. If crops suitable for wintering cattle and especially dairy stock are to be grown, why should not corn be one of these crops? In Ontario and in the United States we find it pays the man who feed for wintering beef and dairy cattle. They would not be without that profitable plant. In fact, since its introduction it has become a much stock can be retained on the same amount of land, besides considering its great value for keeping the land clean. Some may say that many crops that can be grown in Canada and the United States cannot be grown here, but not so with corn, even now we find scattered fields of corn in Alberta and Saskatchewan.—Advertisement.

Hard Luck.

Two New Yorkers, of some experience in travel more than by the rapid transit lines of the metropolis were telling hard luck stories.

"About the worst I ever got up against," said one, "happened during a Connecticut Yankee what was represented to be a pullet, and by gravy! it turned out to be a hen so old she couldn't lay fresh eggs."

"Hard luck, hard luck!" signed the other, who had a red nose. "But think of me being marooned for a whole month in a Kansas town which was so dry that even the cows had gone dry at the last election!"

PEACH ORCHARD IN BLOOM.

Peachblow farm, belonging to Frank E. Blewett, located in South Custer, Mason county, western Michigan, consists of ten acres, nine of which are given over to peach orchards. All told, there are 1080 peach trees on the place and in 1910 were harvested 1,100 bushels of fruit, and each bushel was marketed at a satisfactory figure. Mr. Blewett has refused $1500 for the place.

WAGE WAR ON FOE OF FRUIT GROWER

An effort is being made to rid western Michigan of the apple tree tent caterpillar. To this end an active campaign is being waged against this pest by fruit growers. These have taken up the study of the insect, and pupils were instructed to find as many egg masses as possible, bring these to school, count and burn the masses and finally report the result to the county school commissioners. It is believed that in this way millions of eggs were destroyed as the forest and orchard trees of northwestern Michigan contained hundreds of thousands of these masses. There were thousands of trees that had from one to five masses on each limb. As each mass is made up of many hundreds of eggs it is easy to figure that the caterpillar population next season would be several times that of the United States if nothing were done to destroy the eggs.

The campaign was the suggestion of Prof. Myron A. Cobb of the agricultural department of the Central Michigan State Normal college. He made a trip over the counties in the northwestern corner of the lower peninsula of the state late in the fall and noticed the vast number of egg masses. Realizing that something should be done before the warm weather of spring should cause the eggs to hatch he conceived the idea of a campaign on the part of the teachers and pupils in the rural schools. A number of the county commissioners agreed to help the campaign along by the sending out of circulars and the making of reports.

This is the first time that a campaign of this kind has ever been worked through the rural schools. The campaign certainly promises to be satisfactory other campaigns will be planned for the advancement of the agricultural and horticultural interests of this section of the state. In fact there is no reason why this plan of common enemies of the people can not be fought through the machinery furnished by the school system. Professor Cobb is sanguine of success in his fix the purpose of aiding the teachers and the pupils in their fight against the caterpillars.

It is easy to find the egg mass on the trees. Each mass is about one half of an inch wide and forms a grayish brown knot-like band or ring around the twig and contains from one to three hundred eggs placed on end, packed closely and covered with a layer of light brown varnish-like mass, which protects the eggs and serves as the first food for the young caterpillar. The eggs are on the twigs a long time before hatching, being deposited in early part of the previous summer, and hatching the following April. There is only one brood a year. The eggs are near the end of the small twigs and are readily seen when the leaves are off, and one soon learns to recognize them. The egg masses are easy to destroy, not because of the bright light affect the insect, a course day is taken from the time to search for them. The egg masses may be picked from the lower twigs of the tree by cut off. A tree pruner with a long handle is a convenient device for cutting off higher twigs. Of course the eggs should be destroyed.

In the spring the caterpillars come from the eggs as the buds are opening and crawl over the branch until they find a suitable crotch for making their web. This web is small at first but is enlarged as the caterpillars grow and may become two feet across. The caterpillars leave their nest during the day to feed but apparently enjoy getting together at night, the web or colonies affords protection from the cold and rain.

The caterpillars are black with a white stripe down the back, and marked on the sides with short yellow lines and pale blue spots. When the caterpillars are full-grown, about two inches long, they leave the tree and find shelter under boards, bark, etc. and spin a silken cocoon from which in a few weeks the adult moths emerge and the eggs are laid in early summer in masses. The adult moth is reddish brown with two transverse whitish lines on the fore wings. The females have a wing expanse of 1½ inches. The moths fly at night and are abundant in infested regions.

Uric Acid is Slow Poison

Unseen in its approach, hard to detect in its early stages, and cruelly painful in its later forms, uric acid poisoning is a disease too often fatal.

Bright's disease is one of the final stages of uric acid poisoning. It kills in our country every year more men and women than any other ailment except two—consumption and pneumonia. Bright's disease and uric acid poisoning usually start in some kidney weakness that would not be hard to cure, if discovered early, so it is well to know the early cause of kidney disease and uric poisoning.

When uric acid is formed too fast and the kidneys are weakened by a cold, or fever, by overwork, or by overindulgence, the acid collects, the blood gets impure and heavy, there is headache, dizziness, heart palpitation, and a dull, heavy-headed drowsy feeling with disturbances of the urine.

Real torture begins when the uric acid forms into gravel or stones in the kidney, or crystallizes into jagged bits in the muscles, joints or on the nerve tissues. Then follow the awful pains of neuralgia, rheumatism, gout, sciatica, neuritis, lumbago or kidney colic.

"I don't know what ails me."

It is but a further step to dropsy or Bright's disease.

Be warned by backache, by sediment in the urine, by puffiness under the eyes or too frequent passages. Correct disordered kidneys. Use Doan's Kidney Pills. A remedy made just for weak kidneys, that has been proved good in years of use in thousands of cases—a remedy that is recommended by grateful users from coast to coast.

CONFINED TO BED

A Story of Terrible Suffering From Kidney Disease

Mrs. Miles Kirk, Mills St., Spencer, Ind., says: "When I first began using Doan's Kidney Pills I was confined to my bed. I was in great pain and could not move without assistance. My back was so lame I could not bend or lift anything. The next symptoms were dizzy spells and I would fall to the floor in a heap. I began to have terrible nervous spasms and I was in a state of collapse. I had to have my meals served me in bed. I suffered from a constant pain and I had to be rubbed with liniment before I could get out of bed. I was in a terrible condition and had suffering again. At that time I was hardly able to be about the house. I had to lie down every afternoon and I was so nervous I could not sleep. Doan's Kidney Pills put me on my feet and I soon got well. I have had no return of my trouble since I used Doan's Kidney Pills."

JESTS BROUGHT UP TO DATE

Two That Have Their Origin in the Financial Problems That Confront the Housewife.

From the coat of living two jests are evolved for us.

The first is about a young couple who have discovered how to make both ends meet. They begin dinner with oxtail soup and end with beans and bacon. You'll have to study quite a while to get this one.

The other is about another young couple who have tried to economize by "going back on the soil." Their acres and freedom was at the edge of a virgin forest. They lived on vegetables they raised—and was too dear to be thought of. But one snowy day the husband took his gun and started for the woods.

He had been gone two hours when his wife heard his cheery shout. She rushed to the door—he was coming with the carcass of some creature he had slain.

"Meat—meat at last!" he shouted.

"What sort of meat?" she cried.

"Porcupine!"

She sank to the ground in a state of utter collapse. "We can't eat it!" she sobbed over and over again. "Porcupine is dear too!"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

DRY SCALE COVERED HEAD

2760 Tamm Ave., St. Louis, Mo.—"My little daughter's head began with a dry harsh scale covering it. First it got a little scale over the top and then it got a dirty brown scab with pus under it. Her hair came out in less than a week and her head itched and bled. She had no rest. I had her wear a scarf all the time, it hurt so badly. She was so sore and had such a brown scab on her head that the teacher would not let her attend school.

"We took and had her treated for three months with no relief. She kept getting worse until I tried Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I used the Cuticura Soap every third day and the Cuticura Ointment at night. In three weeks her head was well of sores. The cakes of Cuticura Soap and one box of Cuticura Ointment completely cured her." (Signed) Mrs. Walter Rogers, Nov. 28, 1912.

The Thieving Ear of Corn.

Twelve ears of corn will plant an acre. If one of the planted ears happens to be "no good" there is a twelfth of an acre missing. An ear of corn may be worth thirty to forty dollars, so to discover a thieving ear is worth from two and a half to three and a half dollars. One can pick out the ears of poor germination at slight cost, if he will test his corn before he becomes rushed with spring work. And what should he reject the ears that although germinating do not send up strong, vigorous stalks. Least vigorous young things grow surest into profit, whether they be pigs, lambs, colts or cornstalks.—Breeder's Gazette.

HOW TO GET A NEW DRESS

One Method That is Practised is to Jostle the Hotel Waiter's Elbow.

Hotel men in this town have joined forces to discourage the woman who deliberately jostles the waiter so that he spills food on her dress and then claims damages therefor. According to a manager, one New York woman, says the Evening World of that city, visited five hotels on five successive evenings, and in each case caused a bowl of soup to be upset over her gown. Thereafter, politeness will serve as eye or dress and once whether the waiter or the coat does the spilling, it would be the refusal of impecunious young array officers in London that when they hadn't the price of a meal they went to a swagger restaurant and toward the close of an elaborate dinner slipped a cockroach into the ice cream. Then, after a tremendous outcry, they revealed indignantly forth, followed by abject apologies from the proprietor—and, of course, not a bint about paying for the dinner.

Now, if New men descend to such tricks we rarely hear of it. But we are to note the subtrefuge of a New York woman who she needs a new dress.

A Century Ago.

One hundred years ago saw the end of the Chaldian romance which had been endeavoring to settle upon terms of peace between Persia and the nations allied against her. From the beginning of the negotiations little hope had been entertained that any such that an agreement would be reached. Napoleon commenced to give up Venetia, Holland and Spain, to realize the pope of Rome and Ferdinand of Madrid. He agreed to give up Malta to England, as well as most of the colonial possessions he had acquired in alliance for Prussia, Austria, the Rhine and the Alps. The plenipotentiaries, deciding that further discussion would be useless, declared the negotiations at an end and the allied armies prepared to advance on Paris.

INCIDENTS IN THE LIFE OF CHRIST

NE day an angel came to Mary and said: "Fear not Mary, for thou hast found favor with God. Behold thou shalt conceive in thy womb and bring forth a son and shalt call his name Jesus. He shall be great and shall be called the Son of the Highest and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David. He shall reign over the house of Jacob forever." Mary and Joseph went away into a city of Judea, into the city called Bethlehem, because they belonged to the house of David. When the child was born there were many shepherds watching their flocks. When they heard the angels talk they were afraid, and the angel said unto them: "Fear not, for behold I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Savior, which is Christ the Lord." When the shepherds came to the manger they found the babe wrapped in swaddling clothes. There were angels and a multitude of the heavenly host praising God and saying: "Glory be to God in the highest, and on earth peace and good will toward men." The shepherds came to see the Christ and worshipped him. They then made known abroad what they had heard. Then came the men from the East guided by a star which stood over the place the child. They opened their treasures and presented him gifts of gold, frankincense and myrrh. Forty days after Jesus' birth his parents carried him to the temple to present him. There was one Simeon, who had long been expecting the coming of a Savior to the Jews. He took the child up in his arms and exclaimed: "Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace according to thy words: For mine eyes have seen thy salvation."

Jesus and Mary remained but a short time with their parents in Egypt. The death of Herod later recalled them to Palestine. Joseph they returned to their old place of abode, the little town of Nazareth in Galilee. There the child grew in the spirit of the Lord. Injured to Joseph in a dream and said: "Take the young child and his mother and go into the land of Israel: for they are dead which sought the young child." Herod still seeks the young child to destroy him. He grew strong in body and spirit. Tradition says he wore a garment without seams, made of a kind of woven hair of a purplish brown color.

Dr. Cogswell tell us nothing of his occupation as a young man. Tradition relates, and it appears truthfully, that between the whole thirty years before he began his ministry in retirement. John was the first to announce the great work Jesus intended doing. He abandoned the solitude of the desert for the banks of the Jordan. He gathered the people together in boats. He announced that they were to be delivered from sin and bondage, and to prepare for the Messiah's coming.

It was at Bethabara that John the Baptist saw Jesus for the first time, and looking upon him said: "Behold the lamb of God." It was here that the 12 stones were set up, marking the spot where the children of Israel had crossed the Jordan dryshod to enter the promised land. Jesus had come to be baptized, but John refused until he heard Jesus say "Suffer it to be so now, for thus it becomes us to fulfill all righteousness." After Jesus had spoken to the people he was led into the wilderness by the spirit. Here he was tempted for 40 days by the devil. He was an hungered and the devil said unto him, "If thou be the Son of God command that this stone be made bread." And Jesus answered him, saying, "It is written that man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." He next brought him to Jerusalem and set him on a pinnacle of the temple and said unto him: "If thou be the Son of God cast thyself down from hence." Jesus answered, "It is said thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God." Then the devil tempted him a third time, offering Christ the kingdom of this world if he would worship him. The same name, "Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God and him only shalt thou serve."

The temptation is the expression of the period that intervened between Christ's private life and his public ministry. One day Jesus was walking by the sea and he saw two men—Simon, called Peter, and Andrew his brother, casting their net in the sea. And he said unto them: "Follow me and I will make you fishers of men." They straightway left their nets and followed him. He looked on farther, when he came upon James, the son of Zebedee, and John, his brother, who were also in the ship mending their nets. He straightway called them and they left their father in the ship and followed him. Nathaniel was more doubtful of Christ. Philip's epithet put out one day Jesus saith unto him: "Verily verily I say unto you hereafter ye shall see heaven open and the angels of God ascending and descending upon the Son of Man." And Christ went from place to place until he had found Philip, and said to he another: "Follow me." He began to give food to the hungry, sight to the blind, health to the sick and comfort to aching hearts. Among the most illustrious of his miracles was when he contributed his assistance to go on board the boat and cross across the lake to Capernaum. Then he sent away the great crowd of people to their were still eager that he should be their king. When they were all gone and he was left alone he went up into the mountain to pray. While he was praying in the night a great storm came up on the lake. When the storm was at its height Jesus went to his disciples walking on the water as though the sea were dry land. Then the men in the boat saw a strange figure coming near them and Jesus called out to them: "Be of good cheer; it is I, be not afraid." After Jesus had performed many miracles the people asked him to do them things to satisfy their curiosity. When he refused them they became angry and left him. Finally, Jesus gathered to his 12 apostles and asked: "Will ye also go away and leave me?" But Simon Peter answered him: "Lord, to whom shall we go? Thou only hast the words of everlasting life." One day, on entering the temple, he saw that the money-changers and brokers were making everything subservient to their avarice. His anger rose so high that he made unto them a scourge of small cords, drove them out and said to them: "Take these things hence; make not my Father's house an house of merchandise." After he left Jerusalem he went directly to Anion, near Salem, which was the home of John the Baptist's labors. Here he spent most of his time from the Passover to the late harvest. He stayed to instruct his disciples more thoroughly in his teaching.

He did not go back to Jerusalem until the feast of the Passover. It was then he healed a man who had been lame for 38 years. It was then that he told them that the bread which he was about to give them was to be the sacrifice of the bodily life for the salvation of mankind. Soon after Jesus left Bethabara with his disciples and came to Bethany. There he found a man named Lazarus dead. He raised him from the dead. It is said that in Montana the grass begins to fail as early as the first of July, and after that there is sufficient to sustain life after that period, it has not the fattening qualities necessary to prepare sheep for the market. As a result, stockmen are obliged to sell spring lambs or ewes they are in their proper growth. In the upper peninsula pasture is at its best in July, just at the time it is beginning to fail in the western states. The climate and soil in upper Michigan are both conducive to rapid vegetation and the night dews make up for any dearth of rain during the dryest summers ever experienced.

CAMPAIGN FOR HIGH-CLASS SETTLERS

By H. J. DANIELS.

Our state of Michigan is at this time entering upon plans and arrangements for doing more intelligent work than has ever been done before in the state in the way of inviting and aiding the better classes of immigrants from Europe to become broad winners and citizens of Michigan.

Two interesting and important facts in this connection have recently been called to the attention of readers. The first is that while it is true that many of the men who come to the United States from other countries were engaged in farm work or in other related occupations before they came to America, yet most of them when they come here take up their residence in cities and in the larger industrial centers. The second matter of important consideration is that many of these men can be directed to farms and farm work and are being so directed by the Canadian government. This country, therefore, and our state of Michigan, has a very good example to take note of and a practical precedent to follow.

During the year 1912 there entered the United States 387,495 alien men who had been either farmers or farm laborers in the old world, according to one writer. Only 3 per cent of these men went to work on farms here. The rest crowded into our already overcrowded cities. They did not go on farms, where labor is greatly needed and where wages on the whole average up as good as in industry, because the possibilities in agriculture have been crowded out of their vision. The government does not take the initiative in telling the immigrant about the opportunities on the farm. The alien's advisers in the industrial centers, the foreign banker, labor agents, saloonkeepers, on the other hand distinctly discourage the alien to stay in the cities where he is a source of revenue to them. Different from the attitude of the United States toward the alien is that of Canada toward the land seeker for immigrants. The Canadian government has agents abroad for that purpose. It requires the alien to go to a definite destination. He is even escorted to his new domicile. The initiative which the Canadian government takes in placing the immigrant on the land, instead of allowing him to herd in the cities adds immensely to the wealth of the Dominion. Our immigration, on the other hand, adds largely to the problem of the country by crowding in our slums and adding to our already too large army of criminals, paupers and insane.

SHEEP FOR CHIPPEWA.

Through the efforts of J. A. Jeffrey, land commissioner of the Duluth, South Shore & Atlantic railway, Montana sheep men have become interested in Chippewa county, in the upper peninsula, as a favorable locaion for several large sheep ranches. He is confident that one summer's experience will convince the western men that sheep can be fed profitably and fattened for market on cutover lands. He is now getting in touch with owners of large tracts suitable for this purpose. It is not expected that any of the land will be purchased outright at the start, but if satisfactory arrangements can be made for leasing the first season and the experiment is a success, a number of western stockmen will be anxious to buy the land. The demonstration would prove to stockraisers that cattle and hogs can also be raised and fattened for market, with finer finish and flavor than can be produced in the warmer countries.

Mr. Jeffrey learning that certain Montana sheep raisers were dissatisfied with the short grazing period of that country, got in touch with them.

SOON WILL BE UNUSUAL SCENE IN MICHIGAN

Scenes like that in the accompanying picture will in a comparatively few years be unusual in the northern part of the lower peninsula. Rarely does one see even a lone pine tree in a forest and the hardwood and hemlock are fast disappearing. In all the northern part of the lower peninsula there are scarcely more than half a dozen large tracts of standing timber today, and in 20 years there will be enough timber left to make use for more than the dinky portable mills. All the big tracts will then have fallen under the ax, and long before that time most of the lumber companies will have completed their cuts.

The old time lumberjacks have all gone to other lumbering states. Many of them have taken up the study of the insect, and pupils were instructed to find as many egg masses as possible, bring these to school, count and burn the masses and finally report the result to the county school commissioner. It is believed that in this way millions of eggs were destroyed, as the forest and orchard pests of northwestern Michigan contained hundreds of thousands of the egg masses. There were thousands of trees that had from one to five masses on each limb. An egg mass is made up of many hundreds of eggs. It is easy to figure that the caterpillar population next season would be several times that of the United States if nothing were done to destroy the eggs.

The campaign was the suggestion of Prof. Myron A. Cobb of the agricultural department of the Central Michigan State Normal college. He made a trip over the counties in the northwestern corner of the lower peninsula of the state late in the fall and noticed the war number of egg masses. Realizing that something should be done before the warm weather of spring should cause the eggs to hatch he conceived the idea of a campaign on the part of the teachers and pupils of the rural schools. A number of the county school commissioners came to hear the campaign along by the sending out of circulars and the taking of reports.

This is the first time that a campaign of this kind has ever been worked through the rural schools. The results will be carefully noted and if satisfactory other campaigns will be planned for the advancement of agricultural and horticultural interests of this section of the state. In fact there is no reason why many of the common enemies of the people can be fought from house to house with the assistance of the school children.

Celery Grown by B. W. McIntosh.

That Kalamazoo has no "corner" on the celery growing in Michigan is proven by the great success that has attended the efforts along that line of B. W. McIntosh of Deer Lake, Manistee county. He found that by starting some swamp land he had as good a piece of soil for celery growing as any land in Kalamazoo county. It is even claimed for the Deer Lake celery that it goes onto the market whiter than does the Kalamazoo brand. Since it has become known that Mr. McIntosh has proved that the northern soil produces such a good article of celery other men have commenced getting ready for a similar venture. This coming season will see G. A. Brigham of Buckley, Wexford county, draining a large acreage of swamp land which he will put into celery and peppermint, experiments on his land proving that the soil is well adapted to celery growing. The acreage of this plant is now limited by demand for celery and by the distance from the city it can be shipped. This grand old seaffoul will be left to future generations, and can very truly be called "The Lonesome Pine."

"THE LONESOME PINE."

A. V. Gregg, lumberman and wood scaler for Henry Ricardi at Hillsdale, in Antrim county, with his crew of "Swamp angels" have completed cutting off a tract of timber near that village. One grand old monarch of the forest has been spared, a large pine tree standing near the mouth of the river where it empties into Crass lake. This noble old pine has long been used as a landmark by lumber owners and boatmen as a guide to the entrance to the river and dark cliffs. This grand old seaffoul will be left to future generations, and can very truly be called "The Lonesome Pine."

BANNER YEAR FOR ALFALFA.

The prediction that the acreage of alfalfa would see a much greater acreage of alfalfa on Michigan farms that year before, was surpassing the good record of 1913, is made by R. J. Baldwin, superintendent of agricultural extension at the Michigan Agricultural College at Lansing. He says alfalfa growing in Michigan is now past the experimental stage and should hereafter cease to be regarded practically as an economic proposition.

The season of 1913 marked another great increase in the amount of land devoted to growing of alfalfa. The reports from farmers throughout the state testeeu a high degree of satisfaction with the crop, and judging from the increasing demand for information regarding its culture which has been received at the college, there is to be even a greater venture in alfalfa the year 1914.

The experiment station has sent out bulletins on alfalfa growing, and the extension service has organized 141 alfalfa clubs, with a combined membership of over 3,000 members. Reports from farmers throughout the state testeeu a high degree of satisfaction with the crop, and judging from the increasing demand for information regarding its culture which has been received at the college, there is to be even a greater venture in alfalfa the year 1914.

SCHOOLS DO GOOD WORK

Nine agricultural extension schools have been held in northern and western Michigan during the present winter. Years ago at Hart, Manistee, Caledonia, Hopkins City, Fremont, Beulah Northport, Antrim City and Traverse City. These schools are a new idea in agricultural education. The state agricultural college sent out colleges men, who stayed a week in each place and held regular sessions morning and afternoon, taking up one or two subjects and considering them in a comprehensive manner. The attendance at these sessions was not large, but the results were surprising. They have been more educational than inspirational, and likewise more practical than has been the case in the past. It seems certain the extension work will grow with each year, and eventually put the farmers' institute out of business. It was found in these schools that the farmers want to know everything they likes to follow one subject long enough to secure a thorough understanding of it. Single lectures are good as far as they go, but they are not like a full week's study of one subject.

HARRY L. OLDHAM

Business Associates and Subordinates Signify Their Regard for Departing Citizen

Inventor Hill Review

Harry L. Oldham for nineteen years manager of the Orlando Powers block, has resigned his position. He has sold his stock in the Oldham & Stadler company (incorporated) in Charlevoix, Powers, and the firm, which now consists of C. G. Powers, C. A. Stadler and Robert Hill, will take the management of the Powers building.

Mr. Oldham will remain in Decatur for about two weeks. If no that time his mother's health will permit Mr. and Mrs. Oldham will take her back to the old home in England. He has not been good for the past year or seven years. Should she not feel able in a few weeks to make the trip across the water they will all go to Charlevoix, Mich., to remain until she feels well enough to stand the trip.

Mr. Oldham has not decided definitely where he will locate. He has many excellent positions offered him, both in England and America, but he will not present his position definitely one way no matter where he may locate.

The resignation of Mr. Oldham has been known to the tenants and employees of the Powers building for several days, and Saturday evening at 5 o'clock they gave him the surprise of his life. During his temporary absence they all gathered in his office, and when he came in Attorney James T. Weibley, on behalf of the heirs of the Orlando Powers estate, the tenants and employes of the building, presented him with a handsome Christmas gold watch and fob, upon which was engraved the following:

"Presented to Harry L. Oldham by tenants and employes of the building, as a token of their esteem and appreciation of his courtesy and kindness, 1913."

Mr. Oldham has taken a prominent part in the social and business life of Decatur. He is considered one of the best insurance men in this part of the country. He has made some of the biggest real estate sales in Decatur, and as a building manager has few equals. The management of the Powers building has been written up in several building journals as a model. His ideas have always been right up to the minute, and he was the first to install the enunciator electric signals ever in Decatur.

Esther Welker substituted an hour last Friday morning in the south ward school for Miss Mary Finucan.

Miss Hazel Gilmartin, a member of the class of 1914 visited the normal room Wednesday afternoon.

Commissioner J. H. Mifford called at the normal room last Wednesday. He gave a very interesting and beneficial talk to the class.

Mr. W. P. Dunlap visited the normal room Wednesday afternoon. He talked to the students about the truancy law which governs the several districts in the county.

Traverse City Record: The star witness for the prosecution, Anderson by name, who was hailed for the express scoring part in the case against Sheriff G. Allen Smith, under arrest on a warrant charged out some time ago by Constable Reuben Finch, charging him with slandering Prosecuting Attorney George G. Covell, failed to materialize for appearance in yesterday's session, and upon motion of the attorney for the complainant the case was adjourned until Tuesday morning at ten o'clock. In the meantime a summons will be served upon the derelict witness, so as to assure his presence at the trial. After the jury had listened to the general action of the proceedings had supposedly commenced yesterday afternoon there was a decided disappointment felt by the large audience at the court house. The trial was moved from Justice Birdsall's office to the court house, because of the interest manifested and the fact of certain promised sensations failed to answer to their call.

Visions

We stand on the bluff looking out over the turbulent lake. Away to the northwest Big Beaver is silhouetted against the sky line, to the west "Old Foxes" dot the horizon. And then the vision.

Hours ago, on the north side of the river, Perry Bockwith and Gus Munson are unloading the "propeller wood" to the bank, alongside the tramway, existing out into the lake in the old Fox & Co. dock, and at the shore end "Newt" Balch drives the old horse, business which is the wood-lands car. We hear his voice as he urges the beast to greater effort.

It is Friday afternoon and the sun will down in the west. Away off to the north, rounding "the shanty," we see smoke. It is the Pilot from Duluth, and the shore crew is active for the mooring. We can see the outlines of the steamer's arches, and we see Capt. Penny climbing up the shoreward arch. She squares away for the dock, and soon Jack Ingalls has her line fast to the snubbing-pile.

First mate Pat Clark jumps to the dock, and we can soon hear him swear at the Indians as they man the tackle. Then we see Mr. Fox and Capt. Penny walking ashore, Mr. Fox in his shirt-sleeves. A good-social time following until the male blows the whistle, and then away for Chicago. Then, with a jerk, back we come to the present, with the vision still printed on the tablets of memory.

Again we stand on the bluff. A speck appears in the northwest. "Ah, wish-to-whoo" is wafted to us on the balmy breeze, it is the Modoc, Capt. Condon, with the only oscillating high pressure engines on the lakes. Condon—the gentleman skipper, always dressed fit for a ball or a reception. Then, perhaps, before this vision passes, the white hull of the Oneida rounds the point from Chicago. She takes the north side of the dock, and Capt. Jerome Drake, high-hipped lanky and stovepipe hat, jumps to the dock and has a row with Jack Ingalls about the big chunks got on at the last wooding. They are thrown to the dock, and Jack tucks them over to the next wooding of the Fountain City. Capt. Gibson's mate rejects them, and they are measured up in the next wooding of the Empire State.

Again we stand on the bluff in front the westward come the Dean Richmond, from Chicago and Milwaukee. Soon we see that craft come up the dock with a bundle of newspapers under his arm. They are for the SENTINEL editor, and we see the boy meet the skipper at the south end of the dock. Then we see the boy publisher proceed to the boat and return with a big one of luscious beefsteak from the Richmond's ice-box, and the compliments of the steward. Then, as the curtain falls and shuts out this vision, we cast our eyes eastward, to see "Capt." Ed. Tomlinson, with the tug Comanche, out, coming through the old dock which is now used by tugs, tows and scows; and we hear his hail English as he swears at the engineer. As the vision is dimmed into obscurity nothing, nothing, another vision. It is Uncle Dick Cooper, sitting on the porch of the old Fourth City House, dozing in the sunshine, and we hear his hail English as he swears at the engineer. As the vision is dimmed into obscurity nothing, another vision. BULLARD POWER PLANT

Supreme Court Hands Down Decision Confirming Order of Circuit Court

In the supreme court on the 9th a decision was handed down in the case of Broakway vs. Hydraulic power and Light Co., denying motion to file bill of exceptions.

This refers to the Richard Bellaire case, in which a writ was brought to compel Richard to lower 5am thirty-two inches. The decision means that the dam must be lowered accordingly.

This will be a very expensive job for Mr. Hibbard, and may cause some embarrassment to Charlevoix, as the city light and power comes from the Bellaire plant.

A Drawing Attraction

Manager Miles of the Majestic promises us a very interesting program for Wednesday and Thursday this week. He has secured the four reel feature "Satan" which will be lectured throughout. "Satan" is a production of the Ambrosia Film Co., and is a masterpiece of art.

Part one is taken from Milton's "Paradise Lost" showing the fall of Satan from Heaven and the power he gained on earth.

Part two is taken from "The Messiah" by Gospiek, showing a part of the life of Christ and the attempt of Satan to overthrow him.

Part three is later in history, using Alobelsall as the basis of the subject.

Part four is the present time using good, but crazy and hate woven into a story in which satan used three tools to overcome the truth.

We cannot speak too highly of these pictures as they are creating a very wide interest.

The price of admission for this wonderful program is the same as ever 10c 15c. We assure you that you will be well pleased if you go to see it.

UNDERWOOD WINS

LEADER OF DEMOCRATS IN HOUSE NOMINATED U. S. SENATOR FROM ALABAMA.

"DRYS" WIN IN MICHIGAN

Ingham, in Which Is Located the State Capital, Votes Against the Saloons —One Switchtoe to "Wet" Line—Results of Municipal Elections.

Birmingham, Ala., April 7.—Oscar W. Underwood, majority leader of the house of representatives at Washington, was nominated over Hobart F. Pearson Hobson by a substantial majority. Underwood's campaign manager said his lead was about twenty thousand.

The weather throughout the state was ideal for the primaries and indications were that the total vote would be the largest in years. While several personal encounters at the polls were reported none was of a serious nature.

Former Governor B. B. Comer led by three other candidates in the gubernatorial contest. Charles Henderson of Pike county was trailing in 50 Polls of Montgomery was third.

John W. Abercrombie, representative from the state at large, and Representative J. T. Heflin from the Fifth district were unopposed.

Washington, April 7.—There was general regret here today at the news all parties in Washington on Monday night when the news came that Representative Underwood had been defeated in his contest for the Alabama senatorship with Representative Hobson.

Detroit, Mich., April 8.—Returns from the 18 counties in Michigan that voted on Monday on the local option question show that the "drys" in the winning of Ingham county, in which is situated the state capital, elected The wets won over one of the other counties and lost one to the abstinence forces. Ingham county, which has been wet, went dry by more than seven hundred votes.

The county situation follows: Clare went from dry to wet; Roscommon and Ionia went from wet to dry; Midland, Kalkaska, Mecosta, Ionia, Shiawassee and Wexford remained dry, the latter two by small majorities. Oceola, Montmorency and Saginaw went over to the dry. Arenac and Dickinson remained wet.

The principal counties voting on the question were Ingham, Shiawassee and Wexford. In case Oceola voted for prohibition, Montmorency, as the result of the election, has 24 dry counties and 4 counties are wet. The best known counties which chose to remain in the dry column and on by smaller majorities than two years ago.

MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS IS DEAD

President of W. C. T. U. Held Office Since 1898 and Worked Until Last.

Portland, Me., April 8.—Mrs. Lillian M. N. Stevens, president of the National Woman's Christian Temperance union, died here on Monday. She had been ill for several weeks with kidney trouble. It is expected that Miss Anna A. Gordon of Evanston, Ill., vice-president at large, will succeed Mrs. Stevens. Mrs. Stevens, who was born at Perry, Me., 64 years ago, continued to the last the temperance work to which she has been devoted ever since 1883, when Mrs. Stevens succeeded the late Frances E. Willard in the office of president of the W. C. T. U. in 1898. She first came into prominence in the movement when she participated in the organization of the Maine W. C. T. U. at Old Orchard. At that time she made her first public speech, and from time to time she threw her whole heart into the work.

Washington, April 8.—The Gaillinge bill to prevent railroads from limiting their liability on freight shipments, was favorably reported by the senate committee on interstate commerce on Monday.

DEPORTS SPANIARDS

VILLA PUTS THEM ABOARD TRAIN FOR EL PASO.

Dead Choke Streets of Torreon Where Rebel Leader's Men Swept Over Plunder.

Torreon, Mex., April 7.—Gen. Francisco Villa, declared that the 600 Spaniards of this city be deported. He issued instructions Sunday that trains be provided at once and that the exodus to El Paso, Tex., begin. The Spaniards' property will be confiscated, temporarily at least.

Juarez, Mex., April 6.—Torreon is completely in the hands of the rebel army under General Villa. It is a city of ruins and horror. The buildings have been wrecked by shells and fire and the streets are full of dead.

After securing control of the city on Thursday the rebel soldiers were given the freedom of absolute license. Many were raving maniacs from their long visit on the firing lines, loss of sleep and the continuous battle.

Saloons were broken open and look and a measure of Federal prisoners are followed. In brawls over loot, many rebels were shot to their companions. Many of the rebel troops were so exhausted that they fell across the bodies of the dead and slept soundly for hours.

General Villa, without giving his men time to rest after taking the city of twelve days' battle, ordered an immediate advance on Saltillo and Monterey, two of the few important towns in northern Mexico still held by the federals.

HELD ON FARCEL POST THEFT

Substitution Clerk, Street Car Conductor and Carpenter Are Arrested by Officials.

Buffalo, April 6.—Thefts of parcel post packages valued at $2,000 were discovered after the arrest of a substitute clerk here, and the proprietor of a large ready-to-wear store, which was the principal loser, claims their loss during the last year will reach $10,000. The men under arrest are Paul Milne, twenty-eight years old, employed at a post office substation, Joel Wilmes, twenty-four years old, a street-car conductor, and Edward Lorentzen, forty-three years old, a carpenter. Murder, the police state, admits the theft of watches and other jewelry would

HUGE CHICAGO VOTE

SUFFRAGISTS FAIL TO ELECT MEMBERS OF OWN SEX TO CITY COUNCIL.

SUBWAY PLAN IS DEFEATED

315,000 Men and 185,000 Women Cast Ballots—"Drys" Victors in Many Illinois Cities—Results Elsewhere.

Chicago, April 7.—The thousands of newly enfranchised women who went to the polls on Tuesday exploded all theories on the woman in politics. They voted on partisan lines, helping to defeat eight out of nine independent candidates failing to elect a single one of the nine candidates of their own sex and returning a Democratic majority to the city council.

The tremendous interest which women had taken in the aldermanic campaign failed to show a single final result in which women had turned the tide of sentiment expressed by the vote of the men.

An estimate places the total vote cast at 500,000—315,000 men and 185,000 women. The number of presses was voted on the "little ballot proposition is much smaller.

The failure of women to support women candidates was one of the surprises of the election. Marion H. Drake was defeated by Alderman John J. Coughlin in the ward represented by his father.

Mayor Harrison's comprehensive plan of a proposition which had been place on the little ballot, met with an overwhelming defeat. The "comprehensive subway scheme had been made a campaign issue with that faction, and was lost by 100,000 votes.

The women in particular voted against the proposition. Of the "wets carried Springfield, the capital of the state, which forbidden by a vote of 2,500 to 1,500 votes, Rockford, 3,500, and in this instance both men and women voted the "wet" ticket.

Dixon, Aurora and Sterling are also in the "wet" column.

The "drys" in many was a sweeping victory for the Anti-Saloon league. The women's vote has been the decisive factor in many instances. Over 100 cities and towns in the state, about that where a majority of the men voted for saloons, the women voted against them. Bloomington voted "dry."

All over the state the fight was seen and bitter. Intense interest was shown everywhere.

In Aurora the contest brought out the biggest vote ever cast in that city, and out of a total vote of 7,000 women cast their ballots.

Paterson, N. J., April 9.—Dow H. Drukker, Republican, was elected to congress from the Seventh New Jersey district on Tuesday to succeed the late Representative Bremner, a Democrat. His plurality over James J. O'Byrne, who had the backing of the Wilson administration, was over five thousand. O'Byrne ran about 187 votes ahead of the socialist candidate.

The returns follow: Dow H. Drukker (Rep.), 19,620; James J. O'Byrne (Dem.), 14,340; Gordon Bennet (Soc.), 5,653; Whitehead (Prog.), 661.

The total vote polled was remarkably large for a special election. Out of a registration of 37,000, over twenty-one thousand votes were cast.

Boston, April 9.—James A. Gallivan, Democrat, was elected to congress on Tuesday from the Twelfth district. He is opposed to the repeal of the free tolls clause of the Panama canal act.

Milwaukee, April 9.—Mayor Gerhard A. Bading, who two years ago was recalled from office through a fusion of the old parties drove Socialist out of office in Milwaukee, was relected on Tuesday on a non-partisan ticket by a majority of 5,000. This majority assures the election of the entire non-partisan ticket.

In the bitterness against Socialism the two principal opponents, Bading were carried out of office, and also the holdover city attorney named by the Socialist election.

Topeka, Kan., April 5.—Women cast a heavy vote in the election throughout Kansas. In many places women served as election officials.

At Hutchinson, Dr. F. W. Cook was elected mayor. Recently a revival was held in Hutchinson and more than four thousand converts were made. The churches then became active in politics. Both Doctor Cook and Lincoln S. Davis, his opponent, were pledged to clean up the town.

Montreal, April 8.—Returns from 18 wards of the city, with only 13 polls to be heard from, indicate that Modeste Mitotte, a member of the Canadian parliament, has been elected mayor by a majority of about 5,000.

BRITISH ARMY IN TURMOIL OVER ULSTER

Wholesale resignations among officers of the British army, who refuse to fight in the event of civil war in Ulster threaten to throw the army into an upheaval as great as that which threatens the cabinet. Col. J. E. B. Seely, secretary of war (left), resigned when the government repudiated his guaranty that force would not be used against the Ulster men. Lieut. Col. Arthur P. Ryan (center), commander of the Ninth lancers, resigned rather than fight against Ulster. Field Marshal Sir John French (right), chief of the general staff, has resigned because of the repudiation of the guaranty.

TRAIN GOES IN RIVER

SPAN ON WABASH ROAD COLLAPSES IN INDIANA—THREE KILLED AND 50 HURT.

CREW VICTIMS OF CRASH

Passengers Saved From Death by Breaking of Coupling—Engine and Three Cars Plunge Off Structure—One Wreck Was Just Cleared Away.

Attica, Ind., April 7.—The Wabash river bridge collapsed on Sunday and buried the Continental Limited train of the Wabash system into the ditch and partly into the river. Three persons were killed, another hurt and 50 others less seriously hurt.

Wrecking crews had just cleared away the debris caused by a wreck earlier in the day. Apparently the supports of the bridge had been weakened by the other wreck under the engine crumpled.

The dead are: Tim Hull, engineer, Peru, Ind., married; Jacob Miller, fireman, Peru, Ind., married; J. A. Thomas, express messenger, Huntington, Ind.

The mailing, tender and three coaches plunged through the wreck and all were scalded.

Fairmont, Ind., April 9.—Dow H. Drukker, Republican, was elected to congress from the Seventh New Jersey district on Tuesday to succeed the late Representative Bremner, a Democrat. His plurality over James J. O'Byrne, who had the backing of the Wilson administration, was over five thousand. O'Byrne ran about 187 votes ahead of the socialist candidate.

The returns follow: Dow H. Drukker (Rep.), 19,620; James J. O'Byrne (Dem.), 14,340; Gordon Bennet (Soc.), 5,653; Whitehead (Prog.), 661.

The total vote polled was remarkably large for a special election. Out of a registration of 37,000, over twenty-one thousand votes were cast.

Boston, April 9.—James A. Gallivan, Democrat, was elected to congress on Tuesday from the Twelfth district. He is opposed to the repeal of the free tolls clause of the Panama canal act.

Milwaukee, April 9.—Mayor Gerhard A. Bading, who two years ago was recalled from office through a fusion of the old parties drove Socialists out of office in Milwaukee, was relected on Tuesday on a non-partisan ticket by a majority of 5,000. This majority assures the election of the entire non-partisan ticket.

In the bitterness against Socialism the two principal opponents, Bading were carried out of office, and also the holdover city attorney named by the Socialist election.

Topeka, Kan., April 5.—Women cast a heavy vote in the election throughout Kansas. In many places women served as election officials.

At Hutchinson, Dr. F. W. Cook was elected mayor. Recently a revival was held in Hutchinson and more than four thousand converts were made. The churches then became active in politics. Both Doctor Cook and Lincoln S. Davis, his opponent, were pledged to clean up the town.

Montreal, April 8.—Returns from 18 wards of the city, with only 13 polls to be heard from, indicate that Modeste Mitotte, a member of the Canadian parliament, has been elected mayor by a majority of about 5,000.

Forty Perished in Chicago Bore.

Chicago, April 9.—Forty passengers on a Rogers Park car, going through the Lincoln street tunnel under the river, were frightened when a 36-inch water main burst behind them. The passengers walked out of the tunnel.

Two Bank Robbers Slain.

New Haslett, N. C., April 9.—Two bandits were killed here in a battle with a posse of citizens, following the holding up of the Union Bank of Canebreek. Six men held up the bank and four got away with $7,100 cash.

Police Official Kills Rival.

Paris, France, April 9.—M. Delcroix, an inspector of police, shot and killed inspector Dupin at headquarters. Delcroix obtained evidence that Dupin was alienating the affections of Mme. Delcroix.

Winter Wheat on Upgrade.

Washington, April 7.—The department of agriculture estimated that the average condition of winter wheat on April 1 was 77.8 per cent of a normal, against 71.6 on April 1, 1915, and on April 1, 1912, and 86.7.

ELECTION HELD IN 12 COUNTIES

Drys of Michigan Are Victorious in Fight.

WETS DEFEATED IN INGHAM

Arenac Goes Wet by a Majority of 119 Votes—Mitchell Is Elected Governor, Remains Arid by an Increased Majority.

Lansing.—Although the local option election in 12 counties resulted in the loss of two counties to each of the contending factions it is the "drys" who are rejoicing at the result of the ballotting.

John Barleycorn lost out in the state capital.

In Ingham county, which in 1913 voted "wet" by 6,632 to 6,176, a majority of 456, flopped into the arid column by more than 700.

This came near being offset by the result in Shiawassee, which was in doubt for hours. With only one precinct missing the "drys" claimed a majority of four and later with all in they were credited with a lead of six. There will probably be a recount. Shiawassee went "dry" in 1912 by 500.

The "drys" authorized two reversals—one in Clare county, which recently voted to fallbrook local option "wet" by more than 171, and the other in Osceola, which went "wet" by 116. Clare went "dry" by 138, in 1912 and Osceola "dry" by 59 in 1910.

In addition to Ingham the "wets" lost Roscommon, "wet" in 1912 by 56, "dry" now by 9.

The other counties voting lined up as follows: Wexford, "dry," by 25; Midland, the home of the governor, "dry," increased majority; Mecosta, "dry," increased majority; Kalkaska, "dry," increased majority; Arenac, "wet," decreased majority; Ogemaw, "wet."

Arenac county went "wet" by a majority of 119, according to the reports which are regarded authentic. The majority last year was 143. Standish elected Joseph A. Mitchell, a Republican mayor. Republicans were also successful in the election of Mayors C. H. Rossman at Linear and William Shaw at Au Gres.

Local option has apparently lost in Ionia county. In unofficial returns "dry" 115 votes and "wet" 231, a "wet" majority of 116. In 1910 the vote was "dry" 305, "wet" 154, a dry majority of 151.

With but three townships yet to hear from, Roscommon county voted "dry" by 50. Indications are that the county will go "dry" by a large majority. The village of Roscommon gave the "dry" 16 majority. Two large townships had a tie vote. The county in 1912 voted "wet" 318, "dry" 259.

Ingham county went back into the dry column.

Returns from the 18 of Lansing settled it, and the "dry" were 723 votes ahead, with almost all of the returns in.

With but two district in the city missing and five of the twenty-second precinct, the "dry" 6,879, "wet" 6,257.

Lansing, April 7.—Fifty-five per cent of the total vote in the city was cast in the local option election held here Monday, according to the official canvass made by the city clerk.

The vote in the city was 6,257 for the "wets" and 6,879 for the "drys" in the city, and 723 for the "drys" in the county, making a total of 13,136 votes cast.

The "drys" are apparently victorious in Ionia county. In precinct three many of the "drys" were in the majority. In 1911 the "drys" won by 248.

BALK AT RULE OF SECRECY

La Follette and Eight Associates in Senate to Defy Regulations Concerning Publicity.

Washington, April 6.—Nine members of the committee appointed by Senator La Follette, openly revolted against proceedings behind closed doors on Friday after an executive session in which the senate by a vote of 16 to 2 adopted a resolution offered by Senator M. Daniels of New Jersey to be a member of the interstate commerce commission. Senator La Follette declared on the floor that he proposed to defy the rules of the senate in future and discuss publicly legislation not affecting foreign relations and later it was announced that Senators Ridelnor, Gronna, Clapp, Kenyon, Norris, Jones and Gronna, Republicans, and Robertson, Progressive, would maintain the same attitude.

DOUGHERTY IS FOUND GUILTY

Former Banker and Educator of Illinois Convicted of Forgery—Served One Term in Penitentiary.

Peoria, Ill., April 7.—Newton C. Dougherty, former banker and school board head, was found guilty of forgery on Saturday. Dougherty was tried on charges not included in an indictment returned against him several years ago, which he was convicted and spent a term in the penitentiary. The jury in the present trial was out over three hours.

Rescued Sailors in Port.

Philadelphia, April 7.—Four survivors of the crew of the schooner Hunter were rescued by the steamship Dunbar from a life boat off the coast of Delaware. The schooner went down in a gale.

$180,000 Fire in Birmingham.

Birmingham, Ala., April 7.—Fire in the retail district did damage estimated at $180,000, destroying the store of the Acme Grocery and Color works at 2015 Second avenue and damaging two other stores.

Board of Trade Head Found Dead.

Arlington, N. J., April 6.—Adolph Amann, president of the Arlington board of trade, was found dead with a bullet hole in his head and a revolver beside him. Apparently it was a case of suicide.

Baltimore, Md., April 6.—William Separd Bryan, formerly attorney general of Maryland, political orator, and leading tobacco of Baltimore died this evening.

SPRING FEVER IS HEALTHY

It Indicates Fresh Hopes and Renewed Buoyancy of Spirit.

How wonderfully that the spring weather has contributed to the community's pride one!

Spring fever, with all of its healthfulness, is the harbinger of fresh hopes and a buoyancy of spirit.

It noticed a passenger on a Detroit-Chicago train the other day who had started out on his trip with the evident intention of becoming deeply taken with one of the best sellers, that he might shorten the trip between the two cities. You have done the same thing yourself.

But his book had been cast aside. He had read only a few pages. His interest in it had lagged.

From the car windows he was could the fields and farms of Michigan. The fitches were carrying away the water and the other was chagrined crops were now streams bearing the overflow to the ocean. The farmer in his shirt sleeves, was repairing the fences after the winter drifts, the cattle showing proof of a winter's stalling and now heading here and there toward the meadows, the sheep nibbling from patches of grass, the farm hogs, in field and meadow, the farmer was repair this and that that necessary fixtures, here looking after his plow and there his harrow and on all sides were scenes which reminded the traveler that spring had come at last.

As the train sped onward and glimpses of the painter as he worked on the remaining outbuildings were revealed, the interest of the tourist was aroused and, when I asked him the reason, he answered: "Spring is here and I'm out of my winter's lethargy. Look at that barn—I'm going one season and one out two years. Mr. Tuff believes it is a waste of time and money to set out any kind of apples except those that will help build up a market for the "peasant" apples, he says, are not worth while, and he pays much care as these are of more permanent value. "We can grow good apples around Vanderbilt," he says. "Apples that have a good flavor and that will shine well in any mark. That is the kind of fruit we ought to produce (and some are producing) if we are going to succeed in the apple business. Michigan must pay more attention to the picking and packing of the fruit of the business. If we followed the methods of Oregon and Washington we could beat those fellows in their own markets. We cannot dump apples into barrels and pick them and expect them to compete with the coast growers. Careful selection of varieties, careful spraying of the trees, careful picking of the fruit, and just so careful wrapping and packing of the apples will bring just as fine returns in Michigan as the reddest apples any Oregonian ever saw in his best orchard. All this carefulness will bring greater rewards."

YUMA IS LOOKING UP.

Yuma, a little village northeast of Manistee, is going to the front. It is under much different conditions, however, than when the lumberjacks gave the town its name. It is one of the broken village. Long since the millions of feet of pine have disappeared down the Manistee river to the mills in Manistee. Many years have passed since the hum of the saws ceased to accompany the thud of the woodsmen at it in Michigan's forests passed before them, and in the place

Road Building in Emmet County.

Emmet county is one of the oldest of the northern Michigan counties, but road building has not been Emmet's long suit when it came to the last few years. Known for a quarter of a century, and rightly, as the county wherein Petoskey, most popular of all northern resorts, is located, Emmet county is celebrated for its many pretty resorts and fine farms—but not for good roads. The tourist complaints in recent years for state-toward roads, have caused the county to miss the new famous west Michigan pike, has put Emmet county on the map in the half-

CAMPAIGN IS A SUCCESS.

Thanks to the campaign waged against the tent caterpillar this winter through the efforts of field agitation lists and commissioners of schools in northern Michigan, apple trees in all western and northern Michigan in the coming year will be in far better condition than though the matter were left wholly to the farmers who own the trees where the commissioners and thousands of school children appeared. Half a dozen counties have made the gathering of tent caterpillar egg masses a business, being rewarded with prizes for the greatest number sent, has been tens of thousands of nests destroyed, each one of which contains from two hundred and fifty to three hundred eggs, and each egg means a wormless apple next year.

Throughout Michigan last summer and autumn extensive campaigns were conducted under the auspices of the agricultural college and county agricultural clubs, with the result that the coming season will see many more acres of the trees free from the pest. The campaign against the tent caterpillar has taken better in northern and western Michigan than in the parts of the state, and the expectation is that the result will be that in a few years the sale of such sections will be much improved land where apples can be raised and sold land to build up the soil. The light soil about Cadillac is proving especially adapted to the growth of apples. A member of the vetch family which draws down the sustenance of the air and fixes it in the soil. Nitrogen that is good for it. In Wexford county, a large acreage is added each year, all of it is in the county in one of the leading farm products. The greatest interest in the growing of alfalfa is in that county by owners of timber tracts which have gone out over. The experiment conducted on a large scale proved a great success, and today a number of the prominent farmers own considerable tracts of as fine stands of alfalfa as can be found anywhere in this country, where three cuttings a year are made, and where each cutting yields from one and a half to two and a half tons to the acre.

Bellaire Independent: Judge Wm. Alderson went down to his Lone Tree Point resort on Torch Lake Monday to prepare for the opening of the season for the season. His first guests are expected to arrive about May 1st.

East Jordan Enterprise: County Road Commissioner Hernes B. Hipp started work to complete his section of the county road east from this city on Monday last. This section will be completed before tackling the section toward Charlevoix.

Boyne Journal: Mrs. Matilda Eaton, a long time resident of Charlevoix county, died at her home near Deer Lake yesterday afternoon. She was seventy-seven years of age and had spent about forty years in this county. The funeral will be held at the Deer Lake grange hall.

Ramona park, a large resort on the shore of Little Traverse bay, between Petoskey and Harbor Springs, was lately sold by Mrs. A. L. Bingham of Cleveland to F. V. Faulhaber, also of that city. The new owner leased the property to W. J. Cartright and Henry Stegeman of Petoskey, who will take charge May 1. The property consists of a large hotel and 40 acres of land. Mr. Cartright has been chief clerk of the Cushman house, Petoskey, for 20 years.

The Traverse City Iron Works company of Traverse City has secured the patent rights of the Hot Blast Grate company with factories at Big Rapids and Greenville, and has already begun the manufacture of Hot Blast Grates at Traverse City. The Hot Blast Grate is not a new invention, but has created a good demand on the market for 20 years. These grates can be placed under any boiler and are guaranteed to produce 10 times the draft with only half the consumption of fuel.

Petoskey News: Petoskey is surely to have a fine Masonic temple. This was fully and finally decided upon Thursday evening at a meeting of the Masonic association, an incorporated body, composed of representatives from the six Masonic bodies in Petoskey. A general meeting of Masons was held Thursday evening to hear the final report of a committee appointed to purchase a site. The committee reported having purchased the south eighty-five feet frontage of the Chrysler property on Petoskey street, running north from the alley. The deal called for a cash consideration and the site was selected from thirty-five properties submitted with prices. There is to be nothing done toward actual building until next year. But early next summer the building will be started and an early completion is contemplated.

The Grand Traverse region will not be far distant from one of the biggest demonstrations of naval vessels ever held on the Great Lakes this summer when the Great Lakes fleet of naval reserve vessels rendezvous at Mackinac Island for the first naval manoeuvers ever conducted on the great lakes in recent years. According to the present plan there will be an attack on Mackinac Island, which will be defended with a strong fleet from the naval militia vessels. The dates have been fixed for August 11 to August 18 inclusive, and according to present plans and announcements an officer from the regular navy will be stationed on each ship during the whole manoeuvers. A fine the many convoy at Mackinac Island the ships will hold target practice under the direction of the navy department, and ship scoring the highest number of points will be awarded the Great Lakes pennant.

Boyne Journal: W. J. (Bill) Pearson is one of the leading men in this section of the country these days and is mixed up with a job that will keep him out of mischief for many days to come. State Game and Forestry Warden Oates made Bill state deputy fire warden for the lower peninsula a few days ago and the office will be in Boyne Falls, where Bill would be busy detailing setters to corps of stenographers if he merely looks at matters as the ordinary official does, that is, get away with the job as he is requested to and never use his head in connection with the spending of the taxpayers' money. Those who know Bill, and really everyone does, will readily confess that he is not built that way; that is, Bill is different from the ordinary official in many ways. Instead of merely detailing letters to the various supervisors he is right out on the job himself forming organizations that will mean something when the time comes for action. He went down and had a confab with the boss and when he had finished the boss said, "Bill, go to it; that looks good to me, or words to that effect. Bill says the same proposition is a job in comparison to the forestry department, that if someone pinches a treed mother one can be grown in a short time, but that it takes more than a lifetime to grow timber.

EXPERT TEACHERS

Forty-six Counties Now Have Normal Schools For Education of Teachers

The state of Michigan has in operation forty-six county normal schools. These schools are conducted to train teachers for the rural schools. Each normal has two teachers and maintains a critic room where the students do practice teaching under the supervision of an expert teacher. Since these schools were established they have furnished over five thousand teachers to the rural schools. Students who have completed the eleventh grade in a good high school can complete the county normal course in one year. Graduates of county normal schools receive credit at the University of Michigan and at the state normal schools. Graduates of county normal schools who are also graduates of approved high schools may obtain a life certificate by attending a state normal school one year and one summer. High school graduates who have not had the county normal work, obtain the life certificate at a state normal in two years.

The demand for trained rural teachers is large this. School officers are awake to the need of employing efficient teachers. They realize the country must have as good teachers as the city and they are willing to pay enough to secure them.

A BIT OF HISTORY

A Glance Into the Past When There Was No Grange.

A Fraternal Organization Formed by Men Who Were Models in Present Needs and Its Future Possibilities. Co-operation Necessary.

By AMASA J. PARKER.

During the years following the close of the civil war and while the United States government was sticking to reconstruction the government in the south, ex-union soldiers and loyal men began to be discouraged by the war scene of the government officials at Washington to seriously consider the institution of a fraternal society for the purpose of bringing the farmers of the north and south together, to teach them to be friendly interests and to unite them in their political affairs as farmers.

Among those men was O. H. Kelley, who after and became the founder and father of the grange. These people realized that there was looking from our thousand societies and orders which could provide for the individual of both men and women, which would be of benefit to them, which would be helpful to them, which would bind together the farmers of the country. These men constituted themselves a committee and drew up the plan, rules and regulations of our present order.

The very first grange that was instituted was at Fredonia, in our own state. The history of Mr. Kelley as he left Washington with but $2.50 in his pocket, and now he is a leader of faith in the gathering of the Order had of his chills, is major from gets to the people of the country, is almost patient.

ORGANIZATION WORK.

Compensation of Organizers as Approved by the National Grange.

In accordance with the action taken by the national grange at Manchester, N. H., Nov. 12 to 22, 1913, a sum not exceeding $2,000 was appropriated to be expended in each state entitled to representation at the session of the national grange by the master and executive committee of the national grange in co-operation and with the approval of the master of said state in which said extension fund is used in building up and extending the Order in said state.

A sum not exceeding $5,000 was appropriated to extend the Order in other states not now entitled to representation in the national grange, said money to be used by the master and executive committee when and where in their judgment the best interests of the Order will be served.

The above to remain in force provided that the amount used does not reduce the resources of the national grange below $100,000 at the end of the year.

Regulations.

First—Organizers recommended by state masters approved by the executive committee of the national grange and devoting their entire time to organizing work as long as results are satisfactory to the executive committee of the national grange shall receive $3 a day, except Sundays, and expenses, which, in states of 3,000 members or less, shall be paid by the national grange and in states of over 3,000 members shall be paid one-half by the national grange and one-half by the state grange, the deputy fee of $5 per grange organized and paid by the national secretary to be retained and used to be deducted from bill before settlement.

Second—The amount of $25 will be used for each grange organized in states of 3,000 members or less and the amount of $15 in states of more than 3,000 members, organized by others than the especially employed organizer under particular No. 1 which is in addition to the deputy fee of $5 paid the organizer by the national secretary as heretofore stated.

Third—All granges organized shall be visited at least twice after organization by the organizer for instruction in the work.

Fourth—The basis for computing membership shall be the dues paid to the national treasurer for the year ending June 30, 1913.

Fifth—Granges organized under regulation No. 2 will be sent any officer of the state grange designated by the state master and based upon the report of the national secretary to be made to the executive committee monthly.

Seventh—The sum of $5 in addition to the amount provided for by the national grange will be paid to each organizer for granges organized and reported to the national secretary, said amount to be paid as provided in regulation No. 6.

The Grange In New Hampshire.

The Pennsylvania railroad will run excursion to Wilmington, Del., at the time of the National grange meet November. The local arrangements will be in charge of L. H. Hosley, North Woodstock, Conn.; E. E. Chapman, Ludlow, Mass., and George H. Lyon, Manchester, N. H.

As the long promised cipher code is in the hands of the printer, it is expected that the books will be issued in the early summer.

To have inserted the list of seventh degree initiates at the last session of the National grange would have delayed the publication of the Journal of Proceedings, made it a cumbersome book and added from 40 to 50 pages. It is greatly regretted by the members of the Chinese Hall, as arrangements have been made to print the list. Quite a large classes have always been printed, and it does not seem right to cease publishing the names of those initiated at the session in New Hampshire.

The New Hampshire grange will give a prize (annual) to one of the seven founders of the Order to the grange in each of the thirty-one deputy districts that has the highest score in literary work and attendance during the coming eight months.—George E. Hirsks.

Pennsylvania Grange Matters.

Pennsylvania is, as all grangers know, one of the most progressive and aggressive of the grange states. The Pennsylvania state grange is always actively interested in what is going on at the state capital that has a bearing on the farmer. State Master "Farmer" Cresse is entirely familiar with the methods of the legislature, having himself been a member for several terms, and his watchful eye is never off farm legislation. The state grange is looking to a more equitable distribution of taxes. At present real estate pays 16½ mills, while personal and personal property pays 4 mills. The grange also favors state aid for township roads and an increased school appropriation in our manner of reducing rural taxes. Along the line of community service Pennsylvania granges always take a leading place. Master Cresse recently said that the grange is the one real live body to create a healthy community, socially, morally and financially.

MERIT SYSTEM AND HIGHWAYS.

Two applications of the merit system in highway work which will be tested with satisfaction by road builders have recently been made.

In Connecticut state employment has been put upon a merit system, both by means of the state civil service law which becomes effective on Aug. 1, 1913. As applied to the highway department, this law puts all of the officials and employees, with the exception of the state highway commissioner, into the classified service.

In New York state the appointment of six division engineers has been made by competitive examination. A description of the method of conducting these examinations was given by First Deputy Commissioner George A. Hisler at the recent special road meetings of the American Society of Civil Engineers.

If the road has been recognized just as every in the conduct of highway work could best be obtained by the selection of men with regard only to their fitness and ability, and it has been generally believed that the absolute minimum of political contamination from appointments of this kind was determined. But while those have been generally accepted as abstract principles, their actual application has not been as frequent as might be desired.—Dwight Brush.

Playgrounds In 1913.

Industrial work, sewing classes, debating, gardening, dramatics, music, moving picture shows, swimming, swimming, swimming, swimming, swimming, playgrounds and recreation centers during the past year. In at least several cities supervised playgrounds were opened for the first time. Altogether 602 municipal cities were active in developing and maintaining playgrounds and recreation centers, an increase of 101 during the year. In 342 of these there was regular paid supervision. In fifteen cities streets were set aside for play, and in ninety-six other cities this was permitted on certain streets. These are some of the interesting facts of the recreation census for the year ending Nov. 1, 1913, compiled by the Playground and Recreation Association of America.

SYNOPSIS.

John Valiant, a rich society favorite, suddenly discovers that his father had married, which his father founded and nourished his immense income on, he finds, has failed. He voluntarily turns his entire fortune over to his creditors for the corporation.

CHAPTER III.—Continued.

To be outdoor! All that light and color and comfort and pleasure would burn and sparkle on just the same, though he was no longer within the circle of its effulgence—shivering perhaps, he thought with a twisted smile, at some cheerless occupation that called for no experience, to pay for a meal to some second-rate restaurant and a pallet in some shabby-genteel, hall bedroom, till his clothes were replaced by ill-fitting "hand-me-downs"—till his wretched gradations he arrived finally at the status of the dine-out in the gallery and five-cent cigars.

There was one way back. It lay through the backneyed gateway of marriage. Youth, comeliness and fortune, in the world he knew, were a fair exchange for wealth any day. "Value received—the sum of $250,000 cash, through his mind. Why not? Others did so. And so for himself. It perhaps need be no question of plain and spinsterish millions—there was Katharine Fargo!

In his heart John Valiant was aware, by those subtle signs which men and women alike distinguish, that while Katharine Fargo loved him, and for most her own wonderful person, he had been an easy second to her regard.

John Valiant looked down at the hollow upturned to the moon, the eyes shining in the dimness. A little hot ripple ran over him. "Not on your life, Chum!" he said. "No shame—low, better! There must be other things besides money and social position in this doddering old world, after all! We're going to begin something for ourselves, if it's only raising cabbages! And we're going to start it without any baby-sashing—the nurse never held our noses when we took our castoreil!"

It was folded down, that old bright page. Plans had been written in the rose-colored chapter. And even as he told himself, he was conscious of a new gayety—something that had been snowly dawning within him, a sense of courage, even of zest, and a furtive hatred of the selfpity that had wrenched him even for a moment.

He turned from the window, picked up his letters, and followed by the dog went slowly up another flight to his room.

He tore open the letters abstracted. If the usual dinner-card or two, a failure's spring announcement, a chronic serial from an enthusiastic marble-quarrying company, a quarterly statement of a club house-committee. The last two missives bore a nondescript look.

One was small, with the name of a legal firm in the corner. The other was larger, opulent, and heavy, of stout Manila paper, and here, down one side, a goofy presentiment of page stamps proclaiming that it had been registered.

What's in that, I wonder? he said to himself, and then, with a smile at the unmeritious speculation, opened the smaller envelope.

"Dear Sir," began the letter, in the most unconspicuously conventional of typewriting:

"Dear Sir:

"Enclosed please find, with this deed, a memorandum opened in your name by the late John Valiant some years before his death. It was his desire that the services indicated in connection with this estate should continue till this date. We hand you herewith our check for $250.00 (two hundred and thirty-six dollars and twenty cents), the balance in your favor which please your receipt.

"And oblige,

"Yours very truly,

"Emerson and Ball."

"(Enclosure)

He turned to the memorandum. It showed a sizable initial deposit against which was entered a series of annual tax payments with minor disbursements credited as "inspection and care." The tax receipts were pinned to the account.

The large wrapper contained an unsealed envelope, across which was written in faded ink and in an unfamiliar clothing, slanting handwriting, his own name. The envelope contained a creased yellow parchment, from backsun whose folds three clumped and fluttered down upon the floor a long flattish object wrapped in a paper, a newspaper clipping and a letter.

Puzzled he unfolded the crackling thing in his hands. "Why," he said half aloud, "it's—it's a deed made over to me." He overran it swiftly. "Part of an old Colony grant * * * a plantation in Virginia, twelve hundred odd acres, given under the hand of a viceregal governor to the adventurous century. I had no idea there in the United States went back so far as that!" His eye fled to the end. "It was my father's! What could he have wanted of an estate in Virginia? It must have come into his hands in the course of business."

He picked up the newspaper clipping. It was worn and brown in the folds as if it had been carried for months in a pocket.

"It will interest readers of this section of Virginia (the paragraph began) to learn, from a recent transfer received for record at the County Clerk's office, that Damory Court has passed to Mr. John Valiant, minor—

He turned the paper over and found a date; it had been printed in the year of the transfer. Mr. Valiant, when he was six years old—the year his father had died.

"—John Valiant, minor, the son of the former owner.

"There are few indeed who do not recall the tragedy with which in the public mind the estate is connected. The fact, moreover, that this old homestead has been left in its ground state (for, as is well known, the house has remained with all its contents and furnishings untouched) to rest during so long a term of years unoccupied, could not of course fail to be commented on, and this circumstance alone has perhaps tended to keep alive a melancholy story which may well be forgotten."

He read the elaborate, rather stilted phraseology in the twenty-year-old paper with a wondering interest. An old house," he mused, "with a bad name. Probably he couldn't sell it, and maybe nobody would ever live in it. That would explain why it remained so long unencumbered. Evidently there are no records of rentals. Probably the land was starved and run down.

"It's an offset to the hail-brotherhood idea, at any rate," he said to himself humorously. "It holds out an excuse nicely owning within him, a sense of courage, even of zest, and a furtive hatred of the selfpity that had wrenched him even for a moment.

He turned from the window, picked up his letters, and followed by the dog went slowly up another flight to his room.

For a Long Time John Valiant Sat Motionless, the Opened Letter in His Hand, Staring at Nothing.

tombed on the wreck of a Virginia plantation, a would-be country gentleman on an automobile and not a nothing a year!

He bestowed himself of the fallen letter and possessed himself of it quickly. It lay with the superscription side down. On it was written, in the same hand which had addressed the other envelope:

For my son, John Valiant.

When he reaches the age of twenty-five.

That then had been written by his father—and he had died nearly twenty years ago! He broke the seal with a strange feeling as if, walking in some familiar thoroughfare, he had stumbled on a lichened and sunken tomb-stone.

"When, you read this, my son, you will have come of age—maybe. I'm curious to think that this black block ink may be faded to gray and thin a while, while paper yellowed, just from lying waiting so long. But strangest of all is to think that you, yourself, whose brown head hardly tops this desk, will be as tall (I hope) as I! How I wonder what you will look like then! And shall I—the real, real, I, I mean—be peering over your strong broad shoulder as you read? Who knows? Wise men have dreamed such a thing possible—and I am not a bit wise.

"John, you will not have forgotten that you are a Valiant. But you are also a Virginian. Will you have discovered this for yourself? Here is the deed to the land where I and my father, and his father, and many, many more Valiants before them were born. Sometime, perhaps, you will know why you are John Valiant of New York instead of John Valiant of Damory Court. I can not tell you myself, because it is too true a story, and I have forgotten how to tell any but fairy tales, where everything happens right, where the Prince marries the beautiful Princess and they live happily together ever after.

"You may never care to live at Damory Court. Maybe the life there will know so well by the time you read this will have wedded you to it, well! If so, well and good. There is the old place to your son. But there is such a thing as racial habit, and the call of blood. And I know there is such a thing as a fate. Your father's fate, my fate, my grandfather's fate, so the tradition put it. It was my fate to go away, and I know now—since distance is not made by miles alone—that I myself shall never see Damory Court again. But life is a strange wheel that goes round and round and comes back to the same point again and again. And it may be your fate to go back. Then perhaps you will cry that, oh, not on the old white brick skin rug—never again with me holding your small, small hand!—

"Wishing-House! Wishing-House! Where are you?

"And this old parchment deed will answer.

"Here I am, Master, here I am!"

"Ah, we are only children, after all, playing out our plays. I have had many toys, but O John, John! The ones I treasure most are all in the Never-Never Land!"

CHAPTER IV.

A Valiant of Virginia.

For a long time John Valiant sat motionless, the opened letter in his hand, staring at nothing. He had the sensation, spiritually, of a traveler awakened with a rude shock amid wholly unfamiliar surroundings.

He was trying to remember—to put two and two together. His father had been honorable, honest; yes, he had known that. But he had known nothing whatever of his father's early life or of his forebears, since he had been old enough to wonder about such things, he had had no one to ask questions of.

Phrases of the letter ran through his mind: "Sometime, perhaps, you will know why you are John Valiant of New York instead of John Valiant of Damory Court." * * * I cannot tell you myself." There was some tragedy, then, that had blighted the place, some "melancholy story" as the clipping put it.

He bent over the deed spread out upon the table, following with his finger the long line of entanglement. "John Valiantes," he muttered; what odd spelling! Robert Valiant—with one "e." Here, in 1735, they had begun to be "s." There was something strange about that spelling. It was a line of dates. "Valiant, Always a Valiant. How they held on to it! There's never a break."

A curious pride, new-born and self-conscious, was dawning in him. He was descended from ancestors who had been no weaklings. A Valiant had settled on those acres under a royal governor, before the old frontier fighting was over and the Indians had entirely retired to the westward. The sons of those who had served as sons and savages had bowed their strong bodies and their strong hands to raise the forests and turn the primeval jungles into golden plantations.

There stole into his mood an very suggestion of intensity. Why sound the date assigned for that deed's death, the nations are brought and without resources for the future; for the next hundred years there will be of abnormal proportions, worst of all, there are no young men left to breed a future race. It has all caused many to say it were accomplish anything in the long run that could not much better be gained by judicial and peaceable methods. I have a lurking suspicion, from what I heard in Italy last year, that many Italians feel the same way after the war in Tripoli. Everywhere, in England and America, as well as in Germany, many have been asking: "Who starts war scares? Who advocates the rose of arrogants and big navies?" Yes, "the originator says themselves?"

New industry in Mississippi.

The advent of the Sicilian cotton boll weevil has caused at least one new industry to spring up in Pike county, namely, the gathering, grinding and shipping leaves of the sassafras tree to be used as an article of commerce. The product is known as "file," and seven barrels of it, aggregating 750 pounds, were shipped to New Orleans from here recently by F. W. Allen, a progressive farmer, residing seven miles east of Magnolia. Mr. Allen has a mill made specially for grinding "file," and he shipped a small quantity of it last year. While the article is used extensively in the preparation of "gumbo file," the delicious soup which has made French cooking famous, the demand for it is very limited. The leaves are gathered in July and August, and are thoroughly dried in the shade before being carried to the mill. It requires about three hundred pounds of green leaves to make one hundred pounds of meal.—Magnolia News.

Postage Stamps.

The postage stamp first made its appearance in 1840. Its inventor was James Chalmers, a printer of Dundee, who died in 1853. England adopted the adhesive stamp in 1839, and issued the first stamps for the use of the public in 1840. A year later stamps were introduced into the United States and Switzerland, and soon afterward made their appearance in France, Belgium and Bavaria.

COST OF WAR DURING 1913

Many Converts Made to Peace Cause by the Fierce Struggle in the Balkans.

The Balkan war has made innumerable converts to the peace cause, declares Frederick Lynch in the Yale Review. It has revolted the twentieth century conscience. It has made thousands ask the question, that Life asked under its famous picture: "Must It Always be?" More than ever we have said "Surely there must be some better way!" Many are saying: "Is what one gets worth the price paid for it?" This change of heart has been noticeable in the busy press. There has been a distinct progress toward the advocacy of judicial methods during the year. It has not all been due to the exhibition of savagery in the Balkans, nor the inhuman atrocities perpetrated by all concerned; but it was partly responsible for the revelation of the futility of it all. Hundreds and thousands of lives have been lost, thousands of homes are fatherless and poverty-

GET THE PUBLIC INTERESTED

Salesman Who Can Do That, and Has the Right Goods, May Be Sure of Success.

"Attract the attention of the public," said a man who has succeeded in virtually every line. Next comes the question of how much the demand for it is very limited. The leaves are gathered in July and August, and are thoroughly dried in the shade before being carried to the mill. It requires about three hundred pounds of green leaves to make one hundred pounds of meal.—Magnolia News.

WOMEN FROM 45 to 55 TESTIFY

To the Merit of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound during Change of Life.

Westbrook, Me.—"I was passing through the Change of Life and had pains in my back and side and was so weak I could hardly do my housework. I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it has done me a lot of good. I will recommend your medicine to my friends and give you permission to publish my testimonial."—Mrs. LAWRENCE MASTIN, 12 King St., Westbrook, Maine.

Manston, Wis.—"At the Change of Life I suffered with pains in my back and loins until I could not stand. I also had night-sweats so that the sheets would be wet. I tried other medicines but got no relief. After taking one bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I began to improve and I continued its use for six months. The pains left me, the night-sweats and hot flashes grew less, and in one year I was a different woman. I know I owe my good health to my continued use of ever since."—Mrs. M. J. BIGO, Box 32, Manston, Wis.

The success of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, is unparalleled in this country.

Caravaggio Picture Found.

An important find has been made in the art collection of Marchese della Rigata at Pisano. It is a painting by Caravaggio, which had been lost sight of for many years. The painting was known to connoisseurs through a print in the Galleria degli Uffizzi.

Big di Pietro, the secretary of this gallery, was determined to find the picture. It was known that in the year 1700 it was in possession of the Corretani family, which is now extinct.

RASH ITCHED AND BURNED

400 South Hermitage Ave., Chicago, Ill.—"I was attacked with a breaking out on the inside of my arms. It was a small rash or pimples and it itched and burned, especially at night, so that I could not sleep. I was in a nervous state. I had to wear the finest kind of cotton underwear, no woolen at all, because the least thing irritated it and made it much worse. The rash spread and I scratched until at times I got no sleep at all.

Western Michigan

A Region that is Rapidly Developing as a Fruit Growing and General Farming Section

OCEANA A FAMOUS FRUIT SECTION.

Oceana county, famous as a fruit section. Forty years ago some enterprising farmers discovered that the western part of the county produced peaches of great flavor and that the profits from growing this fruit were encouraging. As a result, the county became a great peach growing section. The above scene shows the fruit harvest upon the Frank Miller farm in Claybanks township.

HOW BOOST WORK IS BEING PUSHED

The development of western Michigan is being carried forward along three distinct lines. There is the missionary work which has to do with the raising of the standards of the people who are already residents of this territory; then the foreign immigrant work which is concerned with the idea of interesting the people of other sections and other states in the western Michigan country, with the hope that they will eventually change their residences and help to make this region prosperous and famous. Third, there is that line of work which has to do with the advertising of the products of the region particularly agricultural products, with the idea of securing bigger and better returns for that which the people have to sell.

The local, or home missionary, work as it is sometimes called, has been developed to a high degree and the results are surprising, even to those who broad outlooks and vigorous imaginations. The machinery which will keep this work going for the next 50 or perhaps 100 years, has been elaborated until it is interesting because of its completeness and effectiveness. In raising the standards, the aim has been to raise the industrial standards, the intellectual, and the moral. The industrial standards have been raised by the adoption of better methods of agriculture. Probably 100 different devices have been invented to do the work and the farmer has to use no complex, that but few people see, as a whole, the machinery that is doing the work. The people have been urged to select good locations, to study soil conditions, to cultivate better than ever before, to spray, to harvest in efficient ways and to market to the best advantage. To accomplish all this work the agricultural experiment stations have been utilized. Field men from the Development Bureau, from the agricultural college, from the corporations having extension departments, and from the federal government, have been sent into the territory in all directions, to do the work that they have. Many schools have given lectures on agricultural subjects. Many high schools have employed men to devote their time to this work. Farmers institutes, the utilizes of printed matter bearing upon the various topics, have been distributed by individuals, by schools, banks and other agencies. Then the 100 newspapers in the western Michigan territory have printed column upon column of reading matter bearing in one way or another, upon this problem of better farming.

While the big accomplishments have been made in the realm of industry, great advance is also recorded in the matter of raising the intellectual and moral standards. The part of the work of development has been largely carried forward by the school men who have worked diligently to secure better and more useful schools and to put a premium upon high ideals so far as related to right living and honest business.

Despite the fact that the main thought of the founders of the Bureau was that of getting new settlers, this phase of the work has become almost a secondary consideration. Big exhibits have been made in the larger cities in the nearby states, and those sands of people have been induced to come to western Michigan for the purpose of making it their home. There is not a county of the 30 making up the territory, but what has gained settlers in its agricultural sections. It is true that some of the counties have suffered a slight loss in rural population, but it is also true that their loss would be far greater but for the new people that the campaign of development has succeeded in bringing into the section.

Inasmuch as there are thousands of acres of as good land as this out of doors yet to be taken up and put under the plow, it is reasonable to believe that much emphasis in the future will be laid upon this phase of the development work. Efforts undoubtedly will be made to secure for western Michigan that portion of the rural population within the states of Illinois that is looking for new lands. Exhibits, illustrated lectures and printed matter will be used in the campaign to the end that to attract settlers to this region. The work of opening up new markets for the products of western Michigan is just being taken up in a big way. Plans are being made for the coming years. Michigan apples, Michigan cherries, Michigan peaches and Michigan potatoes will be advertised until the best crops will be demanding these products.

Furthermore, plans are being made to invade foreign fields that new markets may be found for the products of the people of this region have to sell. The idea is to convince that is a reasonable time the machinery for marketing products of this region will be as well elaborated as is now the machinery for carrying forward the work of development. And when that day comes the people of the territory will be as prosperous and as influential that their force will be a factor in all questions concerning the portion of the world.

Junior Agricultural Club.

A junior agricultural club has been organized in connection with the village schools of Scottville in Mason county. The club has elected a set of officers and an advisory board, the county commissioner of schools being one of the members of the latter. The object of the organization is to promote an interest in and knowledge of rural and home life among the young people of the state. The local club is to be a unit in a county organization and the county organization a unit in the state organization. This particular club starts out with 72 members, with a consecrating the wisdom of giving a school exhibit next fall.

Coarse Feed for the Cows.

Give the cow all the coarse feed she will eat, such as roots, silage and hay, and then add a quarter to one-third of a pound per day as she gives milk. This method insures that the cow gets enough to eat, yet not so much concentrates as to injure her.

Poultry Lice.

Money in poultry lice is just so much less money in poultry. Cut off the lice. Good dust baths of sifted coal ashes and land plaster will do it.

Ancient Stage to Be Used.

A more than usually interesting dramatic revival is announced for April 16, when the "Agamemnon" of Aeschylus will be performed in the ancient Greek theater of Syracuse.

Nearly 21 centuries have passed since Hiero I embellished his city with the theater which tradition attributes to the architect Demotopor Myrilla.

Aeschylus must have taken refuge in the court of Hiero very soon after its completion, and it may be conjectured that the great tragedy, which began with the "Agamemnon," was often performed on its stage. It is certain that the "Persians" was performed there and a work written for the occasion by Aeschylus, entitled the "Women of Aetna" which no trace remains.—New York Sun.

One's Ancestors.

How many male and female ancestors were required to bring you into the world? Figure it out, remembered that you should have a father and mother. That makes two human beings. Each of them must have had a father and mother. That makes four human beings. Each of them must have had a father and mother. That makes eight more human beings. So on we go back to the time of Jesus Christ, 56 generations. The calculation then resulting shows that 18,446,744,073,709,551,616 human beings have taken place to bring you into this world—you who read these lines! All this since the birth of Christ—not since the beginning of time.

WILL MAKE E XHIBITS

First One Will be Held in Boston Showing Condition of Apple Crop

At the meeting of the executive committee of the Western Michigan Development Bureau held in Traverse City last week general plans for the several fruit exhibits to be made this year were considered. The first exhibit will be at Boston in August in connection with the annual meeting of the International Apple Shippers' Association. This will consist of a display showing the condition of the apple crop on August 1. Last year Western Michigan apples secured a medal and several ribbons at the Cleveland meeting. Western Michigan fruits are to be made a feature at the Western Michigan fair at Grand Rapids the first week in Grand Rapids the first week in September. It was decided that the bureau make on exhibit of fruit at the Northern District Fair at Cadillac the middle of September. Time was given to the discussion of the bureau's apple inspection service, with the idea of perfecting this so that greater benefits will come to our fruit growers in the future in the way of profitable prices for their products.

Encampment of the Guards

There is something doing every minute from daylight until dark—and very, very frequently after dark—in a Michigan National Guard encampment. There are 3,000 "live ones" wearing the olive drab, as the pictures show.

All work and no play makes the American Tommy Atkins a dull boy as well as his civilian brother, so the husky young men engaged in the pyramid building stunt are taking a little time off to skylark. Just behind them, a comrade who started out with the intention of taking a bath pauses long enough to get in the picture.

Religion is not neglected, even in the short and crowded ten days of the annual encampment. There are three chaplains in the service, one for each regiment, and they hold Sunday services, besides giving aid and counsel to the soldiers at other times. Father Dunigan, the Catholic chaplain, celebrates military mass, his altar draped with the American colors.

There is no specified wash day in camp; it is any old time when one's clothes happen to need attention. And khaki doesn't keep clean very long. The states provides soap and brushes and water and benches for the cleaning; the men supply the clothes and the muscle.

On alternate years the Michigan National Guard attends a maneuver encampment in some other state, under regular army supervision, and are there paid. One of the customs of the service which the Guardsmen learn when the regulars pay them is that they need never expect to receive any pennies.

The shining pennies are counted out by the paymaster—the money is all in crisp new bills and fresh-minted metal—but before a man's fingers can close on the coppers they are swept deftly aside. Legally, he get them, but really he doesn't. The pennies thus secured at encampments throughout the United States goes to the support of a hospital for invalid soldiers.

Straws From State Local Elections

Off year local elections do not always indicate party strength, inasmuch as local issues enter largely into results; but in the larger towns and cities they necessarily have a destinct and unquestionable significance.

Complete election returns show the Republican Party has gained strength beyond the most sanguine hopes of the most optimist of the faithful ones. In forty-six cities in the state, republicans elected the head of the ticket in twenty instances, democrats eleven, progressives five, and various fusion tickets ten. The most noticeable decline in party strength was the progressive, followed [illegible] suffered a signal defeat in Flint where the Progressives ran up a total of 3000 against their 492.

This is the only victory for the Progressives worth mentioning. The returns are significant in that Michigan gave Roosevelt (Progressive Party) a large majority over the Republicans in the last presidential election. In other words it is a repudiation of the principles of every party differing with the Republican. The voters are awake to the fact that without Roosevelt the party is nothing and now realize that credit has been given him which rightfully belongs to the party he was formerly allied, not to the man. They are anxious for a return to the golden age, made possible by the Republican party.

The Escanaba Bandits

The two bandits who robbed the Soo Line Station have been giving very much trouble to the authorities there. Two officers have been shot, and the bandits at last accounts were at large.

The Bandits are young men named Clyde Smith and Joe Parent.

Frank D. Scott for Congress

Frank D. Scott, of Alpena, has represented this senatorial district at Lansing for two terms. Stated concisely, his record is clean. On questions that lie outside of partisan politics he may not have pleased certain radicals; but in the main, he has always voted conscientiously and consistently. He has not been a wall-flower.

When any question involving a vital interest of his district was before the Senate he was heard from, and in tones of no uncertain ring. He is a lawyer of marked ability, and in debate he had few superiors on the floor. In committee work he applied a knowledge of every feature of the question at issue, and when he was recognized by the chair he knew what he was talking about.

Lindquist "the Man from Michigan," is eliminated, glory be; and for the new district there is no more worthy or deserving candidate than Frank D. Scott, of Alpena.

We believe the interests of Charlevoix county lie with Scott's election to Congress.

Regiments Will Take Turns at Grayling from August 3 Until Last of Month

Instead of one big camp of the Michigan National guard of state militia will assemble at Grayling in three divisions this year, according to a plan already approved by the state military board.

Because it is difficult to secure many regular army officers to act as instructors this year, the military board decided that the men would receive more individual attention by dividing the forces.

From August 3 to August 13 the two troops of cavalry, the field hospital corps, Company A, of the engineers and the second infantry, will assemble at Grayling. From August 13 to August 22 the third infantry, ambulance company No. 2 and company A, of the of the signal corps, will receive instructions at the state camp site. The first infantry, first battalion of field artillery and ambulance company No. 1 will be in camp from August 22 to August 31.

Common Council

At the council meeting Monday night it was ordered that a man-hole be placed in sewer on Mason street between Grant and State.

The city mineral water fountain at the south end of Bridge street ordered opened.

Adopted—recommendation of board of public works for the Belvedere avenue, Alice and May street blanket sewer, and the south extension of Bridge street sewer. Board instructed to prepare plans, specifications and estimates of cost for the installation of the East Hurlbut avenue sewer from Bridge street east, together with a septic tank for entire district, and for the south extension of Bridge street up to center of Hurlbut avenue, thence west on Hurlbut avenue to State street.

Farmers Attention

There will be a meeting in the court house, Sat, April 25th to arrange for the purchase of the sugar Co. building for a co-operative selling station and warehouse.

Every farmer and his wife is invited to attend at 2.00 p. m. sharp. Come and help BOOST, and with one good pull together we will own a plant not governed by a dealer.

The Charlevoix Co. bank will take one hundred dollars of stock and we believe the State bank will do likewise when interviewed. Remember the date Saturday April 25th.

White Pine Trees for the Pike

Muskegon county residents are making a move in the right direction by setting white pine trees along the Truck Line highway. The state gladly furnishes the young trees at cost, which is about one cent each. In a few years, if other counties will join in the good work, we will have two solid rows of magnificent white pines from the southern boundry of the state to the straits. The plan is, we believe, for the owners of the lands along the Pike to pay for the trees and the Boards of trade along the way to pay for the cost of setting them out. Both sides of the road are to be thus treated. Surely Benzie county will follow suit and the Patriot urges the matter upon the attention of our readers. If every county in the state will follow suit, think of the legacy we will pass on to future generations, though, as a matter of fact, the present generation will live to see the wonderful advantages of this effort. Let everybody get ready to do his or her part.—Frankfort Patriot.

Fruit Prospects Good

Reports to the horticultural department, M. A. C., indicate that some little damage has been done to peach trees by frost, although this damage is for the most part outside of the fruit belt. According to the officials of this department, Michigan fruit has wintered well, compared to the fruit trees of other states, especially New York and Arkansas. Outside of the peach tree, the other fruit trees have withstood the cold in excellent shape and there is every indication now of a bumper crop, providing weather conditions are as favorable as they have been.

Small fruits are in fairly good shape in all parts of the state up to date, according to reports to the same department.

A Pleasant Event

On Wednesday evening, April 22nd, the last meeting of the Charlevoix Parents' & Teachers' Association, for the year, occurred in the form of a reception for Superintendent and Mrs. DeVoe, who are to leave the city at the close of the present school year. A very pleasing program had been arranged, and a great deal of appreciation was expressed for the excellent work Supt. DeVoe has done in the Charlevoix schools.

Mr. and Mrs. DeVoe were presented with a beautiful view of Lake Michigan, in the hope that they may ever keep in memory the people among whom they have made such a place for themselves. Their many friends wish them every success and good fortune as they go from our midst to take up other work.

McMillan for Representative

Representative H. I. McMillan authorizes the SENTINEL to announce his candidacy for re-election to the lower house of the legislature.

Not only is Mr. McMillan entitled to a second term, under the rule of precedence, but he has earned it.

"Mac" served the county well, and by reason of experience in one session can do better service in a second term than a new man in his first.

There is no good reason why McMillan should not go back to Lansing as the representative from Charlevoix county.

FROM THE TROUBLE COUNTRY

Howard Francis One of American Colony Bottled Up in Mexico City—Wires He is Safe and Well

Since the occupation of Vera Cruz by United States forces Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Francis have been quite nervous concerning the safety of their son Howard, who was one of the Americans who were marooned in Mexico City. On Tuesday morning they received the following telegram from him, via Galveston:

"Safe and well. Don't worry; could not wire sooner."

Howard is one of the Charlevoix boys who has made good. For five years he has held responsible positions under the municipal government, and for some time has been superintendent of the building department of the Mexico City light and power company. He paid his parents a visit here a year ago.

The telegram indicates that communication has been re-established with the city, and that the excitement is quieting down.

Depends Upon Whose Ox is Gored

Reports in circulation in neighboring towns and printed in state papers that the financial embarrassment of the A. E. Mason department store in this city was a business failure, is a damaging mis-statement.

Mr. Mason executed a trust mortgage and he did it voluntarily. No action to force liquidation was taken by any creditor. The voluntary action taken by Mr. Mason was taken to protect his creditors and to put himself in shape to continue the business and dig out from under the load carried by the over-[illegible] known and praised [illegible]

During the past winter the largest business and industrial concern in Charlevoix county did the same thing for the same reason. Within the past year there have been, in other towns in the county, two business failures to one in Charlevoix.

Of the business men in Charlevoix there is not one who is more securely grounded in the confidence and esteem of the public of this section than Albert E. Mason. There has been absolutely no change at the dry department store. Mr. Mason is confident that he will pass through the crisis—perhaps a little scorched, but still in possession of what has always characterized his business record in Charlevoix—sterling business integrity and good citizenship.

WOOD STRONG FOR THE M. N. G.

Tells Secretary Garrison That the Michigan Militiamen Are the Best Trained in the Land

National Committeeman E. O. Wood, of Michigan, has been at Washington at the summons of the postoffice and justice departments, but his first call was on the secretary of war. Mr. Wood is strong for the Michigan national guard and he wanted to tell the war department where to find the best ready-trained soldiers in the United States. He also made an engagement with the president to see him later in the day to tell him the same thing.

"The national guard of Michigan," Mr. Wood told Secretary Garrison, "is the one organization of the country that has lived strictly up to the regulations, rules and even suggestions of the war department. The result is that while perhaps far from reaching to full war strength the men who are in the guard from Michigan are all ready to go to the front and go now. A single day will be sufficient to mobilize them. Of course to go into Mexico they would have to volunteer, but I believe every man of them would do so.

"As far as service within the country is concerned they can be ordered out today. The records of the war department itself will show that the Michigan national guard stands at the top. They are the very best in the United States and can be placed under arms at once, full equipped and entirely competent. It is a proud record and ought to be recognized."

NOTICE!

To the Debtors of A. E. Mason:

By virtue of a mortgage given by A. E. Mason for the benefit of his creditors to A. F. Bridge, Trustee, April 22, 1914, of all his merchandise, notes, mortgages, accounts, or any other indebtedness due him. You are requested to call at the A. E. Mason Department Store and pay A. E. ESCANABA BANDITS CAUGHT

Smith and Parent Captured as They Emerge From the Woods—Our Dog Did the Business

Parent was taken at the point of a gun as he was about to board a train at Nestoria, by Sheriff Curran.

Smith, who escaped, was cornered near Nestoria and surrendered only after an exchange of shots with a posse of more than 100.

Parent is but little [illegible] Smith is exhausted, he says: "I held up and robbed the North Escanaba-Soo Line three times all alone," he declared. "In the last robbery, at Gladstone, Smith was with me."

Thursday afternoon Sheriff Curran received word that the bandits were in the vicinity of Nestoria. He immediately left for that place. At 9 o'clock last night, while stationed near the depot in the darkness, Curran saw two men step [illegible] he went one way around the depot and the other came to the platform from the other side. Sheriff Curran drew his revolver and as Parent stepped on the platform he shoved the muzzle of the gun against his heart. "I guess you are one of the boys I have been looking for," said the sheriff. "Throw your hands up and do it quick."

It was Joe Parent. He slowly drew his hands from the pockets of his coat, and with one came an automatic revolver which the sheriff quickly seized. He made no resistance. Parent was locked against the wall of the station and handcuffed.

Parent said nothing as the cold steel bit into his wrists. He was startled as the muzzle of the gun pressed against his heart. When it was all over and he was taken into the station he sank white faced and weak kneed on the [illegible]

"I [illegible]," he replied. "She is [illegible] as." The prisoner then talked rapidly. He seemed relieved that the long chase had come to an end.

"Yes, I am guilty," said Parent. "I robbed the North Escanaba Soo Line station three times, but I was alone every time. At the Gladstone station [illegible] Smith was with me. That was the only robbery he was guilty of."

Parent then told of his flight through the swamps and woods. He was wearing the same suit of clothes in which he made his escape. He said that the only thing he purchased was a shirt and a new pair of shoes.

The bandits were in the swamp at Schaeffer all day Friday and Saturday and had several narrow escapes from capture. According to Parent, deputies passed within a few feet of their hiding place. Had the dogs been in the chase then they would have been captured.

Fred Coon, custodian of the Charlevoix county bloodhound, arrived home with the dog Saturday night. It was the dog that finally drove the bandits from cover. Fred had six armed men with him and they chased the bandits through four counties and into the fifth, but they finally were compelled to surrender.

The Duty of the Hour

The United States is at war with Mexico.

The talk of the president that he hopes to avert actual war is but the expression of a forlorn hope and a waste of words.

Civilized American blood has been shed; the flag is in the field and must now be carried forward to the conquest and pacification of that distracted country.

This is no time for quibbles and criticism. It is no time to argue the question of what the president might have done or should have done. These questions should be relegated to the rear and American courage and patriotism come to the front as it always has from 1776 to this present time. The maxim should be: "My country; may it always be right; but right or wrong, my country."

No good American doubts what the outcome will be; but only the God of battles knows when the last gun will be fired. The thought is distressing that hundreds, perhaps thousands of brave American lads will fall that the honor and dignity of the republic may be maintained. Widows and orphans will be multiplied to us, and many a home circle broken.

The financial cost of it will be but a trifle when compared to the cost in good American blood. There will be no faltering. American valor has stood the test on many a bloody field and it will not be found lacking now.

In every war in which we have been engaged there have been failures both of statesmanship and military operations. We will have them now; indeed we have them already, in high and low place. Some of them were in congress in 1861, they are there now.

The republic is powerful in men and money, but they are not all that is required. A solid front in support of the president in the accomplishment of the task he has undertaken should characterize the conflict.

CHEAPER EGGS NEXT WINTER

How to Beat the Cold Storage Man at His Own Game

Would you beat the cold storage man at his own game, so that next winter, when the eggs he is now buying at eighteen cents a dozen and putting away will be doled out to you at forty or fifty-five cents?

If you would get busy now while fresh eggs are cheap and plenty, suggests State Dairy and Food Commissioner Helme, in a bulletin in which he [illegible] points out the way to go about it.

"A great many methods have been tried by food authorities to obtain some simple process of preserving eggs," says the bulletin, "and the one that is now indorsed by the best authorities for the preservation of eggs is by placing them in a solution of water glass, or silicate of soda. The process is very simple and any individual can store eggs under this system.

Water glass, known to chemists as [illegible] is a thick, gelatinous-appearing liquid. To preserve eggs, it is diluted with ten parts of water. The water should first be boiled and then cooled. To this, for every five quarts of water, one pint of water glass should be added and thoroughly mixed. The solution should be placed in a can or pail that can be sealed after the process of preservation is over. A half gallon glass fruit jar will hold from fourteen to fifteen eggs. The solution should cover the eggs. If larger receptacles are wanted pails can be used. These should be coated inside with paraffin and after the eggs are placed in them and the solution covers them, the covers should be placed on tight and the edges sealed with paraffin. This prevents the evaporation of the solution, which might expose the eggs to the air. After the receptacles are filled, the eggs should be stored in a cool place.

"Water glass sells at wholesale for forty cents a gallon and at retail for ten cents a pound, or about twenty-five cents a quart. The proportion used should be ten parts of water to one part of water glass. One gallon of this solution will cover six dozen eggs. By this manner eggs can be preserved at the cost of about one cent per dozen. The experiment station finds that eggs preserved in this way are superior to cold storage eggs. April eggs are the best for storage, although May eggs are just as good if the weather remains cool."

SECOND CAMPAIGN

Primary Object is to Help Farmers to Grow Profitable Alfalfa Crops.

The campaign against the apple tree tent caterpillar, which has been conducted in Western Michigan during the past three months, under the direction of Prof. Myron A. Cobb of the agricultural department of the Central Michigan Normal, has been so successful that Prof. Cobb is now planning a second campaign. This will be a constructive rather than a destructive campaign. Prof. Cobb has the printed matter nearly ready for distribution. It deals with methods for testing the soil for acidity and for lime. The plan is to furnish the teachers of the rural schools throughout Western Michigan, with full information regarding methods for soil testing, and to have these instructions so simple that any teacher can test soil with a fair degree of accuracy. As soon as the teachers become expert testers, the children will be invited to bring samples of soil to school, that these may be pronounced either alkaline or acid. Prof. Cobb has noticed in his travels over Western Michigan that many acres are being sown to alfalfa, which acres are so strongly acid that the prospects of getting a good alfalfa crop is small. It is his idea that all farmers before sowing alfalfa, should send to the nearest school-teacher, samples of soil from the proposed field, that the teacher may render a statement as to the need of the soil as regards lime.

Prof. Cobb recently gave expression to the following sentiments upon this point: It is folly for the high schools and the agricultural colleges to allow the farmers to continue to sow alfalfa on fields that are lacking in lime, and to eventually make a failure of their efforts, when the condition of the soil can be so easily determined."

O'Shaughnessy All Right

There is one man in this Mexican mix-up will emerge without a flaw in his record, and his name is O'Shaughnessy.

As the acting minister of the United States this young Irishman has exhibited every quality essential to a good diplomat.

He has handled American affairs and protected American interests under most trying conditions, and he has never lost his head.

He has remained at his post until he was given his exequatur, and displayed such admirable tact that he always stood well with the so-called Mexican government.

Regardless of politics, the president should reward him with a higher diplomatic post; he has really earned it.

Bravery is an Irish characteristic, but O'Shaughnessy is "the bravest of the brave." O'Shaughnessy is all right.

Change O'Shaughnessy May Da Given the Passports by the Dublin Minister Willson to Compel Salute to Flag.

Vera Cruz, Mex., April 15.—The Mexican forces numbers nineteen, Senor Pujo (Huerta) Honor Minister of Marine, Admiral in charge d'affaires, Nelson Madden, chargé d'affaires, Nelson O'Shaughnessy, a note during the night from Admiral Mayo, Commander Cupp, and a detachment of blockade men from the United States cruiser Dolphin at Tampico and the demand of Admiral Mayo that the Mexican flag be saluted. In effect the note says that the Mexican government cannot see wanton insult intended by the federals have insisted any insult on the American flag. It was a crime for the army politely to salute the American flag under the circumstances. It would be an insult that the United States is exercising undue influences over this country. It is evident that the president is disposed to uphold the honor and sovereignty of Mexico at any cost.

Mexico City, April 15.—Optimism prevails in official circles. It is stated on authority that Brigadier Gen. Huerta believes the difficulties of the nation are rapidly adjusting into a solution. Mayo will disarm. Mayo will demand that the American government shall be assembled for possible action since the Spanish Ambassador.

While the navy moved on the Atlantic coast, Secretary Daniels was giving his attention to the situation in the Pacific. Mayo is the senior officer afloat in the Pacific already, are in Mexican waters.

New Light on Arrests.

New light was thrown later on the circumstances attending the arrest of the Dolphin's men by a dispatch to the navy department from Rear Admiral Fletcher. (statement to the department said)

Admiral Fletcher reported to the department at 9 p. m. (today that Admiral Mayo received from Tampico that no intimation was received by him of the exhibition of martial law or of objection to boat taking supplies. Howards orderlies, etc., were going about the town as usual.

HUERTA DEFIES ORDER

DICTATOR PLAUNTS MAYO'S DEMAND TO HONOR U. S. FLAG.

President Wilson Ready to Enforce Dictum—Insists "Old Glory" Must Be Saluted.

Vera Cruz, April 15.—The federal commander at Vera Cruz, Gen. Gustavo Maas, said the Mexican government had ordered Gen. Morelos Zaragoza of Tampico not to accede to Admiral Mayo's demand that the American flag be saluted within twenty-four hours.

"The government considers that such a salute would be highly derogatory to national dignity and was unofficial for us to insult and been offered to the American flag. (through an apology for the unfortunate mistake made in arresting American General Zaragoza, added General Maas, had made ample compensation.

Reports of indignities to the flag of the Dolphin's whole boat apparently are unfounded. The advices of Admiral Mayo to Admiral Fletcher say the flag was not removed from the socket in the stern of the boat.

In the formation of the demand for a national salute Admiral Mayo took the position that an affront to the uniform was identical with an indignity to the flag. Admiral Fletcher sustained that view.

Washington, April 15.—Upon whether the Huerta forces at Tampico salutes the American flag in apology for the arrest of American marines depend upon immediate developments in the Mexican situation.

President Wilson declared unofficially was he expected the federal commander at Tampico to fire a salute to the Stars and Stripes as demanded by Rear Admiral Mayo. He spoke on the subject with a confidence that implied instructions.

The presence in Washington of John Lind, President Wilson's personal representative in Mexico for eight months, gave the government an adhoc the special knowledge of the situation at Tampico.

MINE STRIKE IS OFF

WARRING COPPER MINERS IN CALUMET DISTRICT ABANDON DEMAND FOR RECOGNITION.

CLAIM SOME POINTS WON

Charles H. Moyer Will Not Discuss Action Until He Receives the Official Word—Head of W. F. of M. and Others Must Stand Trial.

Hancock, Mich., April 15.—The miners in the copper country who have been on strike since July 23 voted to call off the strike, according to an announcement made on Monday by Charles S. Hoefle, district secretary of the Western Federation of Miners. The figures will not be given out until after a meeting of the district board.

It is unofficially reported that the majority is in favor of calling off the strike was 1,012. The unofficial vote from four of the five locals in the district resulted as follows: Ahmeek, 650 for returning to work and 14 against; Calumet, 291 for and 38 against; Hancock, 491 for and 18 against; South Range, 440 for and 80 against.

Recognition of the union denied by the mining companies is waived by the strikers in voting to return to work. They claim that practically all their other demands have been granted since the strike began. These demands included better working conditions and a minimum daily wage of three dollars.

Some of the mine operators have declared that they would never recognize the Western Federation of Miners, although they do not question the right of their employees to organize. Several thousand men have been imported to fill the strikers' places and the companies will be hard pressed to find work for the returning strikers.

The strike has been attended by considerable violence and there has been some loss of life. The National Guard was ordered out in the early days of the strike to assist the civil authorities in preserving order. There has been no disorder of any consequence for several months.

Hoefle said the strike had cost the union more than one million dollars.

Houghton, Mich., April 15.—Charles H. Moyer and the 27 other officers and members of the Western Federation of Miners must stand trial under the indictment charging them with conspiracy in connection with their activities in the copper miners' strike.

Circuit Judge O'Brien on Monday denied a motion by attorneys for the defendants for a writ of abatement to quash the pending indictment.

Denver, Colo., April 15.—Charles H. Moyer president of the Western Federation of Miners, said:

"I do not believe an announcement of the future policy of the federation would be advisable at this time.

"I prefer to withhold action as soon as I receive official advices from our representatives in Michigan as to the outcome of Sunday's referendum."

GUNMAN CONFESSES

SLAYERS OF ROSENTHAL PAY PENALTY FOR CRIME IN SING SING PRIGON.

LAST PLEA DENIED BY GOFF

Murders Are Laid to Instrument of Death Once Known as "Dago Frank" Being the First One to Be Electrocuted.

Albany, N. Y., April 15.—A few minutes before the execution of "Dago Frank" Cirofici, who was the first of the four gunmen to go to the death chair in Sing Sing prison, he told Warden Clancy that "Gyp the Blood" Horowitz, "Lefty Louie" Rosenberg and Harry Vallon an informer, fired the shots which killed Herman Rosenthal, that for which crime the four gunmen paid their lives.

"I do so I know," Decker had nothing to do with this case," the gunman also declared. "It was a crime we fight." Cirofici averred he was five miles away at the time the murder was committed, and that "Whitey Lewis" Seidenshner, although present at the scene of the shooting did not fire any of the shots.

Ossining, N. Y., April 14.—Without making any confession, the four young New York gunmen, condemned for the murder of Herman Rosenthal, were electrocuted in Sing Sing prison Monday morning.

The victims and the time of their execution were as follows:

Frank Cirofici, alias "Dago Frank," 5:38 to 5:46.

Louis Seidenschner, alias "Frank Muller" and "Whitey Lewis," 5:48 to 5:56.

Harry Horowitz, alias "Gyp the Blood," 5:57 to 6:05.

Lewis Rosenberg, alias "Lefty Louie," 6:06 to 6:17.

Cirofici was the only member of the quartet to make a statement after being seated in the death chair he began to deny his guilt but the electric current was turned on in the middle of his speech and he died with the words upon his lips.

The quadruple execution passed off without a hitch, all the condemned men being escorted up with the spiritual consolation which was administered continually during the waning hours of their lives. Cirofici went to the chair with a crucifix in each hand shouting prayers and chanting over and over again: "God have mercy!"

Rev. Mary Cirofici, mother of "Dago Frank," who has led the fight in behalf of her son and the other condemned men, arrived at the prison a few hours before the execution, after having waited in the executive office for 35 minutes while that heroic plea to Governor Glynn at Albany for executive clemency.

Sing Sing, April 14.—The last hope of the four gunmen was blasted late yesterday when Judge Lyons of New York Supreme Court, denied a writ of habeas corpus.

The four products of the Manhattan East side, who for years have made their crime Monday, were convicted on November 13, 1912, of firing the shots which killed Herman Rosenthal as he stepped from the Hotel Metropole into Broadway street.

Rosenthal had caused the gambling world of the Metropolis to quake with terror by his conference with the district attorney, Charles S. Whitman. His promised confessions were a sequel to a gambling war, in which the underworld interests had attempted to drive him from the fat field of the upper tenderloin. Bomb outrages, slaying and assaults had marked this conflict. Believing he was to be deserted by Chief Becker police lieutenant in charge of a squad of detectives and a partner in the Rosenthal gambling house, the desperate man was induced to turn state's evidence against the whole illegal conspiracy of police and crime.

The fatal moment was sitting in the Metropole about two o'clock in the morning of July 16, 1912, when a man stepped into the motor car. A fifth man was waiting in the shadows. Leaning in the shadows were "Bridgey" Webber and "Jack" Rose and Harry Vallon. Near by stood a motor car with engine running. Rosenthal was supposed to be on station near by had been lured away.

In the glare of bright lights and within 100 feet of Times square four young men shot Rosenthal to death and leaped into the motor car. A fifth man was waiting in an auto to some, and urged the driver onward by holding a revolver to his head and striking him. The car proceeded in the direction of Fifth avenue.

GIANT SNAKE NOT A MYTH

South American Traveler Has Absolute Proof of Existence of Much-Discussed Reptile.

Algot Lange, the South American traveler, recently aroused considerable discussion on both sides of the ocean concerning his claim to having killed a monster snake—the sort of reptile of our childhood acceptance, big enough to swallow and comfortably digest a Yorkshire draft horse. Many men qualified by wild outdoor experience and by careful zoological study took sides with and against him, but there still remained a strain on the credulity of the average reader.

Nevertheless the prize log snake of the Philippines does much to support Mr. Lange's Amazonian narrative. It was killed twelve years ago, forty miles north of Zamboanga, by two American prospectors, named Bell and Newman.

The skin was displayed for a time in the Tarik building in Manila and attracted a good deal of attention. It was about 30 feet in length, but Mr. Wickersham, who brought it from Manila, says that when the animal skinned it was stretched to 36 feet 6 inches.

PIMPLES ALL OVER FACE

1413 E. Genesee Ave., Saginaw, Mich.—"My face was all covered with pimples; one of a very bad disease of the face without leaving a scar. Pimples on the face, small and large. They festered and came to a head. They were very painful and caused me to scratch them and make sores. They spread and were good for a night. I was restless from itching. When the barber would shave me the sores bled terribly. Then scabs would form afterwards. I had been troubled with the so-called seed warts would come back again. They were on my face about nine months and the trouble caused disfigurement while it lasted.

"One day I read in the paper of the Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I received a free sample of Cuticura Soap and Ointment and was so much better that I bought a cake of Cuticura Soap and a box of Cuticura Ointment and in three days I noticed a change for the better. I used both according to directions. In about ten days my face began to heal up. My face is now clear of the warts and not a scar to show." (signed) Leroy Boehmer, Mar. 12, 1912.

Yet if the snow is melted it is a most refreshing beverage. Nevertheless, although, if melted before entering the mouth, it assuages thirst like other water, when melted in the mouth it has the opposite effect. The reader (his parsdon more striking, we have only to remember that the snow, before it reaches the mouth, is very efficient in allaying thirst.

Aviate' Copyright.

A legal measure of vital importance to aviators and which as law exists in no country, is now before the senate patents committee and has been reported favorably upon by the committee on patents of the chamber. This measure institutes a copyright for artists, painters, sculptors and engravers, such as is enjoyed by writers and musicians. The bill gives a royalty on all public sales of works of art for the lifetime of the artist, for his benefit, or for 50 years after his death, for the benefit of his heirs.

UPWARD START

After Changing from Coffee to Postum.

Many a talented person is kept back because of the interference of coffee with the nourishment of the body. This is especially true with those whose nerves are very sensitive, as is often the case with talented people. There is a simple, easy way to get rid of coffee troubles and a Texas lady's experience along these lines is worth considering. She says:

"Almost from the beginning of the use of Postum I knew something. It was the time I was fifteen I was ravenous, a nervous wreck, nervous prostrated, and sought to endure the most trivial things, either work or fun.

"I knew was scarcely anything I could eat that agreed with me. I was a fine cook. I did eat seemed to give me more trouble than good. I was so weak I could not sit up long, at times.

"It was then I tried Postum. It was a hot cup of Postum. I felt as though I had had something to eat—felt satisfied. That was about five years ago, and after quitting gradually getting stronger, today I eat anything I want, and digest it. Coffee disagrees with me, and I do not touch it.

"Postum has been my stay and I can say as good and gave me the strength to start, and Postum did it. I also gather now instead of 95 pounds, I now weigh 125 pounds."

BIG RANCHES BECOMING COMMON IN NORTHEASTERN MICHIGAN

By H. J. DANIELS.

Big ranches are becoming more and more common in northeastern Michigan. Hundreds of thousands of acres, comprising hundreds of square miles, in the counties of Roscommon, Ogemaw, Montmorenci, Crawford, Arenac, Oscoda and Alcona are being developed along the big unit idea adopted from the West. It is the application of the "back to the farm" movement, the conversion of farming into a business, and is big business.

Near Houghton Lake, N. Michelson, an extensive lumberman, has an 8,000 acre farm where by grasses several thousand head of sheep and cattle every year. Six hundred acres of this ranch are under cultivation.

F. C. Poppleton's 6,000 acre farm adjoins that of Michelson, on the south shore of the big lake. This is a new ranch and is being inclosed with woven-wire fence. A mammoth barn was erected last season. Several thousand cattle, sheep and hogs will roam over most of that area the coming season.

Another large ranch in the Mikado-Ione ranch, also bordering on Houghton lake, it consists of 19,000 acres and is owned by Dr. Albert Thomas of Chicago. This ranch is also inclosed in a fence to keep cattle from the surrounding territory. The chamber of commerce will act as a clearing house between farmers who have seed for sale and farmers who want to buy it. Great care will be taken in the matter of seed potatoes. Many of the old corn so that a brand new start may be made this year, of all within these years the country will be well stocked in the matter of good seed potatoes, by the leading corn growing county in the state.

Want Separate State.

Lansing, April 14.—Short course at the Menominee County Agricultural school, the question of whether Cloverland should become a separate state was again debated. The immediate possibility of a move in that direction is not bright, but it is believed that eventually the northeastern state will be separated from lower Michigan.

Roger M. Andrews, who was publisher of the Menominee Leader before he located in Los Angeles, Cal., was the originator of a plan for Cloverland to form the "state of Superior."

The idea received much popular support, but the matter was never taken up in an official way. Near Cloverland's development has been greatly hampered because of its geographical isolation from the balance of the state as not to be dreamed. The natural channels of trade and communion with the world are through Wisconsin rather than through the lower peninsula.

Potatoes in Antrim.

Better than three hundred bushels of potatoes can be grown to the acre in Antrim county, and has been done for a number of years. One of the most recent to prove that assertion was Henry De Vries of Central Lake, who is but thirteen years old. Under the direction of his school teacher, Henry laid out, planted and cared for a totate field covering one-eighth of an acre. He harvested 38 bushels of 18 pounds. Better than 37 bushels of good potatoes were marketed and all the prevailing price were worth $18.95. The expense of producing the crop was $5.15, and the profit was $13.80, and the profits would have been $70.84, which is a greater sum than the cost of good land in the Antrim section of western Michigan.

Holstein Breeders Meet.

The breeders of Holsteins in Chippewa county have not only brought their herds up to a high state of efficiency, but they have organized so that a concerted effort to further their success may be attained. Recently at Sault Ste. Marie a mass meeting of Holstein breeders was held, officers were elected and the following name was adopted, "The Chippewa County Cow Club—Holsteins Only." The men

LACK OF BEETS CLOSES BIG FACTORY IN CHARLEVOIX

Best Sugar Factory at Charlevoix.

Things are in hard lines when a sugar company has to abandon a plant that cost upwards of half a million dollars. Yet that had to be done in Charlevoix county, and not because there is no money in beet sugar. The farmers could not be induced to furnish beets in large enough quantities to make the running of the plant a paying proposition. The farmers of Charlevoix county and the adjoining counties are doing not a little thinking and their growing to be willing to do the harder work of raising sugar beets. Too, the beet sugar factory is being sold but faster than almost any other crop that can be grown in the north.

WANT BETTER GRADE OF WHEAT RAISED

PROFESSOR DECLARES MICHIGAN IN PRODUCING ABOUT HALF AS MUCH AS IT SHOULD.

FRANK SPRAGG ADDRESSES

Average Yield of Eighteen Bushels an Acre in This State Too Low—Fanning Mills Not Used to Best Advantage.

Lansing—In the twenty-sixth annual report of the Michigan agricultural college experiment station, a part of the fifty-second annual report of the secretary of the state board of agriculture, Prof. Frank S. Spragg, of the seed improvement department, takes the Michigan farmer to task for not raising more wheat and for not sowing pure varieties.

Professor Spragg also declares that the Michigan farmer does not use the fanning mill to the best advantage in cleaning grain.

"Michigan is producing about half as much wheat per acre as she should," says Professor Spragg. "The average yield of wheat in Michigan for 1910 and 1911 was 18 bushels an acre. No doubt many of the best yields that cut down the state's average come from a class of careless farmers who continue to plant year by year any kind of wheat they may happen to have."

1,254 New Shops in This State.

According to figures compiled by State Commissioner James Cunningham, 1,254 new factories were added to Michigan's industries last year.

In 1912 there were 16,580 in Michigan and 17,822 establishments were canvassed last year. The total number of employees canvassed last year was 477,552, an increase of 2,072 over 1912.

In 1912 the labor department reported that 300,278 men were employed at general factory work. Last year the factories gave employment to 302,802, a decrease of 1,476. However, the average daily wage of the factory men was higher in 1913 than during the previous year. The average last year was $2.47 a day as compared to $2.37 in 1912.

Michigan factories gave employment to 12,764 superintendents and 13,065 foremen last year. The average daily wage of the superintendents was $6.32 while the average daily wage of the foremen was $3.77. Superintendents are born about that 48,664 women were employed at general factory work last year, an increase of 1,129 over 1912. The average daily wage of the women factory workers was $1.33, an increase of 1 cent a day over 1912.

Of the 1,254 new shops between the sizes of fourteen and sixteen, were employed.

M. A. C. May Urge Rural Engineering.

The proposal to establish a department for the difficulty with the Michigan Agricultural college engineering department has been taken to East Lansing in the form of an amendment to the Kansas State Agricultural college, where the auditorium has just settled similar controversy by adding courses in agricultural engineering and highway engineering, and attaching the engineering division at the agricultural college rather than the engineering department of fundamental courses in engineering.

According to college officials here efforts to link the engineering courses at the Michigan Agricultural college and the University of Michigan into department at Ann Arbor find possibility to cause some other courses, which is now duplicated, to East Lansing, are not aimed at the point of the proposed new department. No floating of the bond contract is altered, they contend, this can never be brought about, for the state colleges is required by the federal government to provide courses in agriculture and mechanical arts which are on a par.

At North Dakota a commission appointed two years ago reported in favor of maintaining engineering courses in both institutions.

The State University of Iowa, the Iowa State college, and the Iowa State Teachers' college were placed recently under control of a single board known as the state board of education. In 1913 the board passed a resolution abolishing engineering at the state university and domestic science at the state college, but the action caused so much hostility among the friends of the institutions that the board rescind its action.

At South Dakota the question of avoidance of duplication has been, but is no longer, alive. On the contrary, the establishment of engineering courses at the School of Mines is being considered.

Favor Old Highway System.

Auditor General Fuller is receiving numerous inquiries from township relative to property owners working out half of their highway tax. It appeared that in 1907 the state was allowed because to work out one-half of the highway tax, but the law was repealed the same year. It is maintained that, as a result, better roads were built. The last legislature passed a law authorizing townships by a referendum vote to return to the old system, and it appears several have voted to return.

Heads New Sale Barn.

Joseph Cook, who has been in charge of the Oak Park sale barn in North Howell, owned by the Michigan Farms company, has been appointed head farmer at the new state farm for epileptics at Caro by the board of control of that institution.

Mr. Cook is a man with a good executive ability and has made a good record while he has had charge of Oak Dale farm. He has built up the Howell herd there to "top notch."

Debt of Michigan Is Low.

Preliminary figures from the forthcoming bulletin pertaining to national and state indebtedness and funds and investments have been given out by Director W. J. Harris, of the bureau of the census, department of commerce, at Washington.

The bulletin carries information for Michigan, as well as for the United States and the United States. The data was compiled under the supervision of John Lee Coulter, expert special agent in charge of the inquiry on wealth, debt and taxation.

The bulletin, which will soon be issued, will contain statistics for each state for each year from 1890 to 1913, inclusive, as far as statistics are available, and will also contain details for the year most nearly corresponding to 1890, thus making it possible to show the general movement during a period of more than thirty years.

An inspection of the tables for Michigan, in the bulletin soon to be issued, shows a small fluctuating bonded indebtedness which increased from $11,000 in 1891 to $11,000 in 1893, but decreased to $8,000 in 1894 and disappeared altogether in 1896. The special debt obligations to public trust funds increasing steadily from $5,416,000 in 1891 to $6,000,000 in 1913, and constituted by far the largest part of the total state debt. No floating debt was recorded until 1905, the $6,000 reported for the year increased to $473,000 in 1909, but fell to $153,000 in 1913. In the case of funds and investments the securities were the same as the special debt obligations to public trust funds. The total increased greatly from year to year, the largest amount recorded was $11,772,000 in 1913, though the actual increase was from $1,235,000 in 1891 to $9,268,000 in 1913.

Although the debt of the state increased steadily during the period between 1891 and 1913 the population increased sufficiently to reduce the per capita indebtedness.

In 1890 the total debt of Michigan at the close of the fiscal year, June 30, was $4,462,000; in 1891 it was $5,428,000; in 1913 it had advanced to $9,000,000, the greatest amount appearing in the bonds and floating debt. Population of the state increased from 1,637,000 in 1890 to 2,937,000 in 1913, being sufficient to offset the bond increase, which is a decrease in the per capita debt. However, in 1889, the state had no due employees, no sinking fund assets, and none the following year to pay off maturing bonds; this fund reduced the debt (less sinking fund assets) temporarily and caused a correspondingly low per capita debt for 1890.

By reason of this situation, in 1890 the per capita debt of $1.95 when compared with $.31 in 1912 would indicate an increased indebtedness during the 30-year period. In order to present the true movement of the state debt it will be necessary to deduct of consumption to use the per capita debt for 1891 and 1912, $2.55 and $2.11.

In contrast with the state of Michigan was that the state of Kansas, debt (less sinking fund assets) for the 1913 and the per capita debt amounting to the latest report to $1.52, or $1.11 more than the per capita debt of Michigan.

At the present time about three per cent of the total population of the United States will be found in the state of Michigan, and 2.1 per cent of the total debt (less sinking fund assets) is attributed to that state.

Plan Three Camps for M. N. G.

Adjt Gen. R. C. Vaughan says there will be three regimental camps for the militia of the Michigan National Guard this year. The second regiment, U. P. infantry, will perform its camp duties at Gaylord, the cavalry, C. A. engineers, and the field hospital corps will be at the state camp site of Grayling from August 10 to Aug. 23.

The Third Infantry, ambulance company No. 2 and Co. 3, signal corps, will be at the state camp site from Aug. 2 to Aug. 16. The fourth regiment (first battalion), field artillery, and ambulance company No. 1 will be at Fort Brady.

The work was divided into three camps this year because regular army officers, who act as instructors, are hard to obtain, and the time is to receive more individual attention, it is claimed, by the members of the state military board.

10,000,000 Bushels of Tubers Needed.

According to Michigan potato experts, Michigan is facing the big problem of supplying upward of 10,000,000 more bushels of potatoes this year than were on hand last season. In 1912 the state potato exchange, working with the Michigan Potato Growers' association, by urging all school crop clubs to raise potatoes, the year and when the national potato show is held in Lansing next December the state will enter into competition with the rest of the country.

The value of the state potato crop in 1913 was $15,000,000.

The 250,000 acres under cultivation produced a little more than 2,000,000 bushels.

REX BEACH, AN ANTRIM CO. BOY

Famous Novelist---Born at Atwood ---Big Money Paid for His Stories

(Detroit Free Press.)

Rex Beach, whose stories of the frigid north, some of which are soon to appear in the "Toron" have made him one of the most popular and best paid American novelists, can be claimed by Antrim county as her own, for Rex Fillyerson Beach, as he was christened, was born near the shores of Grand Traverse Bay at Atwood 39 years ago. It was on the first day of September, 1877, that Rex Beach first saw the light of day, and since that time the years have been filled with the most varied of activities for him. Although it was not for long that Rex Beach was a resident of Atwood and dwelt among the people of this section of the state, yet the fact that he had met with wonderful success in the literary field and claims this country as his birthplace causes the people of Antrim county to be proud of him and feel an especial interest in his work and attainments.

Rex Beach a youth was spent in semi-tropical Florida, and he was educated in Stetson college in that state. At the age of 19 he went to Chicago to study law but the legal profession did not agree to him and abandoned it to go to Alaska where he became a miner and prospector. He was a big, two fisted, hard fighting chap and he quickly won the respect of the hardy northern pioneers. From the first he proved to them that he was anything but a "tenderfoot" but was instead a full fledged "sourdough" as a term of expression go in that northern country.

On one occasion Beach staked out two claims near Dawson and proved to be among the richest along the Yukon, but he lost them before their value was realized. Career for the Rex Beach might never have written a line, but instead might have become a boxing minister.

It was necessity that spurred Rex Beach to his maiden literary effort. With Jack Kling, his first and firmest Alaska friend, he staked out a claim that was rich in prospects, but nothing more. With the coming of winter, he and Kling found themselves in Nome, stone broke. With starvation staring them in the face, Rex Beach hit upon a scheme to make some money. Going to the owner of the Nome Nugget, the stranded gold seekers proposed to write and stage a drama. The amusement "magnate" consented to put on the "drammer" on the percentage basis, and Rex Beach went to work. Within a few hours he had completed the play. Several barroom loafers, a number of Indians and the wife of the theatre manager make up the caste and two days were spent in rehearsals. Both Beach and Kling were members of the Arctic Brotherhood, and that lapsed into a big joke in the country. Every member of the company is an artist and their prop room is a treat for music lovers. The program presented by those famous singers includes melodies of the cotton field to the rarest gems from the classic opera. They have toured the United States and Europe during the last 10 years and appeared mostly in the larger towns. We are extremely fortunate in securing such talent.

Good Start For Racing.

When the racing season opens at Belmont park, New York, this spring, instead of the decorrupation that prevailed last year, it is likely that we shall see a good start in this classic will go on the port. Such are the indications from a glance over the list of sold bettings just made public by the Westchester Racing association. Anything approx of odds have been quoted in this pulls contest, including so many fast performers that there is no fear to fear that the list of past winners will lose in tone by the addition of this season's victor.

Joe Livingston, from Mass never likely to be top weight in the Metropolitan, but will be lately pressed by other turf stars which proved their worth last year. Harry Payne Whitney has minus six horses for the Metropolitan, five of which rived in England last year. Probably the best horse of the quintet, however, is a year-old son of Hamburg—Forget and Lady Leather to Dangerous, the winner of the Champagne stakes last year. In spite of the fact that the Whitney stable is so well supplied with other turf stars which proved their worth last year

SYNOPSIS.

John Valiant, a rich south Virginia gentleman, with his father Valiant corporation, which his father founded and which was the principal source of his wealth, and his widowed mother, lives with private tutors in the mansion on the family estate. He is a fine specimen of manhood, possessing most of the old manor virtues, giving the lie to the case whose crook nose pale delicate hand hold sting a clasp that somehow conveyed a sense of exasperate if semi-humorous resilience.

She looked up at Shirley's voice, and smiled brightly. "Off for your ride, dear?"

"Yes. I'm going with the Chal'mers."

"Oh, of course. Betty Page is visiting them, isn't she?"

Shirley nodded. "She came yesterday. I'll have to hurry, for I saw them from my window turning into the Red Road. She waved her hand and ran lightly down the stair and across the hall to the window.

She pulled a green apple from a bough that hung over a stone wall and with this her cheek she came close to the pasture fence and whistled a peculiar call. It was answered by a low whinny and a soft thud of hoofs. Presently a bulbous-headed nuzzle thrust a long nose over the bars, flaring flaccid nostrils to the tender of her hand. She laid her cheek against the white thoroughbred forehead and held the apple to the lips protruding her with several teasing withdrawings before she gave it to be juicy crunching.

She let down the top bar of the fence and vaulting over, ran to the stable and presently emerging with a saddle on her arm, whistled the horse to her and saddled him. Then opening the gate, she mounted and canter down the drive. Much of the morning riders—a kindly-faced, middle-aged man, a younger one with dark features and sunbleached hair, and two girls.

Chalmion Lank spurred in advance and lifted his hat. "I held up the procession," he said, "and made him brine me along. He tells me there's a fox hunt on tomorrow, may I accompany?"

"Phaw! Chilly," said the judge. "I don't believe you ever got up at five o'clock in your born days. You've learned bad habits abroad."

"You'll see," he answered. "If my man Friday doesn't rout me out to-morrow, I'll be up for murder."

They rode an hour, along stretches of sunny highways or on shade-dappled paths where the horses' hoofs fell muffled in brown pineneedles and drooping branches flicked their faces. Then by a murky way paved with brook pebbles, across shelving fields and "turn-rows" in a long detour around Powhatan Mountain, a rough spur in the shape of an Indian's head that wedged itself forbiddingly between the fields of spring corn and tobacco.

"Do let us get a drink," said Chilly Lank. "I'm as thirsty as a cotton-batting cause."

"All right, well stop," agreed the judge, "and you'll have a chance to see a real blue heron, Shirley. This is where Mad Anthony lives. You must have heard of him when you were here before. He's almost as celebrated as the Reverend John Jasper of Richmond."

The old negro nodded his head. "Good wutah," he said in the gentle quivering tones of extreme age. "Ya, Marse. He's yo'ses'. Come fom he cotah ob de yerf, dat wutah. Ev dah folks say de coutah of de yerf is all fah. Ye reck'n de's right, Marse Chahmahs?"

"Now, how the devil do you know who I am, Anthony?" The judge set down his cup on the well-curb. "I haven't been by here for a year."

The ebony head moved slowly from side to side. "Ol' Antay don' mind no ma'ks," he said, touching his hand to his brow. "He see ev'thing heah."

The judge beckoned to the others and they trooped inside the palings. "I've brought some other folks with me, Anthony; can you tell who they are?"

The eligitious look wavered over them and the white head shook slowly. "Dey know young mars," said the gentle voice. "How many yoddahs wif yo'?" One, two? No I don' know young yoddahs, eldah."

"I reckon you don't need any eyes," Judge Chalmers laughed, as he passed the sweet cold water to the rest. "Tell us these young ladies wants you to tell her fortune."

The old negro dropped his head, waving his gaunt hands restlessly. The judge beckoned to Betty Page, but she shook her head with a little grimace and drew back.

"Go on, honkie," she whispered, and with a laughing glance at the others, Shirley came and sat down on the lowest step.

Mad Anthony put out a wavering hand and touched the young body. His fingers strayed over the habit and went up to the curling brown under the hat-brim. "Da de li'l mistis," he muttered, "ain' afrahd ob ol' Antay. Dah's fah on de ahs' afrahd, en dah's wutah en de ahs' afrahd. Wondah what Ah gwine tell hah? What de colah ob yo hah, honey?"

Old Anthony's hand fell back to his knee. "Young mars' laugh at de ol man," he said, "but he don' know that de colah dat buhn mah hah's—de colah ob sol', en eyes like de eyes ob a child's ah big. Dah's en man gwine look in dem eyes, honey, en gwine make em cry fo' cry." He raised his head sharply, his lids shut tight, and swung his arm toward the North. "Dah's wuah he come from," he said, "en heah"—his arm veered and he pointed straight toward the ragged hill behind them—"he stay."

"Howdy Do, Anthony," He Said.

Lank inquired incidentally. "He's polishing to Damory Court," he whispered to Shirley Chalmers, "the only unblanketed place within ten miles. That's as near as he often hits it, I fear."

"Heah's whah he stay," repeated the old man. "Hemp en trouble wuk heah fo' de hosses, hemp en trouble wuk heah till mistis en him.

"Come, Anthony," said Judge Chalmers, laying his hand on the old man's shoulder. "That's much too mournful. Give her something nice to top off with, at least."

Old Anthony held no heed. "Great trouble. Dah's fish en she ah' afeahd, en dah's wutah en she ahs' afeahd. En ah see yo gwine tie him hoses. Ah heah's de co'ot-house clock sev'nthin' in de night—en yo' gwine. Dey' wait too' wah fo' mistis, en de troubleciloud gwine hush him ewway from yo' ha'ts." When the clock strike thirteen—when do clock strike thirteen—"

The droning voice ceased. The guest form became rigid. Then he started and turned his eyes slowly, about him, a vague look of anxiety on his face. For a moment no one moved. When he spoke again it was once more in his gentle quavering voice.

"Wahah? Yes, Marse, good wutah. He's yo'ses'."

The judge set a dollar bill on the step and weighted it with a stone, as the rest remounted. "Well, good-by, Anthony," he said. "We've nightily obliged."

He sprang into the saddle and the quartette cantered away. "My experiment wasn't a great success, I'm afraid, Shirley," he said ruefully.

"Oh, I think it was splendid," cried Nancy. "Do you suppose he really thinks those spooky things? I declare, at the time I almost did myself. What an odd idea—when the clock strikes thirteen," which, of course, it never does.

"Don't mind, Shirley," bantered Chilly Lank. "Ev'ry cock crows when coming sound the alarm and we'll try in body to your cousin."

They let their horses out for a pounding gallop which pulled down presently to a muffled strike from Betty Page, as her horse went into the air at sight of an automobile by the roadside.

"Now, whose under the canopy is that?" exclaimed Lank.

"It's stalled," said Shirley, as passed them by. "I'm afraid when the owner was trying to start it, and that Mr. Jefferson as first aid to the injured."

"I wonder who he can be," said Nancy, "I've never seen him before."

"Why," said Betty gally, "Ah know! It's Mad Anthony's troubleman, of course, come for Shirley."

CHAPTER VII.

Uncle Jefferson.

A red rose, with over a thing of beauty, is not invariably a joy forever. The white bulldog as he goddled along the sunny highway, was sunk in depression. Being transplanted by the Hallmarks from a country home he could not understand the wains of Chamble Ones met by the way, who seemed so glad to see him that they threw both arms about him, and then had to his neck 'kasome colored weeds that trickled and scratched—I would not be dislodged. So it was a chastened and shamed Chum who at length irrigated steadily into the seat of the stranded automobile beside his master and thrust a dirty pink nose into his palm.

John Valiant lifted his hand to stroke the shaggy head, then drew it back with an exclamation. A thorn had pricked his thumb. He looked down and saw the dragged flower thrust through the twist of grass. "A pup of wonders!" he exclaimed. "Where did you get that rose?"

Chum sat up and wagged his tail, for his master's tone, instead of ridicule, had a dawning delight. Perhaps the thing had not been intended as a disgrace after all.

With the first sight of the decorative Valiant had had a sudden memory of a spidery old man with silver-haired gray-blue eyes and a gentle quavering voice.

"Walah! Yes, Marse, good wutah. He's yo'ses'."
